and the name beneath it is La France. This is the France for which the world’s best soldiers fight, a nation symbolized by a woman’s face.

This, the Simple Life.

The "movies" are closed and the joke about the evening dishes being piled in the sink is temporarily out of order. All the patrons of the "movies" were not so slaveish to their lure as a woman who admitted hiding the remnants of supper in the stationary tubs with the lids down. The inexpensive film recreation has endeared itself to the common peoples, for it is the life of the world reproduced in motion. There has been a "get acquainted" quality to the "movies" that nothing heretofore has equaled in value, for it has been essentially human food for human minds. One-half of the world had always hankered to know how the other half lives. Along came the "movie," with "Behold! See what you have heard, read or imagined. I am a medium of education."

There are many non-believers in the "movies." Offsetting them are those people who have seen and believed and become even better informed in current happenings than such non-believers as minimize the value of the "movies." For informing quality there is about as much difference between the legitimate stage and the "movies" as between the door-stopper cat and a yawning pussy. The best argument for the "movies" is that the people like them. It is remembered that a busy physician in this city stopped long enough during office hours to comment, "What’s in this movie business, anyway? I used to think it was just a simple cinematograph show, but all my patrons talk ‘movies’!" There is no reason to connect that physician’s shortening his office hours with his conversion to the motion picture, but he found out that there is a certain fascination about seeing the other half of the world in action.

As the best sort of a dessert to the usual run of "movies" there came the pictures from the other side, convincing even skeptics that Yankee soldiers do laugh when going into battle and that Uncle Sam has a need for Liberty loans and 100 per cent. patriotism. In a manner that no actor or actress on the legitimate stage could imitate the "movies" told the story of war, brought tears and gladness, and cemented friendliness between the American people and their war comrades.

So, although the family dishes may be washed each night during a necessary closing of the "movies," there is a strong possibility that father, mother and children are looking toward that day safe from pestilence when optimism will again look from the film in the midst of ruin.

HERE IT IS—FORD'S GREATEST SERIAL PRODUCTION

So steeped in mystery it fascinates. A tangled thread of love, a startling series of amazing adventures, a double murder mystery, the famous Phil. Kelley, secret service man, an Egyptian Priestess, a widowed bride, an uncanny taloned hand—clean, dramatic, swift and captivating, unending novelties.

On its release fans will be asking—

Who stole "The Eye of the World"?
Who was Priestess Kah?
Was Robert Gale murdered for Money?
—or by his Bride?
—or by a rival?
—or by whom?
Did Dr. Phillips create a soulless creature who grew beyond his control?
Was it the possessor of the uncanny Taloned Hand?
How did Phil. Kelley escape from the Steel Room and the Fumes of Frightfulness?
Whose was the mysterious Hand that, coming from nowhere, clutched Betty's hair and drew her up, up, up to an unknown Fate?

WHOSE WAS THE FACE BEHIND THE MASK?

"THE SILENT MYSTERY" will create a sensation. It is far ahead of any serial ever produced in every ELEMENT OF SERIAL SUCCESS. It has advertising possibilities that will make an instant appeal to Exhibitors everywhere—and IT IS A FRANCIS FORD SERIAL—demanded by serial fans throughout the world.

INFLUENZA EPIDEMIC WORKING WEST

Boston Theatres Opening, While Chicago and Mid-West Close—Houses in San Francisco Capitulate, Making the Coast Practically Restricted in Amusements

THE "peak" of influenza's deplorable havoc seems to be passing west, as Boston, the first great center to be affected, opens its theatre doors after protracted darkness. Last week the first comforting word from the army camps originated in Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass., when it was declared that the epidemic was under control. It was in this camp that the disease first broke with appalling results.

Chicago kept its theatres open until Tuesday, October 15. San Francisco closed Saturday, October 19, leaving New York, of all the great centers of population, the only city unaffected by official orders. There was a report current that the New York houses would close Saturday night, October 19, at the finish of the Liberty Loan drive, but the theatres here are still open as we go to press, Tuesday, October 22.

The attendance at local theatres has been generally "off," save in the case of a few conspicuously popular dramatic attractions. The picture houses have been greatly affected, a marked falling off in business being noticed in moving picture houses of all types and classes.

Death's harvest in the ranks of picturedom has been conspicuous and appalling. Players of prominence have been stricken down; prominent exhibitors and members of their family have passed away, and the gloom that has overshadowed the industry has been made more intense by the ravages of the grim reaper.

The silver lining that has been thrown upon the cloud through the relief occasioned by an improved situation in New England promises to develop as the epidemic comes under more complete control in other sections of the country. The wave is passing Westward, but its progress is distressingly slow, while the ravages of the disease continues to take precious toll in the afflicted communities.

Boston Houses Open to Impatient Picturegoers

BOSTON motion picture houses opened Sunday night, October 21, after an enforced closing of three weeks due to the Spanish influenza epidemic. The reopening of the houses was marked with an unusual demonstration. Long before the opening hours long lines of patrons awaited the opening of the doors. The programs were greeted with more enthusiasm than has been manifested for many seasons.

New England motion picture managers predict one of the most prosperous seasons since the beginning of the World War as a result of the enforced three weeks' vacation. The closing of the houses left the amusement public with a keener appreciation of their accustomed entertainments than they had ever believed could be possible. The natural depression of continuous war talk and the great death toll of the epidemic, few families escaping without a death or a serious illness among some members of the family, and the reaction to normal conditions brought a tremendous upturn in patronage. It was largely due to this plus some amusement and entertainment furnished at the motion picture houses.

Most of the picture theatres observed one strict rule. Patrons who coughed or sneezed were requested to appear at the box office and get their money refunded and leave the theatre. The wide publicity given the health rules during the epidemic warning people to beware of persons who coughed or sneezed has aroused a very insistent demand from the public that coughers and sneezers remain away from places of public assembly. It is believed the worst result of the epidemic will be to make coughing and sneezing so unpopular that persons suffering from contagious colds will remain at home in the future.

Many Improvements Effected.

The three weeks enforced vacation of the picture theatres resulted in many improvements being made in the houses. In almost every case there has been a complete renovation of the local houses. In some cases better ventilation has been provided to meet the demand for well-aired houses. The closing also caused an early saving of fuel so that many houses will now be able to face the winter with better assurance of having fuel enough for the entire winter.

The reopening of the theatres brought a feast in the way of excellent film productions. Every house played a strong attraction. Big advertising marked the openings. All of the theatrical pages of the Saturday afternoon papers carried large spaces from the motion picture houses advertising the reopenings. The same was true of the Sunday papers.

In Eastern New England the reopening of the theatres was general. In the western part of New England the epidemic has about reached its height, so that the theatres and other places of amusement are still closed and will probably remain so for another week at least.

Although some theatre managers suffered heavy losses it is most generally recognized that the order closing the theatres and all other places of public gathering was a wise move on the part of the health authorities. It is now generally recognized that the drastic closing order resulted in a quicker termination of the epidemic than might otherwise have been the case. During the "peak" of the epidemic there was a daily average of 250 deaths in Boston alone. The total number of deaths exceeded 3,500. It is estimated there were 290,000 cases in Boston alone during the five weeks of the epidemic.

Philadelphia Employees Get Busy on Renovation

INDICATIONS that the motion picture business has been seriously affected on account of the closing order issued by Director Krusen, of Philadelphia, seems to be the consensus of opinion among leading exhibitors and exchanges of Philadelphia. The influenza epidemic up to the present writing shows no decrease in its daily toll of victims, and from the latest reports of the board of health and charities conditions appear to be too serious to announce a definite time for the reopening of the theatres. The general opinion seems to be that the closing order may probably be rescinded about October 26, and not before.

In the meanwhile theatre managers and exchange managers are putting their extra time to very good use. The finishing touches have been ordered by Frank W. Buhler, managing director of the Stanley theatres, to complete the beau-

Titifying of the Stanley, where the large lobby is undergoing expensive alterations. At the Family Theatre, Joseph Murphy, the manager, has been personally supervising many improvements. Owing to the scarcity of labor and the high cost of materials, Mr. Murphy put his entire staff of employees at work painting and overhauling the entire theatre. A four-foot base running along both sides of the lobby has been given special attention, and all electric light globes have been carefully looked over.

In the meanwhile repairmen also overhauled the radiator, the water tanks, and the iron work frame of the chairs and the radiators have all been reglued. The woodwork has been given special attention, and all electric light globes have been carefully looked over.

The managers have been compelled to lay off some of their help a great many will be given half pay, although very little work can be done. Only in very few theatres have the exchange managers decided to close entirely until the epidemic passes.

No Time Has Been Set for Baltimore’s Opening

T he influenza epidemic is still raging in Baltimore, and at the present writing there has been no definite time set for the reopening of the theatres. L. A. De Hoff, manager of the New Theatre, secretary of the Maryland Exhibitors’ League, is keeping in close touch with the situation, and daily information is being sent to all the city newspapers. The theatrical people of Baltimore, to let Washington know as soon as word from the health department comes to reopen.

Several managers are taking the opportunity while the closing order is in effect to give their theatres a complete renovation.

All the churches in Baltimore were ordered closed on October 13, and two prominent members of the clergy have disagreed with the mandate, but abided by it. The stores and saloons have been ordered open only until 9:30 a.m. and close at 4:30 p.m. It was the first time, as far as is known in the history of Baltimore, when the churches have all been closed.

According to statistics there were 533 deaths from influenza in Baltimore during the week of October 7.

The Fourth Liberty Loan has suffered greatly from the theatres being closed. During the first eight days of the campaign, the report from R. McBean, chairman of the speakers’ committee, showed that the various theatre houses, showed $1,098,650 had been subscribed through their efforts.

St. Louis Suffering Loss

ST. LOUIS picturedom has passed through its first week of closed houses, and it represents the influenza closing order has thrown hundreds out of work and spilled a loss in dollars and cents that already reaches well into the $150,000 mark, independent of a sum of perhaps half that size, representing the loss of the exchanges. How far the actual damage goes cannot be estimated, and there is at present no indication as to how long the ban will run. For the benefit of readers of World the St. Louis correspondent has gathered figures which represent what this exchange will have to lay out approximately and for which they will get no return. They are based on the first week’s closing order, which was from October 5-11. They do not represent lost business, but the approximate cost in “overhead” to the exchanges, all things figured in.

Joseph Mogler, president of Exhibitors Association of St. Louis, who represents the Cella interests in a string of the largest houses of the city, say that the loss each week to the exhibitors is $35,000, and the theatres are closed tight, and therefore with nothing coming in there is naturally a let-up in wages for every one connected with the trade.

St. Louis District Badly Affected.

In the district served by St. Louis also I have been able to estimate that of the 2,000 theatres there are 75 per cent., or 1,500, now closed. This district includes Southern Illinois, Indiana, Tennessee, Kentucky, Arkansas and Louisiana. In the states are included and not the larger cities; but the result of the epidemic may be estimated from the figures given.

In St. Louis alone there are eighty theatres with closed doors. This number of theatres will lose $150,000, as I have been told. The reader can figure for himself what the total loss to the district with its 1,500 closed theatres will be.

As to men out of employment as a result of the closing order, it might be pointed out that there are idle 2,400 ushers, 2,400 ticket sellers, 2,500 piano players, 150 other musicians and more than 100 operators.

In the exchanges a “stagger” plan of management has been initiated to help cut down expenses. The managers are being paid in kind, and the assistants have been laid off. The assistants take a vacation. The next week the managers “vacate,” while the assistants draw pay, and so on down the line.

The motive back of the closing spirit, however, both the exchanges and the exhibitors are trying to keep a stiff upper lip and a hope for the better. It is expected also that the temporary closing order will to some extent make up for the lost time and money.

Closed Atlanta Houses

Are Being Renovated

ATLANTA, Ga., October 15.

ALL THEATRES in Atlanta and an overwhelming majority of houses in the Southeast remained closed throughout the past week under emergency order to prevent the spread of influenza.

In Atlanta there was a rumor that the councilman ban on theatre operation might be lifted at the expiration of the week. A decision seems to be made on this matter.

In the spreading of the disease in this city is not considered as pronounced as in other localities the epidemic is still in force.

On Monday officials of the Atlanta Theatre Managers’ Association appeared before City Health Officer Kennedy and protested against what they considered discrimination, evidenced by the authorities in allowing all shows connected with a carnival company to operate at the intersection at the Southeastern Fair, which opened for a ten-day period last Saturday.

On Tuesday a committee representing the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce appeared before the public safety committee of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce and requested that body to transmit the local men’s protest to the city council.

The managers pointed out that local exhibitors had offered no opposition whatever to the drastic order shutting down at a time when they had accepted the subsequent losses without a murmur as a patriotic duty. They had expressed no objection to the conducting of the Southeastern Fair, although public gatherings of every nature had been prohibited, as the fair itself is an open-air proposition, given under the auspices of local civic bodies.

The managers, however, strenuously represented the unfairness in permitting tent shows and various other attractions under a roof to operate with existing conditions conducive to the spread of the epidemic to a far greater extent than in a modern theatre equipped with an efficient ventilating system.

As yet no formal action has followed the protest of the theatre managers’ association, but in any case the practical value of an alert, co-operative organization among local showmen has been emphatically demonstrated in advancing the interests of Atlanta exhibitors.

A practical cessation in the business of local exchanges has followed the general closing orders effective throughout the territory. The “flu” itself has played havoc with the various film organizations, and the exchanges have made operations difficult in any case.

A majority of Atlanta exhibitors have taken advantage of the enforced period of idleness to inaugurate renovating, repairing and remodeling work in their houses.

Louisville Shuts Down

Everything but Saloons

LOUISVILLE is indeed a dead place since all the theatres were closed, and all amusements stopped. The saloons, bars, and clubs, and the thirsty are still able to secure liquid refreshment. They represent about the only thing that is open, and having a home to many wants which prohibition will be during epidemic periods. The prominent hotels have moved every chair from their lobbies, so that cocktail warmers will have to stand at new fields for loitering. However, the crest of the epidemic appears to have reached. The death list is still heavy, but it is impossible to determine how heavy, as fewer cases are reported.

Louisville, Ky.
November 2, 1918

The health officer has thus far given no answer to inquiries of exhibitors and impatient theatre-goers as to when the houses will be permitted to reopen their doors. The epidemic which locally is showing signs of abatement and the maximum number of cases has apparently been reached is probable that the doors will open again within a week or ten days at most.

The managers of the local houses have always shown a willingness to cooperate with the city officials, and especially when the welfare of their patrons is concerned. Little complaint was heard from any quarter. Since Liberty Loan booths are being conducted on even the smallest sidesheline attractions, such as musical programs, boxing matches, etc., are being offered to attract and hold crowds while they are at the theatre, it is of the loan some wonder was expressed that the motion picture houses should be closed on account of the "flu" situation. Those who formerly spent their afternoons or evenings at the theatres now attend the free attractions at the Liberty Loan booths. If the closing order during disappointment to managers that in spite of the sacrifices, as well as their patrons, it helped the loan.

STAHLMAN.

Cincinnati Authorities Control the Situation

The prompt action of Cincinnati health authorities in ordering the closing of all places of public amusement has been as logical as it has been necessary. The epidemic conditions in the city have been severe, and the number of cases and of deaths has been small compared to those in other large cities. The theatres have not been idle, as well as film men, are cheerfully enduring a period of inactivity, which means a very heavy financial loss as well, as they desire to support fully the public welfare as indicated in their past generous efforts.

It is estimated that not less than 100,000 persons a day visit local theatres, and the loss in admissions, therefore, is not less than $10,000, but rather many thousands more. Moreover, employees thus forced into temporary idleness in many cases will lose their wages, as the exhibitors cannot afford to stand any more loss than they are compelled to, and the film exchanges are in much the same position, as they are totally without revenues during the period in which the theatres are closed. Another interesting point which has come up in this connection is the suggestion that while the enforced closing is on the whole wise, it would be to pay the rentals to the owners of these properties; but real estate men take the view that there is no chance for them to escape rents on the houses while the period of "heatless days" of last winter.
viciy has improved. The soldiers have also been forbidden to go to Seattle or Tacoma, where the theatres were closed during the first of the week.

Wires are coming in daily to the Seattle exchanges from exhibitors in all parts of the Pacific Northwest, instructing them to stop all shipment of film until further notice; that their town has been closed on account of the influenza, and that several shipments have already been dismissed, and it looks as if the managers would have to let their entire forces go if many more towns are taken from their active list.

All Iowa Picture Theatres Shut by Health Authorities

Because of Spanish influenza Iowa is officially closed as regards motion pictures and all other forms of public assembly as the result of a sweeping order that emanated from the office of the State Board of Health, after conference with the military authorities. This means that every picture theatre in the state, and to a large extent in the country the past week. He kept his seven road men in and paid them salaries for assorting and rearranging paper. The other local exchanges are not under such heavy conditions as the roadmen because they operate with smaller forces.

A. H. Blank and other large Iowa operators, who have been operating throughout the darkness, as it is their belief that state-wide quarantine will quickly wipe out the disease and that results will be better for all concerned than to have a third of the State open and the lid on the rest. Military authorities state that conditions at Camp Dodge are much better, although there have been a good many complaints from the source.

Indianapolis Continues Ban on Picture Theatres

Indianapolis, October 19. Hopes of motion picture exhibitors, film men and theatre managers of Indiana, for abatement of the State ban on shows and other forms of public assembly were further shattered this week when Dr. J. N. Hurty, secretary of the State Board of Health, issued an order authorizing the issuance of the ban for another week. The order effective this week did not expire Saturday night at midnight, as was first intended, but will continue through Oct. 26th.

"The situation in Indiana is too serious to take any chances by lifting the order too early, the board believes," said Dr. Hurty. "He added, however, that toward the latter part of next week some slight modifications may be made to apply to special parts of the State, where the peak has passed, if conditions warrant.

Statistics compiled by the assistant secretary of the board showed that while the epidemic is decreasing in the north half of the State, it is continuing to increase in the south half. It is estimated that there are approximately 50,000 cases.

The consensus of opinion among the exhibitors appears to be that the order will be beneficial to the exhibitors in the bigger business than is bound to come when the theatres reopen. They feel that the people will be craving so for their favorite amusement that they will rush wildly to the nearest motion picture theatre the minute it is opened.

New Brunswick Is Closed.

Closing down of theatres throughout New Brunswick is due to the fact that the health authorities of Fredericton have issued a health act passed through the legislature, which places them under Dr. Roberts appointed as the Minister of Public Health. Under his administration the epidemic of influenza was dealt with in a very strict manner and other places of amusement were general throughout the province.

In Nova Scotia the epidemic of influenza has appeared are quarantined, and this accounts for the fact that some of the theatres in the smaller centres are still operating.

Darkened houses are the rule all over New Brunswick. In Nova Scotia Wolfville, Kentville, Joggins Mines, Inverness and Port Morden are still open. Glad Bay is closed.

In St. John's theatres are taking this opportunity of making repairs and alterations. It is unfortunate the epidemic has broken out just after an unprecedentedly bad season for the theatrical men and just at the beginning of one of their best seasons. According to F. G. Spencer, in the Maritime Provinces sources, there are 350 theatres closed.

About twelve hundred employees are idle and ten film exchanges seriously affected.

Portland Precaution Closes Theatres.

Things have been very dull in the amusement line in Portland, Oregon, for the past two weeks owing to the influenza scare, and Thursday, October 10, the State Health Board ordered the closing of all theatres, dance halls, churches, schools, prohibited the holding of meetings of any nature and the congregation of crowds upon the streets. It was not because the disease had a hold on the city, but as a precautionary measure. At the time only one of the show houses, the closing was not unexpected.

Many towns in this territory had closed their houses. This has affected the film exchanges, and the rumor is about that a great curtailment of help will be the result. It will give the theatres an opportunity to meet the demand.

The managers are allowing those laid off enough money for actual expenses so that there will be no very bad effects.

California Closes Down.

San Francisco, October 18. The San Francisco Board of Health today closed theatres, churches, schools, and all places of public meeting on account of the influenza, commencing immediate action.

The state board of health met later and ordered theatres throughout the state closed.

By proclamation of the State officials about two hundred theatres served by San Francisco exchanges had closed on account of local orders. Three weeks were considered necessary in obliteration of disease.

Church.

Everything Closed in Spokane.

On Wednesday, October 9, every moving picture theatre, other theatres and all other places of amusement and churches of Spokane were closed by an order of the local board of health directed to the public in the epidemic of influenza, and they will remain closed for at least two weeks.

All theatres, as well as moving picture, employees were given forced furlough as a result of the order, but no complaints appeared to be registered, as all were willing to co-operate with the department as a war measure. The schools were also closed.

Dallas Territory Paralyzed.

Spanish influenza, which it was hoped the Southern territory could escape, became epidemic in the states of Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas during the second week in October. The moving picture industry in these three states is completely paralyzed.

By proclamation of the governor every theatre in the state of Arkansas closed the doors during the first week of the month. A few days later a similar proclamation closed all Oklahoma theatres.

What little business still remains in the Southwestern territory is from scattered theatres in the smaller Texas towns. Of upward of 900 theatres in the three states served by Dallas film exchanges only about 300 remained open on October 14. These are closing one by one, and on the date mentioned no relief seemed to be in sight. State authorities of Texas, Arkansas, and Oklahoma have not yet made any showing the strictest of quarantine, municipal authorities generally have been quick to act in conjunction with military commanders.

Commencing the third week in October, Waco, Fort Worth and San Antonio were the only three large towns in the district where the picture shows were open. Each of these is a cantonment city, and all of the soldiers are forbidden to attend theatres. Consequently the exhibitors are having a hard time getting what little business they did have expected to close at any moment.

Western New York Shut Tight.

Every moving picture theatre in Buffalo has been closed on account of the Spanish influenza. All other amusement places are obeying the same ruling, which has been issued by the municipal department. The same order has been extended to many cities and towns throughout Western New York. Even before the closing rule was issued the downtown moving picture theatres were forced to close by orders of the city wide street car strike, which checked the flow of thousands of dollars into the box offices. Even if the houses are
PNEUMONIA CLAIMS HAROLD LOCKWOOD

Leading Metro Player Succumbs After Illness of Few Days—Had Been Eight Years on Screen

HAROLD LOCKWOOD, leading player of the Metro company, died at noon Saturday, October 19, at his apartments in the Hotel Woodward, New York City. Mr. Lockwood's illness was of brief duration, he having been present at the Motion Picture Exhibition at Madison Square Garden and active in Liberty Loan work the week before, but pneumonia quickly developed under the management of Fred Balshofer in 1916, which continued up to the time of his death.

With the exception of a very brief experience in vaudeville the deceased has never appeared before the public except in motion pictures and was one of the best examples of the successful motion picture star. He made a host of friends in his brief career who will sincerely mourn his loss.

General's Baltimore Chief

Is A Victim of Influenza

The motion picture industry in the territory of the national capital is mourning the loss of John Wellman, one of its most promising members, who was the first victim of Spanish influenza among the men of Washington. Recently appointed manager of the sub-branch of the General Manager Company in Baltimore, he was just about to enter a field that he had long looked forward to.

Mr. Wellman was born in Norway about twenty-six years ago. He came to the United States in April, 1914, and some time later joined the General Film Company in New York City. He was a member of the bookkeeping and auditing department, and when he came to Washington in January, 1917, it was as branch cashier.

Indoor work did not particularly appeal to him; but he was an expert in his work and that held him going into the field until a few weeks ago, when it was decided that he should go to the Baltimore office as soon as a new cashier could be broken into the work in the Washington office. About ten days before his death he was stricken with the dread disease. Efforts were made to procure the services of a trained nurse, but with the influenza rapidly spreading in the city, this was impossible, and John Payette, former assistant and present manager of the Film Company here, now a soldier in the army, volunteered to look after him. For six days and six nights Mr. Payette stayed on the job. As a last resort Mr. Wellman was rushed to the Emergency hospital, but to no avail.

Mr. Wellman was popular with the men of the Washington exchanges, and as he had no living relatives either here or abroad, they took entire charge of his burial. Jake Flax, manager of the General, and Sam Flax, manager of the Metro exchanges, assisted Mr. Payette.

BALLYHOOING LIBERTY BOND SALE

Men and Women of Speaking Stage Have Nothing On Those From Screen in Coaxing Out the Dollars

"Touchin' On Work of Those Pals Doug, Bill and Bill"

By Edward Weitzel

was equally successful. The familiar figure in the loud shirt and high boots caught the crowd instantly and gave it no excuse for trying to connect a correctly dressed, everyday-looking individual with the two-gun man of the Golden West. He was right there before everyone. All the crowd had to do was to listen to Bill Hart's speech and the appeal for buyers to speed up the Liberty Loan.

The touch of the ballyhoo did its share of the work.

William Farnum Mobbed by Bond Buyers

William Farnum's wife stood and looked on last Saturday afternoon and laughed heartily while her husband was mobbed in Gimbel Brothers' store.

The Farnums were in a mining crowd of women and girls, who cut off any chance of escape while they insisted on shaking hands with the man whose screen creations they had witnessed.

"Please shake hands with me Mr. Farnum?" was heard on all sides of him. And this other Bill did his best to comply with the request.

The incident took place on the platform in the big Sixth avenue store. Emma Dunn and other uninitiating workers from the stage had the chance to mix with the crowd of women.

Mrs. Farnum's Generous Act

"How much am I offered for this silver cup?" asked William Farnum during the drive at Gimbel's. "It has been donated," he explained, "by the mother of two American soldiers overseas in France. She is here now and has given an article she prizes greatly as her contribution to the loan. What do I hear you, five hundred dollars," spoke up a lady on the right of the platform.

William Farnum turned to the bidder with a delighted smile and made her the highest bid.

"Thank you, Mrs. Farnum!" he said.

The crowd joined in a hearty laugh at his expense. But Bill was game. He started to find bidders again, this time half as though he didn't care how he made her spend money, and when the cup was finally knocked down to her the Farnum back account was short another one thousand dollars.

This was the last sale of the afternoon. As William Farnum finished thanking his audience his wife handed the cup to one of the league committee, with a message to the Fox star. This is what the actor old his hearers:

"I am sure you will all be as pleased as I when you learn that Mrs. Farnum has decided to give back the cup to the mother of the two soldiers in France."

Barking for the Loan.

No Consey Island Barker or side show booster ever gave evidence of a better knowledge of the inside workings of the ballyhoo than that displayed by the Professional Woman's League and other branches of the amusement business that have been working for the different Liberty Loans. "Keep them off five Avenue, Liberty Loan minute!" was the motto of the workers.

Led by Ray Cox, who never lost an opportunity to win a smile or a laugh from the crowd, the women of the League and their men assistants from the stage and screen and other professions kept a string of buyers moving around to the booth at the back of the Fifth Avenue Liberty Theater with the skill of the trained showman.

A short speech, a song or a funny story by some well known actor or actress, would be quickly followed by a new drive that was handled so adroitly the crowd reveled every encouragement to step up and buy. The moment one form of ballyhooing let the buying lag it was discarded for another.

Many hundreds of dollars would never have been secured without the use of the good old bit of showmanship known as the ballyhoo.

DOUG MAKES FLYING TRIP TO GOTHAM

Cones off From Washington in Mail Acropole, Sells Bunch of Liberty Bonds and Gels Away

Washington, October 18.

AFTER collecting six million dollars in New York City within forty-eight hours, Acroplane's famous star arrived back in Washington via the acropole mail route this afternoon shortly before 5 o'clock, making a return trip in two hours and forty minutes.

Immediately after landing the energetic Doug rushed to the Treasury Department. Here in front of the building thousands jammed about the stand awaiting the appearance of the player. Fighting his way through the crowd, Doug climbed up the side of the Acroplane and handed Secretary McAdoo the envelope containing the subscriptions for $6,000,000 worth of Liberty Bonds from New York.

When Mr. McAdoo announced the amount of subscriptions obtained by the Air craft star, the crowd broke forth in a wonderful ovation. In thanking Doug for his splendid work, the Secretary of the Treasury paid him, as well as the motion picture industry in general, high tribute for the co-operation given the Government. Mr. Mcdoo expressed his pleasure at the opportunity of publicly acknowledging his sincere appreciation of all the motion picture industry has done to help win the war. That his remarks in this connexion were fully appreciated by the thousands of spectators was evidenced by the storm of applause which followed.

After a typical Fairbanks speech, in which Doug had the crowd giving college yells under his leadership for the President, Mr. McDoo and other Government officials were called upon for additional subscriptions. Mr. Mcdoo then instructed the crowd in a "yell" for Doug, which was given with a will. Douglas Fairbanks, Douglas Fairbanks, Douglas Fairbanks! Fighter!
Fighter! Fighter! yelled the crowd, in perfect unison, as Doug stood on his hands by way of appreciation.

Fairbanks made the aeroplane trip to New York from Washington in order to match Barney Baruch's subscription for a million dollars. Doug got his million from the Fifth Avenue Hotel, where he was met by officials, and "-Sahm" for $1,000,000; Bankers Trust Co. for $250,000; Kidder Peabody & Co., $250,000; Guaranty Trust Co., $250,
000; Manufacturers Trust Co., $250, 000; and others. Large subscriptions were received and then Doug started his "parade," up Broadway headed by the police band.
This was probably the biggest parade ever witnessed, for Doug was the whole parade. On his way uptown, the player made many stops to receive big subscriptions. At Williams' drug store on Fifth Avenue and continued his merry way up the broad street, breaking up all trafffic and making the thousands who lined the street for their pictures.

At 6 o'clock he quit in front of the Hiramman Bank, at Forty-fourth street and Fifth Avenue, where he finished the day with a record breaking act. These large subscriptions.
On Friday morning he started back for the Belmont Aviation field to fly back to Washington with six million dollars. In Douglas Fairbanks' party to New York and Washington were John Fairbanks and Ted Reed, of the Fairbars Company, and Pete Smith, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Zukor Day Yields Over Half Million for Loan

With total subscriptions of $318,700, contributed through the organization of the Famous Players- Lasky Corporation, Zukor Day, Tuesday, October 15, at the Liberty Theatre of the Stage Women's War Relief at the Public Library, raised the day's receipts to $84,051, in figures yet attained in the Fourth Liberty Loan drive. The figures, given out by Ray Cox, secretary of the Stage Woman's War Relief, were $84,051 for the day and not only did this set a record in the point of the amount subscribed, but also in the number of subscribers, for no less than forty-five d滴 subscriptions were listed for the $229,750, which represented the amount received over and above the Famous Players-Lasky contribution.

Zukor's efforts were due no small measure to the efforts of William S.
Hart, Elsie Ferguson and James Montgomery Flagg, who were present and issued their appeals to those of Alex Corbin, picture publishers, and the other speakers of the day.

In addition to the amount credited Zukor Day the Famous Players- Lasky Corporation, said to be, to the credit loan, to be credited to the various exchange centers of the organization throughout the country, making the loan total $84,051; also $3,550 was subscribed by the employees of the Fort Lee studio, to be credited to Fort Lee, N. J., and $3,750 pledged by the employees of the Studio and the Fifty-Sixth Street studio since Zukor Day to the credit of the organization, making a grand total of $88,351.

Of this amount $100,000 was subscribed by Charles O. Baumann, who had the pleasure of being in the Famous Players-Lasky office Tuesday and expressed his desire to have his subscription listed to the credit of Zukor Day.

Individual subscriptions were as follows: Adolph Zukor, $25,000; Jesse L. Lasky, $20,000; Arthur S. Friend, $20,000; Emilie E. Shaver, $15,000; Daniel Frohman, $10,000; Blanche Lasky, $12,000; Hiram Abrams, $10,000; J. C. Graham, $2,000;
E. L. R. Cohn, $2,500; Fleck J. Ludwich,
$1,000; Walter E. Greene, $1,000; Charles
O. Baumann, $100,000; Aphabet studios,
$2,050; employees of home office and New York branch, $14,000; employees of Fifty-sixth Street studio, $7,400; employees of Fort Lee studio, $3,550; Famous Players Lasky Corporation, $150,000.

William Farnum Hangs Up
$33,000,000 in Bond Sale

THIRTY-THREE millions of dollars in Liberty Bonds! That was the way William Farnum did his bit for Uncle Sam during the Fourth Liberty Loan drive. When the drive reached its close it was generally conceded that his record ranked among the highest of the most successful of Liberty Loan salesmen.

During the two weeks of his campaigning in New York City, Mr. Farnum made ten appearances. In one night at Carnegie Hall, with former President William Howard Taft, he sold $32,000,000 worth of bonds. It is estimated that he spoke in all before 60,000 persons, and it has been figured that during the whole time he was actually selling bonds he disposed of them at a rate of more than $1,500,000 an hour.

The William Fox star did not spare himself in his efforts to put the Fourth Liberty Loan over the top. No subscription was too small for him to go out for, no price was too large to prompt him to. One after another all day time was at the William Fox Studio in Cliffside, N. J. working on his newest picture; at night he was exhibiting audiences of a thousand at his office to buy bonds to their utmost, and to keep them. Wherever he went he was welcomed with enthusiasm that testified to his great personal popularity, and his enthusiasm into practical patriotic help. What was undoubtedly Mr. Farnum's

North Carolina Manager Puts Houses Behind Loan

H. DRAKE, manager of the Strand and Lafayette theatres in Fayetteville, N. C., has gained the approval and praise of several patriotic societies and his town for the manner in which he has opened his theatre to every call of war service. During the time his houses were closed in the Fourth Liberty Loan drive, by the manager of interest he decorated the lobbies of both theatres and erected boards for the sale of bonds.

Manager Drake is rightfully proud of the services he has performed. He received from H. L. Cook, chairman of the Fourth Loan Committee; John A. Pates, chairman of the Council of Defense, and from R. H.
Dye, Government appeal agent, who praise his patriotism in letters of enthusiastic approval. It may be readily imagined that the spirit of local pride and patriotic impulse that carried his house to "Four-Minute Men," to book patriotic films, aid in the various Liberty Loan drives and in every way put his property and his occupation at the disposal of the Government will not alone leave him with a fine and healthy conscience, but in possession of public appreciation that will long endure.
As has been frequently mentioned in these columns, the importance of the motion picture export trade must not be overlooked by American manufacturers. For purposes of motion picture making this country seems to have the better advantages and a better conception of what is best suited to cosmopolitan tastes. Whether the audience be located in Kokomo or Kamchatka, the preference is for those good American films. Presently this war will be over and then the great foreign market will be opened wide and unobstructed. For that time all should be prepared; but before the harvest can be gathered the soil must be prepared and seed planted. Now is the time to begin the work of preparation and planting. The Moving Picture World's Export Section can help you.

These be parous times, some indication of which is reflected in the pages of the Moving Picture World, a bit tenuous through lack of the customary trade announcements. We are not going to discuss the wisdom of the decision that has brought about these conditions; we only hope that no serious effects will result from the temporary suspension and that presently business will be resumed at the old stand. In the meantime the Moving Picture World will "carry on" in an endeavor to give its subscribers all the worth while news that happens.

We have been asked to give an interpretation of the change in the theatre admission tax as proposed by the Senate Finance Committee which is now considering the revenue bill. Advices from Washington, published on page 503 of our issue of October 26, explains the change to amount to a tax of one cent each five cents charged. But the bill has not yet been passed, and probably will not be before December. There is no assurance that the Senate's amendments will be adopted, so any attempt to interpret something that is not law would be futile.

* * *

The usefulness of the motion picture industry in promoting the sale of Fourth Liberty Loan bonds has been seriously impaired by the influenza epidemic, yet, for all that, much good work has been done by individual players, and a number of theatre managers have already produced splendid results wherever their efforts have been put forth. While we wish more might have been accomplished, the total will not be so bad, considering the many closed theatres and the general depression in the amusement line. But there will be another time.

The plague of influenza seems to have passed its worst stages. From Boston, where the disease was most widespread, comes news that the epidemic state has passed and that theatres are to be opened again. In many other sections of the country similar conditions are reported, so that it is safe to assume that normal conditions will be restored within a short space of time. These indications will be welcome tidings to motion picture men and amusement promoters in general. It will be well, nevertheless, to continue to exercise every measure of precaution until the disease is finally stamped out. Undoubtedly the approach of cold weather with the gradual fall in temperatures which will purify the atmosphere, will stop the highly contagious character of the plague.
A PREVALENCE OF TYPES

By Robert C. McElravy.

Eminent statisticians have figured out that there are only seven different lots in the realms of fiction, only thirteen different kinds of jokes, and a lot of other things of more or less value to the story-teller. But this harassed individual, always on the lookout for something new and different, has one resource, if he has learned to use it, that is almost in-exhaustible. That is the bewildering variation of types, all of them human and therefore interesting, into which mankind is grouped.

When his brain is wracked by vain effort to find new twists for plot structure, the simplest way often is to stick his thumb into Jack Horner's literary pie and see if he can't pull out some new kind of a plum—in other words, a new type of person around which to build his story. For, if he has ever done this successfully, he knows that a real character-type is likely to bring a lot of plot along with him. As a matter of fact it requires almost five reels to develop an interesting character on the screen and it doesn't really matter much what he does if he does it in his own individual way. A Colonel Sellers, a Mrs. Grundy or a Mr. Pickwick are not dependent upon special plot situations to any great extent.

The human family may be separated broadly into two classes, the virtuous and the villainous. But when it comes to choosing fiction types, most of them will be found ranging somewhere between these two classifications. There is very little genuine concentrat-ed, out-and-out villainy in the world (exclusive of the Hohenzollern influence), and it is only occasionally that downright criminality needs to be pictured. This usually comes in the strictly tragic type of story. Neither are strictly virtuous types so frequent: the classification might be said to include all mothers, clergymen and Red Cross nurses, but perhaps not many others.

It is a curious phase of human nature that most people desire to escape being classified with either virtue or villainy—or being classified at all if they can avoid it. This tendency to split away from the general is what creates individual characters. The char-acter types vary exceedingly, but sometimes they are con-genial and gregarious and may be said to represent certain types. These types are tremendously interesting; they are often amusing and sometimes pathetic.

It is the fashion of people who have crooked or villainous tendencies to masquerade as virtuous, for nearly all types are acting out some particular role in life a little different than nature intended. We have Uriah Heep with his false humility, Mr. Raffles posing as a gentleman, and a thousand and one other villains assuming virtues for purposes of their own. But per-haps the most entertaining of all is the type of really virtuous person who assumes a villainy when he has it not. This is not at all infrequent, for most people are all wool and a yard wide at heart, though they would be terrified at the thought of admitting it. So we have the girl who smokes cigarettes and reads "Snappy Stories" as an expression of her independence of all restraint. Then we have the man who drinks an occasional high ball and loudly advertises the fact, and a lot of minor miscreants too numerous to men-tion. This latter type nearly always hags its little sins with great glee and is constantly expecting some reformer to come along and get after it with a big stick. But their camouflaged goodness is self-evident; and you can trust this type to keep on buying Liberty Bonds as long as it is necessary.

It is really remarkable how much one strong, well-defined character-type will do for a production. One of the new releases, "The Brazen Beauty," is such a picture. The story, written by Louise Winter, centers about a young Western girl who inherits millions and bursts with crude violence into the high society of Long Island. Priscilla Dean, a comparative new-comer to the screen, works wonders with the role. She never gets away from the type of girl she started out to portray. The characterization supersedes plot and action and setting, but the story also has these in good measure. All told, it is difficult to remember a five-reel picture that is stronger than "The Brazen Beauty" from the standpoint of artistic merit and sheer entertainment.

HIGHEST PICTURE VALUES

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

Comedy might easily be ranked above all other forms of drama, if there were great examples of comedy to be had, and if we were not confronted with the remarkable success of such photo-dramas as "The Birth of a Nation," "My Four Years in Germany" and the like, to say nothing of examples of tremendous popularity, far and above any comedy, in the other arts, such as "Ben Hur," "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "Camille" and a long line of serious stories. One great difficulty in getting at values lies in the general use of a term which might aim at popularity yet fail to make a hit with either the intelligent or the stupid.

What is meant by the word "Amusement?"

It can be construed as merely causing laughter.

It can relieve tedium, as by looking out of the win-dow.

It can mean to engage and wholly occupy the mind.

Here is a wide range, from what would appeal to a baby in arms to the pleasure a grown person finds while speculating on some point in psychology. Many people feel an intuitive delight on seeing beauty, while others might be carried away by the charming per-sonality of an actress. A dozen different people may enjoy a dozen different things in the same picture, hence the critic goes beyond personal viewpoint.

What wholly occupies the mind of the greatest number?

It may be that which is of deepest personal concern.

This would give highest value to "interest."

Is that interest in the subject matter?

Is it confined to the personality of an actor?

Is it merely to pass the time away?

Now we are brought flat up against the arbitrary length of feature pictures. It is scarcely even at-tempted to keep an audience laughing for more than two reels, though it could be done, and interest is apt to lapse at any time unless the representation is logical, or there is a quality of suspense which engages audience mind to the last.

Sustained interest may be set down as one of the highest values.

Sustained interest is broken by the obviously false. Sustained interest often depends on curiosity as to the outcome.

Sustained interest is strong in vital subject matter. It gains strength in revelation of ourselves. Here are elements of "interest," "amusement, "entertainment,” call it what you like, to which the critic gives attention, consciously or unconsciously, ir erpective of the drawing power of a star’s name, because the good-will of every picture house depends on satis fied audiences.

Logic, suspense, subject matter and characterization.

These are four very high values in feature plays.

Their best combination might be found in high comedy.

In that or in powerful drama of modern times.

Weakest in these values is the so-called “vehicle.”

Critics may be thoughtlessly blamed for distinguishing between the entertaining qualities of a screen product and those which are destructive of audience interest, but it is impossible to pass honest judgment without doing so. There are many other values to be considered, but their presence can neither cover, nor compensate for, the absence of those elements named.

On the other hand, given a story of absorbing interest through high suspense and vital subject matter logically developed in rightly typed characterization, whether comedy or serious drama, it will usually get over.

What kind of plays do the critics enjoy?

All good ones, like the audience, when they have a chance.

Audiences turn cold on illogical stories and are dullest by stale stuff. They love laughter, originality, beauty, variety; accord close attention to high suspense, give warm applause to sympathetic characterization and can be moved to ovations by vital matter, truthfully, splendidly and forcefully presented. Capable criticism makes for development, for improvement, for progress in quality and for the ultimate prosperity of motion picture production.

AN INTERESTING CONTRAST

By Edward Weitzel.

An article in The Writer’s Monthly for October, by Arthur Leeds, calls attention to “two novelties of the just-opening 1918-19 dramatic season in New York City.” One event was the production of Anthony Kelly’s stage play, “Three Faces East.” The other event was the coming first night of a stage version of “The Cheat,” written by Hector Turnbull, author of the screen story, and the stage dramatist, Willard Mack. Under the title, “I. O. U.,” the Turnbull-Mack play made its stage debut the first week in October and met with very little encouragement from the newspaper critics. One of the screen’s biggest successes and the first photoplay to be transformed into a spoken drama, the reason for its failure on the stage is worth studying. As for “Three Faces East,” it is one of the biggest hits of the season and is turning people away at every performance.

Uncovering the Skeleton.

Most of the reviews on “I. O. U.” agree that the whole situation in the play takes place in the last act, and that the dialogue throughout is much below standard. The nature of its theme robs the heroine of sympathy, and when she attempts to justify her acts by words she only succeeds in exposing her own want of brains and the poverty of her excuses. The big situation, where the enraged Oriental brands the shoulder of the woman who made an infamous bargain with him and then refused to fulfill her part of the contract, illustrates a vital point of difference between the art of the screen and that of the stage. One is reflected; the other is acted out before the eyes of the spectator. It is the actual presence of the human beings in the scene that makes the branding repugnant to the physical senses. To repeat an iron bound axiom: True art never strikes below the belt. The restrictions of the stage and the screen differ on many points. What may be good art for the one is often bad art for the other. The most skillful dialogue in the world would not have made the stage play as convincing as it was in its original form. The subject was adapted to the medium for which it was first conceived. Deuding it to a skeleton for a stage play left it only the bare bones of a once well rounded story which spoken words could not adequately cover.

The Importance of Dialogue.

Referring to the success of “Three Faces East,” the Leeds article says of its author: “He had the good sense to wait until the really big idea came along and until he had sufficiently grounded himself in the tech nique of the regular stage.” The fact of the matter is, the Anthony Paul Kelly play is almost dialogue proof and could have been adapted to the screen as readily as to the stage. Curiosity and suspense are so aroused by the Chinese puzzle of a plot that every thing else is forgotten by the audience. Had “The Cheat” been built along the same lines it could have been turned into an equally good stage play and snapped its fingers at the words spoken by its char acters. But this does not entirely dispose of the ques tion of dialogue.

Quoting once more from the Leeds article: “If writers for the stage may come into the photoplay field, a knowledge of stage technique seems to be the only thing which need be mastered by the successful writer of screen plays before he may at least attempt the legitimate drama.”

Dialogue is a very important part of the technique of most stage plays. If mastered it will assure the suc cess of many a plot that is anything but dialogue proof. The screen writer who turns stage dramatist must command the services of a proficient collaborator, or he will be restricted to but one class of material, unless he buckles down to hard work and learns the trick of writing stage talk himself.

FIFTH AVENUE HAILS DOUG

FIFTH AVENUE, the great highway of New York, known everywhere of all men who know any highway, uncovered something new under the sun on the afternoon of October 17. Even as this is being written the throngs are filling the famous thoroughfare at Forty-fourth street. The sounds of cheering and handclapping come down the avenue and turn into Forty-third street, into the sanctum of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. Doug Fairbanks is out there selling Liberty Bonds.

This actor-man came up Fifth avenue as a himself parade—and the town stopped work to see and hear. Fears of contracting influenza through mixing in a crowd apparently deterred none from jamming in around him. Escorting Doug were the full police band and six mounted policemen, the latter in pairs. Between each two of the “finest” was a lay figure, suspended by sturdy bluecoated arms. Out in front was what looked like the Kaiser after reading a Wilsonian blast. The two following figures appeared to be in the same deep dejection.

Here on Fifth avenue the denizens of the offices see many parades and are as you may say accustomed to them. But this one of today is rare. It is Fifth avenue’s tribute to the screen, the screen as personified by Douglas Fairbanks.
Catalogue of Educational and Selected Pictures

Including Adaptations of Books, Plays and Magazine Stories Released Between July 1 and Sept. 30, 1918.

Compiled by Margaret I. MacDonald.

This list of films, released between July 1 and September 30, 1918, contains the names of educational and semi-educational pictures and adaptations of books, plays and magazine stories, which have been produced during that period. It also contains a number of pictures of mixed character suggested for the family group, children's matinees and Sunday exhibitions. It does not, however, include the various News Pictorials such as the Hearst-Pathé News, the Universal Animated Weekly and Current Events, the Mutual Screen Telegram, Gaumont News and Gaumont Graphic. A list of the addresses of the headquarters of the different manufacturing companies or exchanges herein referred to will be found at the end of the list.

Salaries Soundly Based,
Declares Montagu Love

ONTAGU LOVE, World Pictures star, in talking of the much reduced salaries paid to motion picture stars, said:

"The large salaries that well-known film stars are receiving are based on sound values. In judging the salaries there are a number of important factors to be taken into consideration. Chief among these is the fact that a motion picture star's high value is generally for only a few short weeks. Unlike a stage star, he is not seen but once a year or so in a community, but in every big and little city in the country his picture is being shown for four to six weeks to larger throngs of people than ever attend legitimate theatres.

"In this way his popularity, of course, grows more rapidly than that of a stage star, and he is more subject to the effects of publicity with which the public sees him, this popularity also wanes much faster than that of a stage star. A popular stage star retains his popularity for thirty to forty years and receives salaries that are twice those of years. A film star's popularity lasts for only a fraction of that time, and consequently in the short period that his value is large he must receive a correspondingly bigger salary than the stage star if his lifetime's earnings are to show as big a total as the stage star's. High film salaries are only relatively high. When all factors are taken into consideration they are seen to not be out of proportion at all."

When Producers Go West
Remaining Actors Ask Less

NOTICEABLE effect of the motion picture companies moving their studios from New York to California is already being felt at the World Pictures studio at Port Lee. On a recent Monday morning over 300 actors called and asked that they be registered with the Western office. Many of them were actors who have recently played important parts in pictures. Some of them stated that as the railroad fares to California are so high and they had saved no money they were unable to follow their companies. Actors who have been paid as high as $500 per week are willing to accept jobs at half that money if they can be assured of receiving regular employment here. The question with the casting directors of World Pictures now is not so much the ordinary assembling of a proper cast, but rather that of elimination from many good actors and the drafting of virtually an all-star cast in a studio that three months ago would have been utterly impossible.

Scenario writers also are affected. Many are submitting material to the World company at figures that are exceedingly reasonable, due to their desire of securing quick money for their work. They realize that the time lost in sending a script to California for approval and the consequent loss of time in negotiations makes it desirable to sell for less money and get the money at once.

Albert Capellani left Saturday for Los Angeles, where he will at once take up the production of 'The Red Lantern,' a picture about a woman in which Alla Nazimova will be starred. This is Mr. Capellani's first visit to the Pacific slope, which he is eager to compare with his native New York, with which motion picture direction has made him familiar. With Mr. Capellani on the Western tour are Mrs. Capellani and their three children.

"America's Answer" Companies Close.

As a result of the influenza and the consequent closing of theatres where "America's Answer" was booked, the tours of the last of the companies playing the Official War Picture have been cancelled. It is probable that the film will not be seen again until it is released to the motion picture houses.

Baltimore Man Called.

Flax of the Washington office last week, he being employed by the company for the past six years. Mr. Edmond has been six years with General Film Company and was considered one of its most valued and loyal employees.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD 585

From Providence.

J. FRED LOVETT, of the Royal, Providence, sends in the following a request for comment. We have explained that Mr. Lovett finds it necessary to display his program for the week in the Sunday issue, taking a three-fives. With three changes and an underliner, he does not get much opportunity for display, but he is off on a page by himself, where the need of the fighting the other an effort to capitalize the line. His very reason we think he could sacrifice design for the sake of larger and more prominent type, and we think that his page better improved there is less need for fighting with design and we think that a typical border, not much larger than 24 points, might give better results. But Mr. Lovett is on the ground and perhaps sees a reason for the design that does not appear on the surface. We think, though, that it would pay him to try the experiment. Or the samples sent in will take eight of the best. In the first of if point facts are used for two lines, and Fairbanks gets 18, is better than he is less prominent, but because the lines are staggered and not set all on one line. At this point, too, we would suggest that he must use a larger face with a condensed letter. Here the design has some bearing upon the first attraction though, and there is not anything done. Here the Twelve points is the largest letter used. Only by keeping down the descriptive lines is any display gained. The full type face is just three by three inches. Is it too little in proportion to the display. The next cut shows the two more examples of playing up to the idea apart from the "king of bills," which is not a particularly good line. The other space announces a "bill that's always on the square," in allusion to the location of the house. Here the display lines are picked out, and with each in its own box, the display is better than were all 42 types. With the right做工, he might get better for a change of bill announcement. We think that if Mr. Lovett would change his scheme to play up the features in larger type and set the sub features in a six or eight point, he would get a better display and influence business, though perhaps not to the point where the results would be noticeable in the box office. We think the best results of all would come from using a frame about the size of that with the lion—omitting the lion, and making one design serve permanently. It is not so much a matter of cutting costs as of getting proper display for the type matter.

Doug in Sweden.

Bennie Ziedman sends in a picture of Douglas Fairbanks, used to decorate an advertisement in a Swedish newspaper. We don't know what it's all about and we don't believe that Bennie knows either,

A summer advertisement and a special appeal for W. S. S.

A pair of three fives. That on the left shows the star players. On the right space is sacrificed to design. these he gets his three stars into the design, and even suggests that the Bara subject is a little better than the others, though the portrait suggests a soubrette rather than a vampire. Here Miss Bara's name appears in large type, which is an unusually large face and is tied only once, in the Ella Hall announcement. The other three names are set in an 18 point because the capital letter gives only 12 points. Usually this would be far too small a display. It is permissible here only because Mr. Lovett gets on the local page for his suburban section. The right hand display gives most of the space to an effort to capitalize the line. "An all star bill." For the sake of this allusion much valuable space goes to black ink and star rays that matter very little in the larger faces of display type. Here is twelve point that looks more like a ten the largest line of importance. A star border between one point rule would give the idea and permit the names to be played up so they would attract the reader. The left hand display in the second example is the best of the lot. Here is that even the feature is set in such a small letter that the second cannot come much smaller. We like, however, the idea of naming all the subjects instead of merely adding "A comedy," or "A Paramount comedy." We think the names will help sell in two ways. The title may attract, and the reader knows what he is getting instead of fearing that it may perhaps be something he has seen at the downtown houses. The last pair are well laid out, but the design goes to the artist. The lion has reference to some subject, but it seems to tie up to the line,

Two more displays in which the stars are suppressed.

Two spaces in which the decorations are not germane to the offerings.
The reading of the foregoing figures has been made by the Post says, official. Certainly there will be many cripples, but from the foregoing quotation of men engaged, perhaps when it is all done, we shall find it at least not nearly as bad as the Post guessed.

To sum up, I repeat: Let us by all means provide for as many of the incapacitated film operators as possible. It must be remembered that they are the men who are being done out of work by the advent of the moving picture industry. A large percentage of them are unskilled laborers, and it would be very much to the general good to see them in the employment of a trade in which they presumably have a natural or acquired taste. One other point. Many of these men are in reformatories, and it is to be hoped that the reformatories will take the initiative in the matter and get in touch with the picture industry for the purposes of which I have been speaking.

Non-Intermittent Projector Has Possibilities.

Recently the writer was summoned to Boston to re-examine a non-intermittent projector which had been demonstrated to him a year or so previously and had failed to make even reasonably good. The summons came from William C. Fernald, who heads the Boston cinematographers' union, who is himself a practical projectorist of several years experience, and who was connected with the company engaged in developing the projector, and he assured me that, in his opinion, it was well worth a second examination, especially as the company claimed to have made several improvements since his last visit. I climbed aboard Nancy Hanks, the go-devil, and in due course again looked upon the year-agone failure.

The machine at this time has, in my opinion, definitely failed. It employs two three-member lenses, revolving in opposite directions and alternating their focal points, so that a projection lens is employed to catch the constantly moving film picture and bring it to a temporary halt upon the screen. The plan is not new. It has been tried by several inventors and has failed. There was always the difficulty of getting the picture up and down upon the screen, and no arrangement of revolving lenses or prisms could stop the film motion. The inventor, or inventors, of this projector ran into the same trouble, but have apparently gotten around it by giving the projection lens itself a slight up and down reciprocating movement. This is done by a cam, and moves vertically perhaps an eighth of an inch for each picture. The result is a picture that is so flat that a good mirror test, and with only a two-inch vertical movement in which to work, shows a marked fourth picture. The picture was quite small. In a full-size picture the movement would be much more. It was explained that this movement was due to lack of accuracy in setting of one of the lenses, or something like that. But is that as it may, I believe that if the development of this plan can be carried to this point, it can be carried further and a rock-steady projection can be produced. The question then comes: Can it be worked on in the right way? By this I mean, can a projector of this type be put out with an optical system which can be readjusted indefinitely under any condition and which can be successfully handled by the average projectorist? That, it seems to me, is the whole matter. That a machine can be built which will do the work under one condition seems to me well-nigh certain, but can it be built to do the work under other conditions; also, can it be handled with the same degree of probability? Time alone will tell us these things, but I now, and for the first time, can agree that the non-intermittent projector seems a possibility.

The advantages of this machine do not lie in the projection system itself, but in the present stage of development. In fact, it will not be able to utilize even as great a percentage of the light as does the standard, intermittent projector. This is by reason of the fact that, whereas it has no revolving shutter, it must have a spot large enough to cover two full pictures, with the light on, 1½ inch, and a spot of twice the diameter will have more than twice the area, hence the light strength per unit of area will not be half as great. The machine has two tremendous advantages, however; viz: It will work continuously and without an absolute blur for an hour, and there is absolutely no flicker at any speed. It would have been quite easy to have made it work continuously longer, but the projectorist had, while perfect, was decidedly odd. This possibility has value when it comes to showing pictures in class-rooms, in military practices, etc.

A model of the machine was exhibited, without projection, in a convention, and I understand one will be exhibited at the coming exhibition in New York City, picture for picture. As to a "late convention," instead.)

Travel Ghost Trouble.

Thomas J. Matherway, St. Marys, Kansas, desires aid as to the following: Our machine is a Power's 6, rather old, and it is impossible to entirely get rid of travel ghost. Have followed all instructions in the handbook, but the picture is still streaking returns intermittently. A few reels may run all right, then come up against this trouble, and be right again for a time. Would like to know which has the faster intermittency through the different types of panorama machines? Is it possible for you to offer a discussion of the comparative merits of different projection machines in a private letter such as you mention in connection with your money dollar work.

Your intermittent travel ghost is no doubt due to worn gears, possible in conjunction with a shutter blade which is just right for a screen of what ever width. It is not too narrow where there is back-lash, due to looseness in the gears. The intermittent part may be due to a possible inoperative framing carriage. Hold fly-wheel stationary and rock the revolving shutter back and forth. If there is a movement of more than half an inch your gears are worn too much. You may remedy matters, in this case, by attaching a small gear to the fly-wheel half inch wide, to something stationary immediately under the shutter shaft, passing the strap over it, and attaching a light weight to the other end. The idea is to produce a slight braking effect, so that the shutter will not "back-lash," but be held on the retard all the time. You can then set it so that there is no travel ghost, and you are done.

The other way is to add, say ½-inch more width to the cutting blade or revolving shutter. This means of two strips of slide binder tape. Paste one on each side of the blade, allowing them to overlap a little on the edge, pasting the two edges together for stiffness, ⅛-inch is, of course, a guess, but about right. This makes the blade too. The right remedy, however, is new gears. As to the comparative speed of the intermittent, the machine is not up to the quality I expect, and I cannot publish that without a row. It is a thing you should post yourself, if you have the ghost, but it is not easy to see. As to a discussion of the relative merits of different projectors—why, that comes under better hands than this, and the projection engineer who could be employed to give an expert opinion of that kind. There are perhaps no different points, ranging from materials employed to possibilities of the optical trains, but generally too cheap to be worth listening to. As I have told you many times, the one dollar chariot projectors are no good, and it is merely to head off a great mass of demands for personal replies by mail which would waste too much of my time. A large percentage of these demands for personal replies were on things of this kind, and I have refused to answer. Remember, there are tens of thousands of operators and projectorists in this country alone, and the number of theatre managers, and a considerable number are always in need of aid of various kinds. It is not necessary to seek further than the advertising pages of this paper to find prospects of this kind superior. And, mind you, that is not a mere boost for our advertising department, but a statement of actual fact.

More Shutter Trouble.

Vance Tilley, Suffolk, Va., has trouble, as follows: My booth (Why "booth," neighbor Tilley?) For heaven's sake, ask your manufacturers to send me a reproduction of framing, of which I have none. See Webster for definition of "booth."—Ed.) is equipped with Pow- ner's 6. Recently, weeks there has been travel ghost—very bad, too. Took machine apart and found trouble. On reassembling, it was as bad as ever. Have set my shutter several times, but troubles come. Three sets of three reels O. K. and then start streaking, either up or down. Ma-chine is just as made and is not adjusted and can find no lost motion.

From what you say, I am inclined to believe the screws which clamp the shutter blades between flanges have worked loose. You do not need to take the machine apart to test for lost motion. Just hold fly-wheel stationary and see how far you can move the revolving shutter back and forth. If it is more than ¼-inch the machine is not up to standard. Any motion in gears. Under certain conditions it is, you know, quite possible to produce travel ghost. But even when this test fails, then all these things do not apply in your case apparently, because if the trouble lay in these gears, they would either cure it permanently or not at all. It is also possible that one of the gears has been worn slightly. Examine them all carefully, if you find the shutter flange screws are tight, have the set screws in the gearing strain to the rim of the shutter while holding the fly-wheel stationary. If it is a trouble, this will make the shutter should cause it to slip, though sometimes it won't. If you can find nothing wrong after these tests, watch your machine shows up examine the marks and see if they still match up.

The Proper Presentation of Pictures Requires Careful Choice of Incidental Music

Part II.

Those musical directors who have relegated themselves to a sort of treadmill existence, who no longer plan for bigger musical results, or who do their work with one hand continuously upon their watch-fob, have mentally classified all scenes into a few simple tempi. To these, a ball room scene, garden party, or social event, calls for a bright waltz; sad scenes mean waltz lentos, deep grief of any kind needs an adagio pathetic and so forth. For then the analysis of scenes is as yet an undiscovered science and their failure to comprehend such causes them no qualms of conscience. theirs is the simple life, with little to do today and nothing tomorrow. Incidentally, the salary is little today and will be nothing tomorrow.

The choosing of incidental music for the pictures can never become an exact science, and, for that reason, the occupation is bereft of monotony and the stigma attached to drudgery. From close observation of tests made in picture fitting and by the use of common sense, a few rules or principles can be laid down, which, if followed, cannot vary the musical directors far astray.

Secondary to suitability, the music in a setting should be varied. Without variety, the tempo changes, the harmony of color, and a musical accompaniment consisting of a series of waltzes would be a sorry sort of picture portrayal. All bright scenes should not be fitted with the same style of selection. Serenades, intermezzi, slow waltzes, mazurkas, two-steps and cairies may be used effectively to convey brightness and at the same time provide variety. Ballads, lullabies, slow serenades, cavitonas and reveries suit slow scenes that may be tinged with sadness or regret. Here again one gets ample variety. Neutral situations must be fitted according to locations, conditions, or plots development, and, if many of them appear, the music should be sufficiently varied to dispel any idea of an integral connection, one with the other.

Do not use too much music composed by the same man. Each has a certain style and technique which is noticeable to an almost incredible extent, even among the masses. The melodies may be different, the tempo different, the harmonic treatment may be widely divergent; but we hear people say, "That sounds like Debussy," and it is Debussy. Every composer is stamped with his hallmark, and no one hearing Grieg could be told that "Morning" was by Massenet.

Now, if the theme be stronger than the incidental music, somewhere in the second reel there will be a minor climax point in the graded scale. If one or two incidental numbers tower above the others, more minor climaxes will be heard, and the gradually ascending grade will show a series of hillocks. See Figure II.

Who can tell which point is the real climax?

The same fault might easily creep into the score after the climax had been reached and create in the minds of the audience an uncertainty regarding the real point of interest of the plot.

Reversing the principle, no number should be introduced which is weaker than the preceding one while ascending to the peak; for this will create a valley too far below the picture. See Figure III. It will weaken the musical support and lose the interest of the audience to such an extent that it will make it difficult to again gain their attention.

No doubt many new rules regarding the choice of incidental music will be evolved and developed in future, but the leader of today can safely follow the three enumerated above. They will save him from many a pitfall and, when memorized, will smooth out the numerous little difficulties which he now encounters in score-making.

Forewarned Leaders Use Forethought.

Influenza stalks through the land and people fear to congregate lest they contract the disease. Many theatres are voluntarily closing their doors, while some are shut down by the order of the local board of health. Countless musical directors have nothing to do but draw their salaries.

Now is the time to take stock of your library. It needs rearrangement, and proper classification. Worn music should be replaced by new copies, torn sheets should be mended, and lost parts searched out.

How many numbers have you listed in your library and how many hundred times have your patrons heard each and every one of them? Isn't this a good time to buy new and up-to-the-minute music?

Get in touch with your music dealer or the publishers, scan their catalogues, and make your selection. Watch for bargain advertisements in the trade journals and establish music service connections that can be relied upon to supply your wants, accurately and speedily, in the height of the season when you become busy.
The Rivoli Holds Talented Directors.

The performance at the Rivoli during the week of October 6 was exceptionally good. The substantiality of his program by opening the bill with "The Lost Chord," sung by the Halito Male Quartet, and followed by the church scene, with its special lightings, proved most interesting.

During any innovation, and we believe that his purpose was to isolate the singing of this number, the mood of the music was not closely connected with the religious thought of the song. But the orchestra was splendid and worked well. When things become too stilted or stereotyped, they tend to lose their effervesence.

"Les Preludes," by Lietz, was conducted by Mr. Hubenstein. This young man has been hiding his talent beneath a bushel. He is a splendid director, and should be given more opportunity to show his skill. His features are graceful, yet commanding; he seems to thoroughly understand musical interpretation, and the "boys" work well under him. "Les Preludes" was performed in a manner creditable to the largest symphony orchestra I have heard in this city. It was beautifully fitted, and, as usual, there was that precision of synchrony that makes the true piano music of Neuville. Little Joseph Littau conducted this number, and, although he may be small of stature, his work speaks for itself. In many ways, he is a genius, and his conducting ability shows some real flashes of that inspiration.

But the big piece, "The Forbidden City," was screened there was an orchestral prelude called "Intermezzo" by R. Strauss for the purpose of creating the Chinese atmosphere, which was to predominate in the rest of the piece. This prelude was remarkable little interlude of true Oriental type, and received a degree of applause upon its completion that indicated the fact that it was merely an overture to the picture.

The music for the feature consisted chiefly of excerpts from "Madame Butterfly," and, as we have always expected of those extensive musical settings is confusing. Operagoers—and we believe many go to the Rivoli—saw Norman Torrey and Leonard Pratley, who is the new Frank Fine. Unless a screen scene is typically the same as an opera scene, there is a danger in the usual opera-opera situation.

"In a Bird Store," a descriptive entrée, was played by the orchestra under Edward Elgar's baton. We did not see him in this number, and at times the interpretation was overdone, but on the whole, he was adequate in his direction. The "Mutt and Jeff" comedy and organ solo closed a splendid performance.

Good Music for "Lafayette, We Come!"

At a special trade showing in the Strand Theatre Wednesday afternoon the new much heralded picture, "Lafayette, We Come!" was given its first presentation.

Immediately at its conclusion, Mr. Frederick Grant, a fine basso, sang the song "Lafayette, We Come!" from the "Daisy Chain" as a tableau of the allied soldiers pressed on toward Berlin. The lighting effect was marvellous, and the voices were uncontrived and well sung, and the audience showed their appreciation in no uncertain terms.

Mr. Carl Edouarde conducted for the feature, "Lafayette, We Come!" and did a splendid job, and6 the new music was appropriately fitted and screen situations. The artistic touch of M. Perelli, the Belgian, was most evident, especially where the piccolo and drum solos playing "The Girl I Left Behind Me" were brought right into a new movement to fit a flash scene. This was effective.

A few numbers were in poor taste, and the one that calls for least censure was the song "To Go, I Go! To Thee" in rag time. It was not intended to be "ragged," but the uneven tempo did not add to the effect. It was staged. It had no place in the scene under any circumstances, a better choice being "Adagio for Strings," which could have been used to good advantage. In one number, the boisterousness of the previous scene showed desolate Belgium.

In the "Falling" scene, the hero was called upon to show his musical ability, and a facsimile of the title page of "The Rhapsody in Blue," by Mr. Gershwin & Co., was thrown upon the screen. The performance was obviously that the hero would play a piano solo. Why this discrepancy of detail?

Finally, introducing "My Country 'Tis of Thee," was wonderfully approached and perfectly synchronized. As the picture ends, a large chorale would have been musically effective before dashing into the exit march.

Strand Sets Good Music to Fine Hill.

The Strand program headed by "The Romance of Tarzan" as the feature during the week of October 13 showed a decided improvement.

The overture, "Irish Rhapsody," by Victor Herbert, was omitted to allow sufficient time for the playing of "My Country 'Tis of Thee," by Mr. Paul Smith to add $15,000 to the Liberty Loan. We preferred the speeches any way.

The Strand Typical Review was some what restrained, and was not played at the Rivoli. They showed a decided improvement upon what has been the custom at this theatre. Especially fitting was the song "The Blue Boy," by Edward Elgar, and the "Adagio Pathe tique," by Godard.

They played the song "A Khaki Lad" and "Tell That to the Marines." Both songs were well received on account of the spirit in which they were sung. But the setting was derived from an excellent rendition. Mr. Grant is new to us, but we predict him a bright future as a soloist, for we have seldom heard a bass singer who was gifted with such excellent taste.

While speaking of singers, the Strand sprang a surprise upon its audience by introducing Miss Chancey, as the tenor, in her first appearance on stage. If this be her first advent, it should not be her last. Her voice is so sweetly balanced and carefully produced that it completely takes a hold of the mind with nothing freakish. Her singing of "Celeste Aida" was remarkable. Her tones are so velvety, and her enunciation clearly distinct.

The music for "The Romance of Tarzan," was so wonderful it is difficult to say what the effect was the large majority of the scenes were small, and the atmosphere sufficiently changed. The organ, under the hands of Ralph Brigham, ably depicted the majority of it, while the orchestra was admirably marshaled and atmospheric dances.

As a whole, it reminded us favorably of the good old days at the Strand.

 Franco-American Music Company Formed.

An interesting development in musical circles has just been brought about in the formation of a new publishing firm. The French-American Music Company formed for the purpose of exploiting "La Madelon," the big song hit of France. This song is a favorite with the Parisians, and it was on the occasion of General Washington's first visit to the John Street palace in 1805 for the benefit of the Mount Vernon as General Washington passed through to New York for his inaugural ceremonies. The patriotic song of the United States, is but little heard today, but the lines are peculiarly appropriate to the present conditions. All the spirit of the sentiment could well be appropriated by the present 'Chief who now commands.'

"Hall Columbia" Oldest Patriotic Song.

The Austrian National Hymn, composed by A. W. Wegmann, is the foundation of a deliberate composition of an air intended to be national, and which became so popular that it is now the hall song of the Austrian Republic. We have a patriotic song popular enough to be national, and written with as great deliberation and studied care as Hayden's "Hail Columbia.

"Hail Columbia" was created to be sung from the stage, and had its first hearing at the inauguration of President Washington. It was heard upon the seat of the Government, in April, 1789.

The actor concerned was Gilbert Fox. A few days previous to the performance, he was shocked to find the sale of seats an open question. He devised some method of bringing up the receipts where there would be a profit instead of a distillation. He came to the conclusion that the conditions of the times were ripe for a new patriotic song. War was in the air. Diplomacy between two powers was severe. There were two factions in America—one siding with the French and the other with the English. Feeling ran high, and there was much bitterness.

Mr. Fox had as an acquaintance a boy who was George Washington. This gentleman was the son of Francis Hopkinson, author of "The Battle of the Roses," and was in the state of Conception in his native city of Philadelphia.

When the idea back of the desire for a patriotic song came to Mr. Hopkinson, he promptly set to work on the lyrics, using the tune of the "President's March." That was the origin of "Hall Columbia."

Mr. Fox announced that a new patriotic song would be heard at his benefit. On the night of the performance the house was packed. The song was an immense success. It was chosen to start off the refrain, and joined in singing.

People throughout the country everywhere realized that the tune was more English nor the French, but was written in a spirit of broadminded patriotism, distinctively American. It did much to allay suspicions, and to prove the United States from meddling in foreign affairs. Doubtless President Adam's aforesaid fact was his reason for countenancing and even adding to itsogue by attending the performance, and General Washington generally to hear the music.

The play chanced to be "The Italian Masque," that was so well marked, in commenting upon the immense popularity of the song, that, having been first heard in connection with it, it was but fitting that it continued its popularity by association with the Italian and his music. But the tune of "President's March," first known as "President Washington's March," was very popular, and was inspired by the present conditions. This music has been attributed to various sources. Mr. Oscar Sonneck, head of the American Museum of Music, named Fayles, leader of the orchestra and composer for the John Street palace.

There are a number of reasons for accepting Fayles as the composer of the song, as it was the written word of Mr. Custis. This gentleman was the adopted son of General Washington. He wrote the book. He is authority for the statement that Fayles wrote the music, and that the words were written by the president. It was on the occasion of General Washington's first visit to the John Street palace for the benefit for the Mount Vernon, as General Washington passed through to New York for his inaugural ceremonies. The patriotic song of the United States, is but little heard today, but the lines are peculiarly appropriate to the present conditions. All the spirit of the sentiment could well be appropriated by the present 'Chief who now commands.'

ITS POLICY.
We do not and will not publish any music nor ally ourselves with any publisher. Service is our middle name and we serve to please.

ITS PURPOSE.
We will select or buy music of all kinds from any publisher for the benefit of musicians who cannot come to New York or for those who through lack of time cannot write for small orders to many and various firms. For this service we charge no fee.

ITS OPERATION.
Send us your order for music with a deposit cheque, showing good faith, and we will procure your music from the various publishing houses, ship it as one consignment on the same date of receipt of the order, charging you the usual retail price less your deposit.

ITS MEANING TO YOU.
Quick action, accuracy in filling your order, a retail store at your door, a saving of carfares and postage and a service that you have long needed.

EXHIBITORS—
Avail yourself of this opportunity to build up a musical library for your theatre.

LEADERS—
Send in your lists of music wanted. If suggested in any cue-sheet, indicate the name and the number and we will do the rest.

“The Public Be Please.”

This should be the slorgan of every orchestra man throughout the country today. From the audiences, indirectly, your bread and butter comes. Why not consider their taste instead of your own in the matter of music? You know their desires. They make you understand them through hearty applause when you have touched a responsive chord in their hearts. Cater to them while you are in the theatre. You can gratify your personal musical idiosyncrasies at your leisure, but do not attempt it in the orchestra pit. It is not fair to the paying public, nor to your own better self.
Leaders’ Service Bureau.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q. —As far as I have been able to discover, the opera “Norma” has not been played in this country for a long time. Why is this?

A. —We understand that the opera you mention is not one of the most frequently performed operas in this country. The suppression of German operas will of necessity bring to the front many very excellent operatic tunes and place the opera programs through lack of merit. “Norma” is decidedly one of the few operatic numbers which calls for a range and compass which is impossible for the ordinary operatic singer of this time. Norma must appeal to a cultured woman, a remarkable range of voice. All these requirements are difficult to find embodied in a single soprano. If it is well sung, this old opera will prove a great treat to the music loving public.

Q. —I have never been on the stage, but have sung in concert work. I know my “boss” keeps me at my work continually because I can never satisfy him. When I threaten to quit, he coaxes me to stay, and I don’t know what to do. Will you please enlighten me on the course to pursue?

A. —You have asked a most difficult question, for your data as to how you play your pictures is very meagre and your employer may have just cause to be dissatisfied. I have no means of knowing the pictures and playing them well, you are doing your duty and should be allowed to work at your best. You have come mean of securing non-interference until you ask for it. If you desire to retain your present situation and believe that your work is of a high standard, insist that you be given a free hand.

Q. —Where can I get a position playing piano in a picture house?

A. —Under the classified advertisements of the issue of October 19 of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, an advertiser just such a position. Look it up.

Q. —Who wrote the opera “Romeo and Juliet”?

A. —Gounod wrote the opera and Liszt and Schumann composed a symphony of the same name. These facts are sometimes confused and it would be well to get them correctly fixed in your mind.

Q. —Maybe you can tell me whether there is a song for “Cheopatra” and how I may obtain it?

A. —George M. Rubinstein composed the music for this picture and made a very good work of it. Upon inquiry, we find that all the sets have been disposed of and all the music taken from those exchanges which may have bought them. Try your exchange.

Q. —I have read with a great deal of interest one of your recent articles in Music for the Pictures, and I am indebted to you for your letters. I am equally good appeared in earlier issues. How can I secure them?

A. —The editorial articles to which you refer are not printed anywhere but in the columns of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD; you would need to order the back numbers in order to get them. If you will send us your subscription application we shall begin with the first number, February 9, in which they first appeared.

Q. —Do you think it possible to arrange a mechanical device so that it could be attached to the operating machine in such a manner that it would synchronize the music?

A. —Mr. Lawton, of the Moss and Brill theatres, has patented some such contrivance and from what we have read it seems perfectly feasible but the trouble of attaching it, the bother of running it, and the large expense connected with the installation makes it prohibitive for the average exhibitor, and the larger theatres do not require it as they are able to obtain synchronization altogether.

Q. —Why is there no standard method of arranging cue-sheets and why cannot the printed standard be accepted?

A. —The reason for lack of standardization lies in the fact that many individual arrangers have been given opinions regarding the needs of the orchestra leader or organizer. We are pleased that you like our uniform, standard and hope that some day all arrangers will see it as we do. In the meantime, write the producer and make known your preference in the matter. He will be pleased to hear from you and it is the only way to get any action.

ROBERTSON-COLE IN DOMESTIC MARKET
Exporting Organization Opens Department for Handling Large Productions in United States

The Robertson-Cole Company, the large film exporting organization, announces the opening of a domestic department for the buying and selling of high class productions in the United States. It is a time announcement is made that the Robertson-Cole Company has acquired for world release Martin Johnson’s “Sailors of the South Seas” and the forthcoming William Desmond pictures to be produced by Jesse D. Hampton.

“We particularly desire to make clear that the Robertson-Cole Company is not entering the motion picture industry on any ‘lifer,’” says one of the officials of the organization, “or as a competitor in any of the overcrowded branches of the business. We are opening the domestic department as an outgrowth of our extensive exporting business, not for the exploitation of any star group of stars or series of offerings. We have no entangling alliances with any specific group in the industry. We are simply jobbers in the picture business, and we are looking for the best on the market.”

The Robertson-Cole Company is an established concern in the exporting world, having branches in London, Sydney, Calcutta, Bombay, Singapore, and Rangoon. It was through its general commercial business that it first entered, its interests to motion pictures as its branch agents everywhere found a demand—rapidly growing—for American films. Upon entering the field of film exporting, the Robertson-Cole policy was to establish that the best film opportunities were open to concerns able to buy world rights. Thus the establishment of a domestic film department came about.

In acquiring Martin Johnson’s “Sailors of the South Seas” for world release, the Robertson-Cole Company captured an interest which has always been the hobby of its president and his plucky little wife drifted through the Solomon and New Hebrides Islands of the South Seas, filming the stories on their way. The show was presented at the Rivoli Theatre, where it scored a success. Ever since the Rivoli showing, Mr. Johnson has been steadily going through the 50,000 feet of film photographed on the trip. He has assembled a feature production of 8,000 feet, which will be released in two parts.

Eight Desmond Pictures a Year.

The forthcoming William Desmond pictures, eight of which are to be produced by Jesse D. Hampton during the coming year, mark the latest step in the meteoric career of this popular star. Desmond’s splendid virility and strength of character have brought him real popularity at Triangle.

While the Robertson-Cole Company has acquired the world rights to both Martin Johnson’s “Sailors of the South Seas” and the William Desmond pictures, the organization is at the same time controlling the world rights, except for the United States, of the J. W. Frye pictures.

“We are now in a position to buy independent productions for the United States and Canada, as well as for all foreign markets on the expen of the Robertson-Cole Company. “We have no new system of distribution to offer; we are not opening exchanges to complicate the already overcrowded field; we have no high-flown theories as to how pictures should be sold. We believe in the old method of showing, in it’s dist and distant future. All we have in view is to watch the open market for the very best productions that can be bought. We will distribute them, first through foreign agents in foreign countries abroad, and second to the United States and Canada through whatever distributing organizations can offer the most favorable terms.”

“Nor do we propose to distribute all our pictures through one organization. We will make no contract of this sort. When we obtain all rights to a feature picture, we will offer it for open bidding. We do not believe that any one distributing organization is capable of handling the business in a way that will serve the interests of the films. The onus is then thrown upon the foreign agents, for they are the ones who know the best way to reach every branch of production.”

Several big productions are now being secured by the Robertson-Cole Company and are not far behind in nearing completion. No limitation has been set as to the nature of the pictures which will be handled, except that they shall have an international appeal.

Ontario Exhibitors Will Save a Half on Hard Coal

MEMBERS of the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ Association of Ontario, Limited, got down to a definite arrangement for the heating of their theatres during the coming winter at a conference with Home Smith, fuel controller for the Province of Ontario, which was held in the association’s quarters at 143 Young street, Toronto, on October 30. At the conference, the basis of the conservation plan was a resolution offered by A. Cohen, of the Globe and Rio Theatres, Toronto, who is a former president of the association, through which the theatres of Ontario are to guarantee to save 50 per cent of the consumption of hard coal during the coming season as compared with the amount of anthracite used last winter. If more than 50 per cent of the season’s supply has already been secured the surplus is to be at the disposal of the fuel controller. The plan is on a very simple basis. It is not to exceed sixty-eight degrees Fahrenheit. All exhibitors of the province, according to this resolution, were to be supplied on a questionnaire regarding the coal supply, consumption, etc. This motion was seconded by W. A. Baille, manager of the Cum-Bac Theatre, Toronto, also a former president of the association.

It was suggested by J. C. Brady, the president, who is the owner of the Madison Theatre, Toronto, that theatre owners buy their coal early each winter and that the heat maintained during the mornings and on Sundays be sufficient only to keep pipes and plumbing from freezing.

The resolution was made at the meeting that 90 per cent of the theatres in Toronto have apartments or stores in the building and these must be heated at all times. Practically all of the downtown theatres are heated with soft coal only, and there is a possibility that all theatres may be able to use bituminous coal exclusively. The hard coal used in many theatres is of a size that is not suitable for domestic use. A comparison study showed that the operators had been able to secure any amount of hard coal for future use so far.

Sixfold Jump in “Stocks”

Due to High Cost of Hauls

The inability, or rather the difficulty, of theatrical companies to arrange tours because of difficulties in securing fuel and the cost of transporting this fuel is resulting in the organization of many stock companies in the larger cities of the United States. At this season of the year in 1917 there were only thirty-four stock companies, while today there are in operation over two hundred. This tremendous increase has resulted in a large number of actors who have been asked to appear with these companies, with the “stocks” at salaries larger than they have been securing from the film companies.

Stock companies offer very alluring terms to the actors. Long seasons of forty to fifty weeks, economical living expenses and permanency of location are strong inducements to the thespians. World Pictures has in the last few weeks lost a number of their people. Only last week Clay Clement, last seen in “Under a Nine Inch Sea Wait,” left the company to go to Bridgeport to be leading man with the Poli stock company in that city.

“Manx-Man” Secures Two More

Sales Director J. Kemper, of the Manx-Man Company, announces the appointment of George Long, the Chicago representative of Samuel D. Pelzman and Gus Schlessinger. The latter was loaned for the work by President Paul H. Wilder, who controls the foreign rights of “Manx-Man” and by reason of Mr. Schlessinger’s familiarity with the picture, which has sold to foreign buyers all over the world.

Samuel D. Pelzman is the youngest special representative in the Manx-Man Company’s employ. While still in his ‘teens he was attached to the feature department of Universal in important capacities. But Pelzman’s most conspicuous work was performed in connection with the “sixfold pictures” when he toured New York State and met the exhibitors in person. He will operate from the Goldwyn branch office, and is now in the Ohio territory with Mr. Schlessinger.

Binney’s Picture Progressing Well.

The production of “Velvet and Rags,” which Harold J. Binney is personally directing, is progressing favorably. The recent fine weather has been taken advantage of by Mr. Binney, and he is editing a new title for the picture.

The story, which was written especially for Vangie Valentino by George Edwardes-Hall, is up to that author’s best standards. The offering will be released in November through the William L. Sherry Service.

Metro Forces Arriving.

O

F THE Metro players, directors, writers and other employees that are expected in Los Angeles this winter, the one who is first in the book is Madame Nazimova, in company with June Mathis, head of the scenario department, and her mother, arrived on October 11, to be followed soon by Nazimova herself, and members of her company. Later other stars, including Viola Dana, and Hale Hamilton, will come, and when their engagements in stage productions have been filled, Ethel Barrymore, Emmy Wehlen and Emily Stevens also will come to Southern California, it was announced at the Metro plant.

Helen Keller at Victory Tank.

Helen Keller was the chief attraction at the tank Victory in Central Park on Brunton night. Miss Keller delivered an address in a quiet and well modulated manner on top of the tank of the crowd that thronged the park that night. The remarkable fact that a deaf, blind and dumb girl could be taught to use such equipment as the tank and do was wonderfully commented upon by the listeners, and a large number of bond buyers had the pleasure of being introduced to Miss Keller and of receiving a receipt and photograph signed by her. Brunton night was one of the big nights of the week at the tank, and Miss Keller had to compete with such stars as Kitty Gordon, Bessie Barriscale, Dustin Farnum and Lillian Walker in her capacity of bond seller.

Cinema Camera Club Aids Loan.

The Cinema Camera Club of Los Angeles has done active service in the Fourth Liberty Loan drive just closed. All the ingenious stunts pulled off at the tank Victory in Central Park, from Dedication Day to the closing night—which occurred on October 11, by order of the Board of Health on account of the precautionary measure adopted to prevent the spread of Spanish influenza—and in which many of the studios of the West Coast took part, were filmed and distributed by the committee detailed by the Cinema Club.

Pictures were shown to the players from each studio as they were lined up on top of the tank and introduced to the bond buyers before they took their places in the small booths that dotted the park. Several times during the drive a line of bond buyers from each state in the Union, each person holding a card representing his native state, were lined up on top of the tank and photographed, and these films were shown a few days later at the downtown theaters.

Norma Talmadge in Los Angeles.

Norma Talmadge, who arrived in Los Angeles last week, is in charge of the production at the Lasky studio. Thomas Meighan, who preceded Miss Talmadge by a few days, is playing opposite, and S. A. Franklyn is in charge of the production. Constance Talmadge and her mother will entertain Norma and her husband at the new Talmadge home on New Hampshire avenue during their stay on the West Coast.

Storm Machine Invented.

Harry Brown, chief of the electrical department at Universal City, has invented a storm creator, which is composed of a reconstructed auto chassis, a Haines engine and an aeroplane propeller. This device furnishes enough power to suspend a man in mid-air. Outfitted with hoppers for confetti, for snow, or smoke pots, it will be able to provide any kind of storm a director requires. The machine is said to be the only one of its kind in existence, though contrivances to sweep wind and rain through scenes have been in use for some time. The cost of the machine was about $500, and two Universal City electricians who helped Brown with his invention were Dave Reynolds and C. P. Chamberlain.

Lois Weber's Sister a Bride.

Ethel Weber, sister of Lois Weber, the noted woman producer, stole a march on her friends and relatives when she accompanied Louis Howland to Riverside, Cal., on Sept. 28 and was married to him in that city. The pair went to Del Mar for a short honeymoon, and on the way from Del Mar to the wedding they returned to Hollywood, where they set up housekeeping in a bungalow in St. Francis Court. Mr. Howland is connected with the Lasky corporation.

Joe Ryan Married.

Joseph Ryan, "heavy" man to the William Duncan Vitagraph serials, was married last week to Miss Helene Marjorie Ingersoll, also of Vitagraph. The couple autod to Merced, where the ceremony was performed, they they proceeded on a trip through the Yosemite Valley.

Kine's New Orchestra.

The new twenty-five piece orchestra which the management of the Kine's Theatre announced some time ago was formally introduced to the patrons on October 7, to accompany the showing of the Goldwyn-Rex Beach picture, "Laughing Bill Hyde." The new band, under the direction of Herb Weidolt, took up a good share of the program on its first day by playing special selections, solos and ensembles, to the enthusiastic audience. The installation of this orchestra makes the Kine's the largest of its kind in the West Coast, and the highest class of the motion picture amusement houses of the country.

Scenario Editor Retires.

Daniel Carson Goodman, head of the editorial department at Triangle, has turned in his resignation, and will hereafter devote his entire time and efforts to finishing "The Sleeper," a novel upon which he has been working for some time. Mr. Goodman has taken a house in Hollywood, where he will reside during the winter and where he will have quiet for his literary labors. Nina Wilcox Putnam has taken Mr. Goodman's place as a scenario chief.

Fairbanks Repeats Loan Tour.

Douglas Fairbanks left Los Angeles last Tuesday in response to a request from Secretary McAdoo to repeat his last season's Liberty Loan tour. Doug went by way of Chicago, speaking from the rear platform of the train at many stations, thence on to Washington. After a conference with the officials he will return through the Middle West.

Frankly Farnum in Court.

Frankly Farnum is defendant in a damage suit in the Los Angeles courts as the result of a collision between his car and one owned by B. Collino and his wife on August 16, 1917. Collino demands $3,691.50 for personal injuries and damages to his car; Farnum, in a cross complaint, asks for $250 for damages to his car.

Entertainment Postponed.

Jack Gilbert has been given time to appear in another picture before he returns for duty at a California training camp. Spanish flu caused the authorities to postpone the date one month on his order to report.

Traverse Picture Cast.

Thomas Holding has been selected to play the leading male role opposite Madeline Traverse in her new picture now being made at the Fox plant in Hollywood. Edward Cecil and Fritz Ridgway both have good parts.

Motorboat Race.

At 7 a.m. on November 10 Dustain Farnum and Frank Garbutt will stage a gold medal race around Catalina Island. Farnum will use his boat, "Top the Turk" and Garbutt will have "Mystery IX.

Studio Shorts

William B. Parsons, Capitol Comedy star and president of the National Film Corporation, left Los Angeles on October 12 for New York to look after his studio manager, Isadore Bernstein, who sent an S. O. S. call when he became ill of Spanish flu. Parsons will also attend to the launching of the Hi-Fi Rhodes production, "The Girl of My Dreams."

Constance Talmadge is another of the picture stars who has leased a home in Los Angeles. The house is located at 7th and Bleecker streets and is the home of Mrs. Margaret L. Talmadge, the star's mother, will live with her.

Phillip A. Nuss is the cameraman who filmed the Theda Bara productions of "Roméo and Juliet," and "Under Two Flags," and who was more recently the manager of the Washington Motion Picture Corporation, has come to Los Angeles.

Survivor of Princess Pats
To Make War Film of Cheer

Among the heroes who have done "their bit" on the battlefields of France and on account of wounds have returned from France is Sergeant Douglas Aylen of the "Princess Pats" fering does not deal with the horrors and serious side of the struggle in Europe, but rather with the lighter sides. He relates many bright and amusing happenings of trench life, which serve simply to keep his audiences in good humor.

This energetic member of the "Princess Pats" is also arranging for the production of a picture which will be along the same lines which is titled "The Little Cunneck," the scenario being the work of Frederick H. James and Seymour Ansley, and which is expected to be ready for release in the near future.

When the original "Princess Pat" regiment was nearly wiped out at the battle of Ypres, a replacement division was formed consisting almost entirely of university students from the prominent seats of learning of Canada and this country, their cap insignia being an open book signifying that they were students. This was in 1915, and among this number was Sergeant Aylen, then aged eighteen and a student of McGill University in Canada. Of this number, approximately 1,600 men, are now only about 175 survivors, most of whom have been honorably discharged by the British and Canadian governments on account of war service. Sergeant Aylen himself is among the latter, having, while on the battlefields of Belgium, received shrapnel wounds in the right eye, mouth, and left shoulder. He has recovered, however, as the use of his arm was restored by electrostatic massage, and while he lost the sight of his eye the muscular control was not affected and his appearance is not disfigured.

John Bowers with Goldwyn.

The appearance of a new leading man in Goldwyn Pictures is made known with the announcement of the engagement of John Bowers. The latter has been under contract with Mayer and Kennedy in "Primrose," written for him by Cosmo Hamilton. Mr. Bowers has been placed under contract and will be frequently on the Goldwyn stars.

Mary Pickford made a trip to San Francisco during the week-end to visit the new studio of Pickford and Loew during the second week of the drive. George Larkin, who recently completed the serial, "Hands Up," will now be featured in five-reel productions for the Pathé program.

Florence Turner will begin work in a Los Angeles studio in the near future on a comedy production under the direction of Frederick Coiburn Clarke.

William Garwood has gone to San Francisco to produce a new stage production, "The Common Cause."

Ten of Lufman's Sunshine Comedy acts are joining the Hollywood Officers Training School.

Lina Cavailleri and her husband, Lucian Muratore, came to Los Angeles to fill a concert engagement at Shrine Auditorium last week.

Bubona is recovering from her recent operation for appendicitis.

William Russell was one of the first visitors of the Spanish "du" in Los Angeles.

William Desmond is said to have signed up for the signature by Clovis Young, the new producer of the J. Warren Kerrigan pictures.

Charles Clary appeared at various theatres and around Los Angeles making speeches and taking subscriptions nearly every evening during the Fourth Liberty Loan drive.

Flossie A. Jones Dies
Alone Among Strangers

One of the innumerable results of the epidemic of Spanish influenza among members of the moving picture industry is the death of Flossie A. Jones, an exhibitor of Waukesha, Wis., under particularly sad and distressing circumstances.

Miss Jones made her first trip to New York as a visitor to the N. A. M. P. I. Exposition at Madison Square Garden. There she caught cold and took to her bed at the Hotel Webster. Influenza developed and as a climax pneumonia set in. On Wednesday night, October 16, Miss Jones died among strangers, her only comforters being the trained nurses in attendance at her deathbed.

Shortly before she started East Miss Jones was elected vice president and state organizer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Wisconsin and was planning to apply her great energy to the task of building up the state organization as soon as she should have returned to Waukesha. Miss Jones started in the picture business in her home town, developing her holdings from a dilapidated old house into three up-to-date picture theatres that had become enormously prosperous under her management.

Clara Swears When Necessary

Clara Kimball Young succeeded in shocking some real "dough" out of the pockets of the Los Angeles people in Central Park in that city during the recent Bond drive. Clara swore Yes, sir, she swore right out loud in meeting, so that everybody could hear her!

This is what she said:

"In a few minutes Ambassador Giral will be going to tell some of the things that happened in Berlin, and that he tried to keep a secret.

"If it doesn't make your flesh creep, and if after he gets through you don't buy bonds,—well,—I'll be damned if I don't come down and choke the money out of you!"
RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

A NO THER big week in Filmland.

A week that stretched the caoutchouc in inquisitive necks to the utmost notch. Another week of pictures mingled with patriotism and digging for democracy. A week that began on the night that Al Christie marched his Liberty Blondes into Central Park—and ended on the day that Senator J. N. Finenza, accompanied by his two yearly daughters, Suezie and Hankie, descended on our fair city from the East, stopped the meetings in Central Park and closed every theatre in town as tight as the well known drum. Them blondes!

Twenty-five girls with golden hair, 22 karat, 14 carat, and a few just plain carrot, but not a bottle blonde among them.

As the bevy was brought into the park the hirsute effulgence irradiating from their gilded heads lit up the scene like a titanic searchlight. The hootchoid creatures were taken up on top of the tank, introduced to the great throng, after which they took their places in bunches of twos and threes in the booth placed here and there in the park—and the bond sale that broke all previous records was on!

Whole Christie Crew on Deck.

The Liberty Blondes were not the only attraction on Christie night, however. Doraldina, the dancer, was there; the girl stars from the William S. Hart studios; Francis Ford and his company, and, of course, the whole Christie crew. The attractions included the honor field, George French—and to top it all off, Bobby Vernon, who had left the Navy to take care of itself, came in from San Pedro Submarine Base looking nice and nifty in his sailor uniform.

Saturday afternoon Sessue Hayakawa, his talented wife, Tsuru Aoki, and other members of the Hayworth company, had charge of the tank, which was decorated after the Oriental manner and charmingly ornamented by a row of little Japanese kiddies in national costume, who sat on the rails of the tank looking down in solemn gravity on the scene below.

The crowd did not turn out as well on Saturday afternoon as they did at night, but the devoted little band labored mightily to sell bonds, and they sold them, too, sold them in bunches.

That night Famous Players-Lasky took charge. With their large force they were able to fill all the booths with stars, and rolled up a total of more than a hundred thousand dollars.

On Little, Lila Lee, Raymond Hatton, Wallace Reid, Vivian Martin, Constance Talmadge, Billy Elmer, Jack Mulhall, Theodore Roberts, Niles Welch—all sold bonds in the booths and helped to entertain the crowd.

McGaffey and Shirk Put On Bells.

Cecil B. De Mille made a stirring speech, and, of course, K. McGaffey and Adam Hull Shirk, the efficient Publicity Department, were there with their bells on. Sunday night was dark in Central Park, but it was not dark out in the tank town circuit, and Mary Miles Minter on Tank Liberty sold over forty thousand dollars worth of bonds down in the neighborhood of Chino Cordova and Riverside, with Roy Stewart and Josie Sedgwick on Tank Democracy running them a neck-and-neck race at Monrovia and thereabouts.

Monday night brought the Brunton studio forces to take tank in Central Park, and Dustin Farnum, Helen Keller, Kitty Gordon, Bessie Barriscale, Howard Hickman, Lillian Walker, Little Gloria Joy, Robert Brunton himself and others of the studio rolled up the biggest total of the entire drive.

Dusti William Aids Bondselling.

Dusty got right out in the crowd and hustled. He was here, there and everywhere. At ten o’clock I saw him in a booth holding a baby aloft.

"Look here," he said to the crowd. "Look at Dustin William Carter, named after me and my brother Bill. He’s only one year old, and he’s bought a bond."

And the crowd yelled their delight and came up and bought bonds for their babies. Again at midnight, while on my way to the telegraph office I stopped long enough to see Dusty helping to direct a crowd of people who had bought bonds while they were having their moving pictures taken. I stopped so long that time that I missed the owl car and had to walk home.

Helen Keller Addresses Throng.

Helen Keller, however, was the chief attraction at the tank on Monday night. Miss Keller had sent appeals to many people throughout the country to buy bonds through her, and the answers to her letters and telegrams were read to the crowd. A telegram from Secretary McCadno, another from Adolph Lewisohn, besides a numbers of others, were read.

"Thirty-five thousand dollars were added to the war chests through her efforts."

Miss Keller addressed the crowd in a touching and logical appeal for help in winning the world’s freedom by buying bonds. It was a most inspiring sight to see this woman talking in words she could not hear to a multitude she could not see—a splendid commentary on the brain of the woman herself and a tribute to her teachers who helped her overcome her handicaps.

Her words were not clearly understandable to those at a distance from the tank, but they were taken down and repeated through a megaphone for the benefit of those who could not hear. I saw a man, evidently a deaf mute, reading the words as they fell from the speaker’s lips, and translating them in the finger language of the deaf to his woman companion. Sweet are the uses of adversity—at times.

Tuesday I went a-rubbering in Studio Land. At Brunton I saw a fine big set representing a French chateau, and nearby a number of vine-covered cottages, to be used by Kitty Gordon in her new play, "A Nurse’s Story." All very fine and very realistic, but not a player in sight, but over on the stages the company was working on interiors, and Kitty Gordon herself being directed in a scene by Wallace Worsley.

Maho Hamilton, Wedgwood, Newell, J. J. Dowling, T. D. Crittenden, Capt. Leslie T. Peacocke and Vera Beresford were also in the cast, but they were marking time until Miss Gordon’s scene should be finished.

I met Al Cohn, who used to be Mary Pickford’s personal representative, and is now working with Jimmie Young, who is getting ready to put on a smashing big twelve-reel production. Al said things would start going in about two weeks.

That night at the tank Mack Sennett and his filmmakers held the fort and entertained the crowd with some of the best free comedy it had ever seen.

Murray Shoots Turpin Abaft the Turret.

Charlie Murray was the announcer, and he started off by introducing Ben Turpin as the greatest cock-eyed comedian in the world, and then to show what a soldier does with guns he shot Ben just abaft of the turret—on the tank—and Ben did one of his best comedy falls.

Louise Fazenda, "the kitchen lady," made a few well-chosen remarks that were received with great delight by the crowd. Myrtle Leigh, a reporter, and Ford Sterling and Chester Conklin, without his walrus mustache, also spoke, and Mack Sennett made quite a lengthy and amusing allusion to himself and his players, including Sennett's dog Teddy, hustled for bond sales and put them over in great shape.

Wednesday I went out and watched Sherwood MacDonald, of the Mission Productions, working on a film with the pleasing title of "Send Him Away with a Smile." Little Gloria Joy has the leading part and Charles Spere the role of her brother, who goes away to war "with a smile."

Eugene Ford was the child's mother, Doris Lee the ingenue, and Frank Whitson, who villainized in the new Broncho Billy films, was there as the heavy.

MacDonald is one of the most patient of directors, and worked hard to get a little fuzzy white dog to go to a window at the proper time and in the right way.

Gloria Poses for Rubberneck Man.

And little Gloria Joy, the kid, is a devotee. She posed for a little picture for the "rubberneck" man just as nice as you please.

Julian Eltinge and his leading lady, Alma Francis, helped the bond sale at the theater, and their appearance was a striking costume consisting of a gray cloth coat, form-fitted with skirts reaching just below the pistol pockets, and a pair of pants and a waistcoat—referred to as "vest" in Mo.—of the same material.

Purchasers of bonds that night got to appear in moving pictures with Mr. Eltinge, who had his shirt sleeves turned up to the calves of his legs, and was twenty-five and thirty in a bunch, marched past the star and shot with the movie camera as they shook hands with him.

Thursday, up and betimes, as the late Sam'l Pepys was wont to say in describing his peregrinations, and out to the Hawthorne studios, where William Worthington was directing Susse Haya-kawa, in the role of a district attorney, in a dramatic courtroom scene.

Hernandez Has Important Role.

Talk about atmosphere; there is no little, or no big thing, in that courtroom, the etiquette thereof, or any other of the many capacious critics could fault with. Ogden Crane was the judge, and George Hernandez had an important part, but I got him mixed up with a reporter and the prisoner at the bar, so I am not going to say which he was, but George was as good as usual in the role.

Chilliwack, who told me about killing the deer, and Ike St. John, who is going to join the army and kill some Huns.

Dropped out of this place into a Bessie C. Irvin ride, which to again quote the late Sam'l, is "hard by." Saw Bessie all diked out in a cowboy costume making laughable stuff for her new play, "Happy Days." She was ably supported by Howard Hickman, directing and getting as many laughs at Bessie's action in her chaps and spurs as the rest of us who stood by and watched.

That night the Pathe crowd was at the theater. Fred Ward, Ruth Roland, Bebe Daniels, Harold Lloyd, George Larkin, Baby Marie Osborne, Franklyn Farnum, and all of the other Pathe companies. Fannie Ward made a very fine performance in all of her points and periods. Bebe Daniels came in for a lot of attention, and the whole affair was one of the most success nights of the week, with a fine fat total of bond sales.

Friday night was to have Ince night, and the entire studio was on tip-toe with expectation, when late in the afternoon came the proclamation from the health department forbidding all public meetings and gatherings because of Spanish "flu."

FOX PICTURES FOR FIGHTING MEN.

Seven William Fox Productions have been selected by the War and Navy departments' commissions on training camp activities, to be shown to soldiers and sailors in training. These pictures are listed in the latest war service bulletin issued by the commission from its offices in 130 West Twenty-second street, New York, and were chosen from the lists of the National Board of Review.

In Bulletin No. 5 lists two Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons, "Accident Attorneys" and "At the Front."

Educational Players Go South.

On the final lap of their picture-taking expeditions the Educational's "Romance of Coal" players returned on October 5 to the West Virginia mining fields, where the picture was begun in July last. The objective is the former location at Omar, near Logan, West Virginia, after a week at which they will make the final "takes" of the picture mid mountain and river scenes near Charleston, the capital of the state. In the cast are Hugh Thompson, J. H. Gilmore, Stephen Grattan, Tom Burrough, Stephen Carr, Henri Reif Otte, J. J. Dunn and L. F. Kennedy.

Army Designates S. B. Lust to Teach Maimed Soldiers

SIDNEY B. LUST, of the Super Films Attractions, Inc., of Washington, has been designated by the Surgeon General of the Army to open schools of instruction in motion picture operating, as part of the duties of the Surgeon General's office, as in any of the Army hospitals where the work of rehabilitation is being carried on. For some weeks past Mr. Lust has been working on a program with War Department officials. Since the announcement of the proposed plans first appeared in these columns a number of officers have written the Government from exhibitors everywhere, asking to take crippled soldiers and give them employment as operators, etc.

Mr. Lust has volunteered his services for part time to arrange for the installation of necessary equipment and instruction in motion picture machine operation in Walter Reed General Hospital, General Hospital No. 1, at Fort McHenry, Baltimore, Md., and in other hospitals at a later date, to extend the work.

There is no appropriation, however, upon which the Surgeon General's office can draw for funds to carry on this work, and to this end Mr. Lust has invited the projection machine manufacturers to donate machines for this purpose for the duration of the war.

Instruction in these hospitals is under the immediate charge of a chief education officer, who will, according to a letter addressed to him by the War Department, will be that of adviser to these officers relative to whatever pertains to the instruction in motion picture operating. The War Department has expressed its appreciation to Mr. Lust for what he is doing, and has asked him further to furnish the names of expert operators in Class 1A for limited service who may be induced into the army as instructors.

"Hearts of the World" Doubles Up.

So great has been the success of D. W. Griffith's American propaganda play, "Hearts of the World," that the Knickerbocker Theatre, New York City, that the producer is compelled to seek another playhouse to accommodate the demand for tickets. "Hearts of the World," which opened Monday, October 21, "Hearts of the World" will begin a special engagement at the Standard Theatre, Broadway and Ninetieth street, where the up-town playgoers will have an opportunity to see the production over which Mr. Griffith spent eighteen months in the making. The fact that "Hearts of the World," which is now being mounted in New York adds to the interest in the acquiring of a second theatre to take care of the vast audiences that have been attracted by it.

Test War Cameras at Vitagraph Studio.

The Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn is being used as a testing ground for the new battle-line motion picture cameras which the Government is using in war work. Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has placed at the lieutenant's disposal all the facilities of the Brooklyn plant for use in his work.
Epidemic of Influenza Darkens Chicago Houses

PENING the abatement of Chicago’s epidemic of Spanish influenza every theatre in the city closed its doors Tuesday night, November 15, 1918, to the Chicago City Health Commissioner, John Dill Robertson. The action was taken at the instance of the special emergency commission created to direct defensive measures against the spread of the disease after prolonged deliberation. Peter J. Schaefer of Jones, Linick and Schaefer, participated in the interview.

The result is a condition which reminds older theatrical men of the weeks that followed the Iroquois Theatre fire. Many exhibitors are facing serious financial losses which may amount to bankruptcy. A very few welcomed the closing order as the best possible solution to the losing business to which they were already paying a heavy toll on account of the disease. In almost all cases theatre employees and professionals are suffering severely.

A condition which accepts the commission’s measure cheerfully is evident on the part of the greater number, however, and many are taking advantage of their leisure to work, might and main, for the Liberty. Loan. Bond posters and loan propaganda have replaced announcements of attractions in front of nearly every theatre, and a number are using their electric signs to flash Liberty Loan appeals. Fully half of the exhibitors, Moreover, are continuing their accustomed advertising space in the newspapers with pleas for the purchase of bonds.

The decision of the commission to permit the holding of church services, however, has caused a certain amount of alarm among agents in bond selling. The decision is not, however, the result of the commission’s desire to encourage church attendance, but rather because the average theatre nowadays is far better equipped than the average church with hygienic devices. Motion pictures, furthermore, it is felt, have played a not inconsiderable part in the maintenance of war time morale and in the furtherance of Government propaganda.

The committee scarcely realizes, I think, the far-reaching effects of the step it has taken with regard to the theaters,” Mr. Schaefer says. “It means much to the motion picture industry and theatrical business, and, furthermore, it means a serious diminution in Chicago’s total purchase of Liberty Bonds, since the theatres were the most effective agents, and the commission is disposed to reopen at the earliest possible moment in accordance with its view of the case, however, and we can do no more than hope that the epidemic will be sufficiently lessened in a short time to justify speedy action.”

Film exchanges are making a valiant attempt to retain their staffs, though for the most part at reduced salaries. Pathe and the George Kleine service alone so far have announced an intention of paying full salaries to their employees. A letter from the New York office received Wednesday by F. R. Rogers, of Pathe, carries instruction that salaries are to be maintained at 100 per cent., no matter how long the epidemic continues. With Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Iowa theatres closed, activity of most of the exchanges is at a minimum.

The Orpheum and Castle theatres, among others, are putting in the time with redecorating and repairs. Venti-lating systems also are being overhauled in anticipation of a speeded handling of the closing order, and Chicago theatres are likely to be safer than some Chicago homes hereafter as a consequence.

Dr. Robertson is unwilling as yet to set any date for a possible reopening. Such action, he says, depends entirely on the progress of the disease. It is hoped, however, that the order may come within a week.

Chicago Film Division

CHICAGO Film men, oversubscribed their quota for the Fourth Liberty Loan, $50,000, Thursday afternoon, with two days remaining before the end of the drive in which to solicit. Under the leadership of J. L. Friedman of Celebrated Players, chairman of the Division of Films of the Liberty Loan Committee, they reached their quota Wednes-day afternoon, at 5 p.m., and the subscription of $50,000 sent in by George Kleine and his employees Thursday morning brought the total to $1,250,000.

Mr. Kleine’s subscription was the latest exchange for exhibitor, Watterson R. Rothacker and the employees of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company bought $10,500 worth of bonds, and several exchanges approached that amount. The American Film Company and its employees subscribed $4,500 to the loan.

Mr. Friedman and his assistants are confident the final day of the drive will see a $2,000,000 subscription to the credit of the trade in Chicago.

Government to Distribute “Relatives and Sweethearts”

ARRANGEMENTS are complete for the Chicago Herald-Examiner’s “Relatives and Sweethearts” film, which is to carry glimpses of the folks at home to Chicago boys in France. Others are expected to succeed suitably to previous instruction gathered by groups in Grant Park, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday afternoons under the direction of Rex Weber, where camera men from the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company took the films. In accordance with a telegram received Wednesday, the Committee on Public Information, Division of Films, will undertake the distribution of the film in France. The picture is to be made free of charge to everybody who participates, and following its final showing in France it will be cut and the portions showing the interests of the Liberty Loan and an instruction a week will be left with their proper regiments.

Donnellan of Minneapolis Goes to Chicago for Mutual

SAN DONELLAN, for the past year branch manager for Mutual at Minneapolis, has been appointed manager of Mutual’s Chicago branch, succeeding the late E. H. Duffy. Mr. Donnellan, generally accounted one of the leading exchange men in the entire industry, has had a unique and varied career. His ability, initiative and personality have brought to him a reputation in both the exchange and the production business, and no one present at the meeting of the motion picture business covers a period of less than four years.

He has been a salesman out of the Seattle branch of V. L. S. E., has edited V. L. S. E. “Pals,” was with the Seattle Triangle Exchange, and in Denver put across the “Seven Deadly Sins” for McClure. About a year ago Donnellan decided Mutual and Minneapolis looked like a winning combination.

L. B. Brown, former branch manager for Mutual at Cairo, Ill., and prior to that assistant manager at St. Louis, has been appointed branch manager for Mutual at Kansas City, succeeding I. F. Mantzke. Mr. Mantzke has been appointed branch manager at Minneapolis, succeeding Mr. Donnellan.

Mark Pickford Goes West Again

Mary Pickford spent three days at the Blackstone Hotel here a week ago. She was on her way to New York in the interests of the Liberty Loan and an important contract which she has been making up her mind to sign for some time. A slight illness on her own part and the arrival of her mother on the way to California to see Lottie, who is said to be seriously ill, changed the star’s plans. She left for Los Angeles Wednesday night with her mother.

Nehls Visits Santa Barbara Studios

R. R. Nehls, general manager for the American Film Company left for American’s Santa Barbara studios in California October 17. Exigencies arising from the difficulty of obtaining “extras” at the Santa Barbara studios following the government restriction of such hiring to government employment bureaus, of which there are none south of Los Angeles, made the trip necessary. Nehls has been impressed with the American’s executive and production policies, which have been made as a result of Mr. Nehls’ trip.

Chicago Briefs of the Week

The only theatre in Chicago to remain open under the eye of the city health commissioner last week was the “Democracy,” owned by Bablan & Katz. They built it after all their other houses were closed for use in the Liberty Loan drive. It makes the tour of the loop every day by truck and from it, various Stars of Monte Carlo, Whiteside and other stars of current productions make their loan appeals. The theatre has been the means of selling thousands of dollars’ worth of bonds since its erection Tuesday.

Metro’s Screen Classics and program departments have grown respectively to such dimensions that each is to have a manager of its own. M. C. Hughes, formerly of Montreal and Boston will head the program department in Chicago, C. E. Smith of the Chicago exchange will have supervision of the Screen Classics.

Universal executives and film men in the Chicago offices took advantage of their forced vacation to go fishing. A party of eighteen left the home of L. L. Leserman, general sales manager, October 21, 1918, for a few days’ fishing on Buzzards Bay, Long Island. Mr. Leserman, S. J. Goldman, Morris Hellman and Irving Mack.

At Tuchman, head of Universal’s sale and purchasing department, stopped in Chicago last week with an eye to installing new efficiency measures. He is making a tour of Universal exchanges for that purpose as a result of the Government’s plea for conservation in production and distribution materials.

The lobby of the Pastime theatre, 66 West Madison street, has been open all the final week for Liberty Loan meetings. Manager E. J. Barrett reported $3,700 in bonds sold Wednesday, Thursday and Friday in the Pastime lobby with $18,000 for Friday’s sales alone. Four Minute men and songsters from the music publishing houses supplied the patriotic inspiration. Mrs. A. C. Weymouth provided the refreshments. A special concession from the Fuel Administration permitted illumination night and day for the purpose.

William S. Hart arrived here Saturday morning to help in Chicago’s final drive for its loan quota. He spoke at Mandel Brothers’ department store and at the Hamilton club in the afternoon and at several evening mass meetings.

Mrs. Schley To Be Official Reviewer.

The opportunity to accomplish a service, and do it well, is being used by Mrs. Edna Rovell Schley, who has been connected with the Universal as chief of its reading department, to accept a call from Washington to serve as a member of the board of cinemas review, with the object of eliminating any matter likely to offend allies of the United States and anything that may lead to reversal of the exodus from the houses. It is reported that there will act as a member of the board of cinemas review, with the object of eliminating any matter likely to offend allies of the United States and anything that may lead to reversal of the exodus from the houses. It is reported that Schley is at Coronado taking a much needed vacation. It is understood that Los Angeles will be the headquarters of the board.

THE families and friends of sailor boys in Greater New York assembled at the Fulton Theatre, on invitation of Lieutenant William Balaban, U. S. N., on Sunday evening, October 20, to witness the presentation of a six-reel subject, entitled “The Making of a Sailor,” produced by the I. B. B. division of the Bureau of Navigation, under the direction of Lieutenant Hawks. The feature lived square up to the high-minded aims and environment of Uncle Sam’s sailor from the time he “signs up” until he becomes a full-fledged and active unit in victory’s marine forces.

Every detail is pictured with impressing reality. The scenes embody all of the drilling and schooling of the recruit, together with sidelights upon preparations that have been made for his well-being and future. By the time he “signs off” for his relatives is provided for in regular transmission to the sailor’s loved ones.

Life in training school is followed by pictures depicting the sailor’s life on shipboard. There are drills and exercises, games and lessons; the routine of work and play being fully demonstrated by fledglings and graduate sailor boys in interesting detail. Lieutenant Hawks has taken his staff of photographers to many locations in Washington, New-port, and on the high seas, and the result has been a wealth of pictures in the photographic division in demonstrating that they “know the ropes” of picture production as well as they do those of the ships they sail.

Numerous singing and dancing specialties were provided incidental to the film showing. These specialists were all drawn from the navy; some from ships and others from the Navy Yard and Ellis Island. The music for the occasion was furnished by the Recruiting Band from the Union Square “bat-tleship”—and a andandy time “was had by all.”

Universal Makes Fuel Picture.

Harry Levey, manager of the industrial department of the Universal, announces the successful completion of the fourth short made for the Fuel Administra-tion Department of the Government. The films are now in Dr. Garfield’s hands, and will shortly be shown under official auspices throughout the nation.

They are intended materially to assist in the conservation of coal by showing the public the cost of careless firing. So entertainingly is the visual appeal treated that it is to be without ostensible preachment.

Among the startling facts brought out are that industrial plants alone have been wasting fifty million tons of coal per year; that homes which used to burn only one hundred years’ old have been reduced to less than 100 per cent. American, derogatory to the Government’s interests or inspired by pro-enemy propagandists. The case of “The Spirit of 76” is the reason for the Government’s establishing the cinema board, it is said. Mrs. Schley is at Coronado taking a Bans “Uncle Tom’s Cabin,”

Fearing Race Disturbance

MANAGER CARSON BRADFORD of the Strand Theatre, Nashville, received an altogether unexpected disappointment just prior to the closing of his local motion picture houses to curb the influenza epidemic when Mayor William Gupton came forward with the announcement that Uncle Tom’s Cabin, which had been exhibited there owing to the danger of inciting race trouble. Despite all protests, the mayor demanded that the picture be stopped, and this was done after it had been shown for three days to large and appreciative houses, which seemed to find no fault with the picture. In explanation of his decision, the mayor said that he did not consider it wise to allow the showing of any play that would tend to intimidate the colored people. After viewing “Uncle Tom’s Cabin,” he said, he became convinced that the production would have such an effect.

Nashville exhibitors have never received what they considered full justice from municipal officials. A reaction of conservatives who dominate things in that city. Their opposition to Sunday pictures, which were proved by vote to be desired by neighborhoods of the theatre-going public, elicited much criticism. The pot is beginning to simmer again, however, and the passing of a few weeks may see a resumption of the fight.

Walter Hiers Engaged by Ince.

Walter Hiers, an actor of character roles and light comedy, has been engaged by D. W. Ince, manager of the Paramount pictures. He will make his first appearance with Dorothy Dalton in a picture to be released about holiday time. Mr. Hiers appeared in "The Mysterious Miss Terry" and also with Jack Pickford in "Seventeen." Hiers was born in 1893, and received his education at Savannah and in Peck-skill. His war experience has been confined to vaudeville, but he has had a rather lengthy career in pictures. Inasmuch as he is in some ways an outcast, he is known for many humorous parts on the "fat boy" order.

Metro to Make Mostly Comedies.

As a relief from the mental burdens of the war Metro has decided to provide the majority of its stars with comedies. Already two plays of this character are being photographed, and others are being prepared by the company’s large staff of scenario writers for other stars. While each play will be a comedy, cheerful in tone and packed with action and wholesome pathos, great care is being taken to select stories widely different in theme.

The first of these, "The Spender," by Bullock and Hering, will now being photographed at Metro’s West Coast studios in Hollywood.

E. S. Flynn, of Minneapolis, formerly of Fox, is now in New York. He says Minneapolis is closed, but St. Paul is open and crowds ‘em in.

Second Lieutenant H. Clark Mooney, who was manager of the Theatre departatre, of Brooklyn, and associated with the Big T., was seen on Broadway in uniform.

ASKS CONGRESS FOR MORE FILM MONEY
War Department Submits Supplemental Appropriation to Cover Expanding Picture Activities

UPPLEMENTAL appropriations for the continuance of a number of moving picture activities have been asked of Congress by the War Department, several million dollars having been requested that the picture program of the department might be continued.

The Signal Corps, it was declared at hearings recently held by a House sub-committee in Washington, would require an increase of $631,000, to make up some vital war activity and illustrates how successful results are obtained.

Following the date of the initial release, which will shortly be Greenlighted by Dennis J. Sullivan, manager of domestic distribution, it is expected that one of these pictures will be issued every week.

The direct title of the first of the new series is "When Your Soldier's Hit," it pictorializes the wonderful efficiency of special treatment and field hospital corps, by showing how fast aid detail goes forward behind the fighting line, how wounded men are rescued and taken to the advanced dressing station, then passed on to the field hospital, and finally to a place of safety.

The first exposition of the work of the Field Hospital Corps that has been produced for the screen.

The five succeeding pictures are: "The Bath of Bullets," showing the use of the German gas, "Their Last Round," "AIDS and Hand Grenades," "Wings of Victory," a picturization of the actual progress made in the air war in the United States; "Making the Nation Fit," a Walter Camp exposition of how men and women are reaching physical perfection by war-time training; The lesser-known sister of the side of the great gunnery foundries, where the artillery and munitions for crushing the Hun's are made, and a picture for the cavalry and artillery horses, which still do their bit in the war, despite tractors, trucks and tanks. It is entitled "Horses That Wage War," and has a singularly effective appeal.

Miller to Represent Mayer.

Bernard Miller, who has for the past year been secretary to Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has resigned his position as assistant to the president in the Louis B. Mayer organization, which has just opened offices at 2 West Forty-fifth street, although it was through him that the playpath business but one year, he has proved himself a highly efficient aid an executive of marked ability. He will have virtual charge of the New York office and will be Mr. Mayer's personal representative in New York City. His experience in handling contracts and purchasing playpaths will stand him in good stead in the Mayer organization.

Shipyards Filmed Strong in West.

One of the surprises in the distribution of "Our Bridge of Ships," by the Gene Mayer Film Company, has been the great demand for the picture in the inland Western states. When the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, organized for the purpose of promoting and illuminating two-reel picture of the ever-growing activities in American shipyards and the rapid bridging of the Atlantic, such films were supposed the coast cities would be interested to a greater degree than the inland towns. It has been found, however, that while the eastern cities have been strong for the picture, the interest in and around the plains cities and the mountain towns, has been remarkable.

Government Announces Series of Two-Reelers

A SERIES of two-reel pictures, under the general title "For Life and Liberty," is announced by the Division of Films Committee on Public Information. These two-reelers are now in the laboratory and three more are in the hands of the directors and cameramen.

The stories for the series were prepared by Rufus Steels, scenario editor for the Division of Films, and the tire work of preparing the pictures is being done under Government supervision, each picture taking up some vital war activity and illustrates how successful results are obtained.

Following the date of the initial release, which will shortly be Greenlighted by Dennis J. Sullivan, manager of domestic distribution, it is expected that one of these pictures will be issued every week.

How Managers Meet the Country-Wide Condition Now Confronts Them

Ralph Ruffner, the hardest hit. For nineteen weeks he had been booming "The House of Hate" serial, and just when he expected to clean up with the last installment he had to close with a single day showing. He took advantage of the wording of the ordinance to keep open until midnight to give all a chance to get out of the climax of the serial, but in his advertising he takes it naturally the closing down. Even before the closing order came he noticed a falling off in the attendance, and he ran three comedy slides to lessen the tension. They may help others.

Old Mother Hubbard went to the cupboard To get her poor dog a stew. For the stew had the Spanish Flu. Little Miss Muffett sat on a tuffet; The tuffet was covered with dew; Along came a spider and sat down beside her, And they both caught the Spanish Flu.

Hark! Hark! the dogs do bark The Flu is coming to town. "We'll close the guns until it goes," said the hilt-th board.

The poetical value is slight, but used on the slide and in advertising they will do to renalize.

The American, in the same town, arranged a demonstration. A. C. Raleigh took inspiration from the statement of the local traditions that the good snowstorm would stop the epidemic. He bought up the local supply of confetti and threw this into the intake, showing by the course of the paper particles how thoroughly the fans reached all parts of the house. The demonstration came too late to avert closing, but it will help in the first few days following the coming epidemic.

He also distributed small throwaways in which he announced that following the course of the disease there would be an epidemic of good pictures, saved up in the interval, and that meanwhile he was going to clean house.

Neither house attacked the order or questioned its wisdom, but the situation cleared, closed for the safety of the public and made the best of a bad situation. It is all anyone can do.

They had prevented a measure first, but if they do not enforce it, they close with a good grace. It won't help any to complain and it assuredly will not have a good after-effect.

Division of Films Departments Merged

Director Charles S. Hart, of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, announces that the department of feature films, by the management of which George Bowles has resigned to go to France, and the community section, recently under the direction of Ryerson, has been merged, and will henceforth be conducted as a part of the department of domestic distribution, under the direct supervision of Colonel C. S. Trowbridge, for several months associated with the community section, has been named as manager of the merged departments.

Changes at Lasky Studio.

Through rearrangement of the technical and business management of the Famous Players-Lasky West Coast studio, Milton E. Hoffman, studio general manager, has been relieved of many of the details of production, which have been assumed by Fred Kley, who now becomes studio manager. Mr. Hoffman will have broader scope for the supervision of all work and will act in an advisory capacity to settle adjudicating matters of importance.

Frank E. Woods is now definitely in charge of all phases of cutting, editing, etc., of productions, as supervisor of productions for the West Coast.

Perret Engages Mme. Blache.

Leonce Perret announces that he has secured the services of Mme. Alice Blache to direct a series of pictures under his supervision. Mme. Blache began her career as an assistant to the director with the Gaumont Company when that firm started business in Paris. The first Blache picture for Mr. Perret will be from a scenario written by himself but not yet named.

The star, whose work will be supervised by Mme. Blache will be Dolores Cassinelli.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC!

Daring to co-operate with the Local Health Authorities to prevent the spread of "SPANISH INFLUENZA" in Harrisburg and Eldorado, and to safeguard our patrons, and for the protection of this community, we make the following suggestions and requests:

1. Don't attend mass meetings if you are not absolutely necessary.
2. If you are one of the important things in preventing a Russian battle. But what about the people who will attend these things? You be懂得 what you should reserve these for their own use and not for others to attend? This is the best way to avoid possible epidemic.
3. Don't go through church while it is in progress.
4. Don't get inside, but be used. Protect yourself and help to protect others.
5. Have a cold when your friends, as usual, go to see you in the theater. Cannot be prevented. This is the best way to avoid possible epidemic. Others who are more important and others who are not, but if it is not necessary to attend, stay at home.
6. If you are you, and your doctor says you are completely well, if you have been, stay in until the epidemic is over. This is the best way to avoid possible epidemic.

Spanish influenza—What it is and how it should be treated

Spanish influenza is a serious disease, and it is important that everyone should be thoroughly informed about it in order to prevent its spread. The disease is caused by a virus, which is highly contagious. It is characterized by fever, cough, and weakness, and can be transmitted through the air or by contact with infected persons.

Always call a doctor at the first symptoms of the disease. Early treatment is important in preventing complications. Doctors and hospitals are working hard to prevent the spread of the disease, but everyone must do their part to help.

Spanish influenza is a serious disease which can be prevented by proper hygiene and medical care. Everyone should be informed about the disease and take appropriate measures to avoid its spread.

SHERRY TO RELEASE THROUGH GENERAL

Merger of Offices Into Those of Older Concern, for Conservation Reasons—Sherry Not Absorbed

TAKING effect forthwith, the William L. Sherry Company has been transferred to the General Film Company in so far as the selling and physical distribution of the product is concerned. The Sherry Service is not absorbed by the General Company, and will retain its identity and home offices as heretofore. The new arrangement was prompted by reasons of conservation.

In accordance with the agreement the branch offices of the Sherry service will be discontinued at once, and will be taken over by the local branches of the General Film Company in fourteen cities outside of New York where the Sherry service has been represented. The State of New York, Northern New Jersey and Western Connecticut will continue to be served with the Sherry program as heretofore from the Sherry home office and exchange at 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

"I am a bit east," said Mr. Sherry, "to give my full time and attention to the quality of the Sherry program, and the efficiency of the Sherry service now that the plant is handled. The program is placed in the hands of a distributing organization that has facilities for handling films.

"By this arrangement a considerable load is taken off my shoulders. Of late, I have been severely hampered in my efforts to give genuine service because of the scarcity of men, able men, to carry on the work. The Sherry branch office has had much demand upon the man power of the nation that men of every kind are scarce everywhere.

"The war has made such demands upon the man power of the nation that men of every kind are scarce everywhere, and I have secured able lieutenants, only to have them called away by the greater call of war. As a consequence of this condition, I have found that much of my time that I should give to the operation of the service has been given over to keeping my organization intact. Hence my arrangement with the General Film Company and its distributing organization, which leaves me free to devote my entire time to the matter of service."

"According to my present plans, I expect to cover the entire territory two or three times a year and meet in person every exhibitor who does or does not use the William L. Sherry Service."

The arrangement with the General Film Company will bring about no change in the present Sherry program, except for the addition of one or two more stars. The present consists of the following contributing producing companies: Frank A. Keene Production, featuring Cathe- rine Calvert; DeLuxe Pictures, featuring Doris Kenyon; Golden West Produc- ing Company, featuring G. M. Ander- son ("Broncho Billy"); Harold J. Binney Productions, featuring Vangie Valentine, and the Burlinghams' Trasac Pictures.

HARRY REICHENBACH BEREAVED

During the past week Harry Reichen- bach, president of the firm of Reichenbach, was bereaved by the death of his father, Charles Reichenbach, and his brother, Fred Reichenbach, who was employed by the Leslie-Judge Corpora- tion. The family has been unable thus far to reach Harry by cable. Mrs. Irving Reichenbach is ill from pneumonia that as yet she has not become forme of her husband’s death. Two other brothers of Mr. Reichenbach are in the service—L. H. with the American Expeditionary Force, now with the 31st Infan- try at Camp Gordon, Atlanta. The remaining brother, Walter, fortunately was in New York at the time, and is making every possible endeavor to com- municate with Harry.

WILLIAM BRANDT SERIOUSLY ILL

William Brandt, one of Brooklyn’s most prominent exhibitors, has been seriously ill from influenza during the past ten days. For three days in the week of October 14 his temperature re- mained at 104, febrile at 100. It was believed that the crisis was passed, and that “Bill” would be able to leave his bed in two weeks.

Goldwyn Will Open Up

Coast Plant November 1

GOLDFYNN made the move last week and transplants its studio activities from New York to Los Angeles. A load of properties and equipment are on the way to Los Angeles, and on November 1 the company will carry on there. The production of the big Goldwyn plant on the outskirts of Los Angeles.

Tom Moore has been at work in the West for too many days. Under the direction of Harry Beaumont, Mr. Moore and his leading woman, Ora Carewe, enacted several scenes of "Go West, Young Man!" thus giving Gold- wyn’s only major star the distinction of being the first to work on the new lot.

Mae Marsh left New York October 19 for the new studio. Her next produc- tion will be the first to be started fol- lowing the completion of the Moore picture. Mabel Normand, who has just completed "A Perfect 36" will follow shortly.

Madge Kennedy has completed "Prim- rose," written for her by Cosimo Hamil- ton, at Fort Lee, and will have a well- earned vacation of several weeks be- fore she goes to the Coast.

Geraldine Farrar, whose fourth Gold- wyn picture is nearing completion at Fort Lee, will not go West until after the closing of the opera and concert season in April.

Hobart Henley and the Rex Beach Company, including Frank McIntyre, whose film "Giant of the Plains" finished earlier than was expected, had several weeks on Mr. Beach’s unpublished story. "Too Fat to Fight," have finished, and Mr. Henley will go to the Coast as soon as he has cut the new pro- duction after which he will leave in late November. Pauline Fred- erick, who is shortly to begin on her Goldwyn starring career, will follow in a fortnight.

Samuel Goldfishh, president of Gold- wyn, does not expect to go until about the middle of November. Administra- tive affairs of the company will keep him in New York until work is well under way at the new studio.

The scenario department, in charge of H. R. Durant, will remain in New York, but the resulting department will be moved to the Coast.

The company’s home office organization, quartered at 16 East Forty-second street, will remain intact in the East. District, however, home office accounting, advertising and publicity will continue to be handled from New York.

Exhibitors Enter Protest on Film Tax Amendment

A LLEGGING that the manufacturers’ association and the exhibitors’ association broke its agreement with the exhibitors’ branch of the same organization in filing a substitute clause for the Manufacturers’ Exhibit Amendment, the Senate Finance Committee calculated to place the burden of the tax film upon exhibitors, the exhibitors’ branch has, through its committee, of which Alfred S. Black is chairman.

The substitute clause complained of reads as follows:

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO SECTION 900 OF THE CIRCUS:

After the word “producer” in the pre- ceding amendment, insert the word: “producer” in the first line Sec- tion 900. Income Taxes, insert the word “distributor.”

Amend subdivision (5) of Section 900 to read as follows:

(5) On positive motion picture film con- taining pictures or real andMenu, and sold, leased, or licensed to an exhibitor for exhibition purposes, the United States, 5 per cent. of the price collected for such film, so sold, leased, or licensed: said 5 per cent. of the price paid by the exhibitor, vendor, lessee, or licensor, provided, howev- er, that no more than 10 per cent. of the manu- facturer, producer, distributor, or im- porter, carrying on a business, shall in- taining a picture ready for projection shall himself exhibit such positive motion picture film, except that the tax shall be deemed an exhibitor, and said 10 per cent. shall be calculated on the rental value of such positive motion pic- ture film at the time and place where ex- hibited.

Replying to this the exhibitors’ branch enters the following protest:

"We protest against the phraseology of the proposed amendment whereby it places all of said tax upon the exhibitor. We also protest because the words cannot stand the percentage as pro- vided in the present bill, and we earnestly reiterate that the exhibitors would be doubly overburdened as stated. The present form already is too heavy upon the producer. We wish also to call your particular attention to the fact that the manufacturers other than the income tax to which all taxable personal properties. Are, are subject to additional taxation, all the burden of vari- ous taxes being placed upon the exhib- itor.

We believe that all branches of an industry should be treated equitably, and if, after considering our protests, Congress passes the new tax which will tax upon the motion picture industry that said tax be equitably distributed over the different branches of that same business."

A view of the very serious condition the exhibitors of the United States now face is positive. To be sure, in the face of the difficulties, it is difficult to emphasize that excess burden of taxation should be placed on the exhibitors. It is a common experience that much to the great disadvantage of the business of the Government for the reasons heretofore expressed All of all respect will be respectfully submitted on behalf of the exhibitors’ branch of the Na- tional Association of the Motion Picture Industry, the exhibitors’ branch of motion picture theatres of the United States.

HOW TO CONSERVE FILM AND MACHINE

Vice-President of United Theatre Equipment Advises Exhibitors on Vital Trade Problems

By J. H. HALLBERG

I

T is a fact not generally known that valuable film is injured and its life much shortened by improper method of operation and protection of the film after it has been delivered by the producer and film distributor to the exhibitor, and the following points are worthy of attention.

First. When a film is new and has not been specially treated, such as the ordinary positives are when delivered to the exhibitor in the manufacturer's tin under the name of "green." In explanation of this it may be stated that the emulsion on a new film, while being dry, is still in a semi-plastic state.

Due to this fact, when such film is operated through a projector or moving picture machine, the emulsion retards the film movement and produces a flake deposit upon the sprocket holes and upon the film tension shoes, as well as upon the aperture runners.

A deposit welds itself in spots upon the above mentioned parts, causing an enormous increase in friction, which must be overcome by increasing the power applied for driving the machine so as to maintain proper projection speed.

Strain Elongates Sprocket Holes.

The increase in power applied puts additional strain upon all parts of the moving picture machine, and the same time the increased friction produces an additional strain upon the sprocket holes which are being engaged by the teeth upon the sprockets of the projector. This strain in some instances elongates the sprocket holes, which, on subsequent run of the film, impairs the steadiness of the film and has a serious effect upon the film in the projector.

To overcome this condition processes are available for hardening or treating the "green" film surface, which in a great measure relieves the friction effect.

Another method which may be recommended to overcome the friction incident to the use of "green" film is to apply a set of small wicks, feeding special lubrication to the edges of the film which come in contact with the sprocket teeth and the guides in the projector, while the film is being projected. Such a method has been applied with much success in some of the film censorship exhibition rooms; but when this method of lubrication is used it is, of course, necessary to keep at least advisable, to run the film through a film cleaner before it is put back on the reel and returned to the exchange so as to remove any lubricant remaining upon the emulsion.

First Runs Hard on Film.

It is safe to estimate that 20 per cent. of the wear on the film and upon the machine takes place during the first few runs with "green" film.

Second. A film that has been abused to and worn upon films, whether new or old, and to moving picture machines takes place when overspeeding the machine. This practice is, in the writer's opinion, the cause of more film and machine trouble and introduces more waste than any other fault in the projection of films.

The normal speed of a thousand feet of film is from twelve to fifteen minutes, and when the same length of film is run in from six to ten minutes so as to enable a greater number of exhibitions within a specified time.

The strain upon the mechanism of the projector is more than doubled by such increase of speed, and the strain upon the sprocket holes and the film splices will seriously increase the friction, with consequent damage to the film.

Dowd idlers, rough stripper pins or sprocket teeth, and poorly made film splices may ruin a perfectly good film operating through the machine only once.

The use of damaged reels with sharp edges and which do not run truly are a means of much machine destruction.

Use Judgment in Lubricating.

(i) The lubrication of moving picture machines should be moderate so that a minimum amount of oil will deposit upon the film. In fact, a machine properly lubricated and cleaned will not deposit oil or dust upon the film.

(ii) In many machines in service the filling of the oil reservoirs are either worn out, rough or stuck, due to lack of attention, allowing the delicate emulsion of the film to drag along such surfaces at a high rate of speed, injuring the film.

(iii) In a properly designed, constructed, adjusted and operated projector, a film is practically absolutely safe from fire; but when the film splices are poorly made or when the machine is not properly adjusted and in proper repair, as above referred to, the hazard from fire, the accidental destruction of part or the whole of the film, is likely to follow. A film fire not only ruins a part or the whole of the film, but it also represents a considerable part of the projector.

Therefore it is reasonable to assume that great conservation in both films and machines can be practiced in most instances by very ordinary means suggested above.

Seventh. An observer in the operating or rewinding room of a theatre will in many instances find that the method of handling the film can do much injury to the emulsion.

A continuous steady speed with uniform tension packs the film gently and nicely upon the reel, whereas jerky action and overspeeding in rewinding is likely to do much damage.

In the ordinary theatres rewinding is done by hand, and can be done well and properly with little care, but in the modern theatres rewinding is now done within fireproof enclosures automatically by winders and spoolers by electric motor drive, which method should be recommended wherever possible, as it not only saves the film, but it also conserves man-power, as it saves the labour of the extra labor employed in rewinding.

The better informed operator understands and realizes the importance of the beginning of the film. He has been taught to the maker and distributor of the film.

Eighth. Conservation of carbon electrodes as used in projector lamps is achieved by using what is known as "carbon savers," which will almost cut through the stock between the perforations. Even a slightly excessive temperature in the projector will cause the perforations and injure the film. Operators should be warned on this point.

(b) A machine with a worn intermittent sprocket may destroy a perfect film by running it through only once.

(c) Worn aperture plates and excessive friction of the film by a damaged or improperly lubricated machine will seriously increase the friction, with consequent damage to the film.

(d) Worn idlers, rough stripper pins or sprocket teeth, and poorly made film splices may ruin a perfectly good film operating through the machine only once.

(e) The use of damaged reels with sharp edges and which do not run truly are a means of much machine destruction.

The conservation of carbon electrodes as used in projector lamps is achieved by using what is known as "carbon savers," which permit the burning of the carbon with a waste of only about one inch for each twelve minutes, so that the carbon saver will conserve about 60 per cent. of the carbon consumption. Carbon savers cost about $1 each, and two are required for each machine. The life of a carbon saver varies from three to twelve months, depending upon the amount of current used and the care with which the arc is handled.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has already made recommendations to the Fuel Administration, which include the permissible limiting of the amount of current to be used at the electric arc for projection, and the enforcement of the suggestion. The association will be made with the effect of conserving carbon and to increase the life of the arc lamps, lamp houses, condensing lenses, asbestos covered copper cable and copper lugs used for the maintenance of the electric arc.

Annie Russell’s Career Guarantee for Cavell Role

WHEN Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, succeeded in persuading Annie Russell to appear opposite Nurse Edith Cavell in the coming Screen Classics super-feature, “Wilson or the Kaiser?” one of the last of the great stars of the dramatic stage succumbed to the lure of the screen. Miss Russell is English by birth, and she considers her work in “Wilson or the Kaiser?” a patriotic privilege. Her husband, Oswald Yorke, is also English. She has gone overseas to do work in connection with the Y. M. C. A.

Annie Russell’s parents brought her as a child to America, first settling in Canada. It was her eighth birthday that she first appeared on the stage in Montreal, with Rose Eytinge in “Miss Multon.” Her first New York appearance was in Haverly’s juvenile opera company in “H. M. S. Pinafore.”

After a tour in the name part of “Hazel Kirke” (this being her first professional appearance) Miss Russell appeared as a young girl in the title role of “Esmeralda” at the Madison Square Theatre, New York, at the age of seventeen, making a genuine sensation. She then launched on one of the most successful careers it has ever been the privilege of an actress to enjoy. A few of the plays in which she appeared in ingenue roles were “Confusion,” “Pique,” W. S. Gilbert’s “Broken Hearts,” “Sealed Instructions,” “Engaged” and “Captain Swift.” With the production of “The New Woman,” in 1894, she became the leading ingenue roles, then joining Nat Goodwin in “A Gilded Fool,” “David Garrick,” “In Mizzoura” and “Ambition.” The actress created a fortune in “Sue,” to T. E. Peckinpah, and later playing the part in London, also repeating there another of her American successes, “Dangerfield, 95,” a one-act play.

From this time on Miss Russell was constantly before the public in successful plays. Theatregoers in both England and America will watch with interest for Annie Russell’s delineation of Nurse Edith Cavell.

Red Cross Issues Booklet.

In order to give theatre owners a complete understanding of the nature of its film issues and the circumstances under which they are available to the public the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures has prepared a large edition of booklets. Half of this edition will go to motion picture exhibitors and the other half to Red Cross chapters in the United States. In this way information about the official war work films of the American Red Cross will reach those most directly interested on either side of the distribution. The aim emphasized in this booklet is that of getting the films before the twenty-three million Red Cross members in the United States in the most direct and expeditious manner.

Director W. E. Waddell has incorporated in the booklet synopses, descriptions and reviews of the current war work films, beginning with “The Historical Fourth of July in Paris” and a forecast of other releases now in work.

Gustavus Rogers for Congress

GUSTAVUS A. ROGERS, of Rogers & Rogers, who is quite well known to the motion picture industry, has been nominated as a Democratic candidate for Congress in the Twenty-ninth district of the state of Connecticut, comprising Rensselaer, Saratoga, Washington and Warren counties.

Mr. Rogers has a residence in Warren County, where he spends a considerable portion of the year. He also has an office at Glens Falls, as well as at 66 Broadway in New York, and is connected with several of the industrial enterprises there. Ordinarily the district elects a Republican Congressman, but it is expected that Mr. Rogers will be elected. He has the backing of the national administration, and has been endorsed by the leading Democrats of the nation.

Mr. Rogers will be remembered on account of his activity in the motion picture patents suits and his being for many years the attorney for William Fox and the Fox Film Corporation. A resolution indorsing Mr. Rogers’ candidacy has been adopted by the political committee of the National Association.

October 20 Attractions

At the New York Theatres

ROALDO.—William Desmond, in the Triangle picture, “The Preacher,” was the screen star at the Rialto the week of October 16. The story is a bill of breezy western humor and is cleverly played by the entire cast. “The Triumph of Transportation,” the Animated Magazine, “The Great Vacuum Robbery” were also shown. The soloist was Lorrie Grimaldi.

Strand.—Charlie Chaplin, in his latest comedy, “Shoulder Arms,” was the leading attraction on the bill at the Strand. Another feature was the Brownie Bill picture, entitled “Shooting Mad.” The fourth Burlingame Scenic Study, “Our War Heroes Arrive in Switzerland,” the Allied War Picture, and Topical Review were included in the program. Jane Holder and Mlle. Michelot were the vocal artists.

Rivers.—“A Woman of Impulse,” a Paramount picture, is being shown by Louis K. Ansperger's play of the same name, with Lina Cavalieri featured, has the place of honor on the Rivoli program. A new Vase Departed scene, starring Marie Doro, the Official War Review and “The Rose of Wolfville” concluded the list of pictures. Alberto Bachmann and Gladys Richmond were on hand.

Eighty-first Street.—First half, Louise Glauin in “A Law Unto Herself”; second half, Fred Stone in “The Goat.”

Knickerbocker.—Griffth’s “Hearts of the World.” Thirty-fourth consecutive week.

Broadway.—“The Yellow Dog.”

Kellette Writes Loan Song

John W. Kellette, assistant director to Kenean Buel, of the Fox Film Corporation, has written a Liberty Loan song that has been accepted by the committee and was sung by several of the units as an aid to the drive. James Donahue, a newspaper man of New Haven, collaborated on the lyric, and “Kells” wrote the melody. The Misses Hazel and Mary Washburne, of Ziefeld Follies, both known to the screen, sang the number and appeared at the Green Room Theatre at Pennsylvania railroad station with Miss Mary Ziefeld on the piano. It is titled, “If You Can’t Go Across with the Doughboys, Oh, Boys, Come Across with the Dough,” and the chorus is as follows:

If you can’t go across with the doughboys, Oh! boys come across with the dough.
If you can’t go across with the dough, Make your dollars deliver the blow.
If you can’t go across every dollar you own, If you can’t go across, then, by heck! Buy a bond for the Liberty Loan.

“Kells” went all over the city handing out manuscript copies as fast as he could write them, and what he’d call an evening’s jaunt would take him from 14th street to 56th and back again to some Loan worker in the swing of the melody.

Kansas Convention Postponed. The Kansas exhibitors’ convention, to be held at Hutchinson, Kan., October 21 and 22, has been postponed on account of the present unsettled conditions.

This Week's Idiotorial.

WITH Webster filled with terse expressions of English, why should we not be idiotic? Contributing to the war-world's non-essentials? There being no echo to answer, we turn at once to Noah's Ark of Woes and find...

Industry.—The quality or habit of attention or devotion to any useful or productive industry, regardless manual or mental; earnest, steady or constant application to business.

Taking its cue from the dictionary, industry has become so generally prevalent that it has finally reached the extent of an epidemic. Despite the skill of the brainiest men the plague maintains a backbone upon the information, pursuit, employment and other synonyms for work save the task of making them in the circulating fixed movable pictures. To the credit of the captains of cameracraft let it be said that they have warded first industrious peoples in these busy war times have succeeded in fighting off the dread plague of industry.

As the M.P. industry swings idly at another understanding scene and the milk of human envy that surges through our lazy carcass curdles with joy that for a time we have become the bourgeons versenkt, because the hated phrase "industry" has been dashed, and has ceased to interest us, is large in itself: in few of the other industries, a list of which we append in the order of their importance and essentiality.

First Industry: Clam Digging and Oyster Gardening. Millions of workers are employed; the result of their efforts gladden the Adam's Apple of still more millions. It is believed the first industry...

Second Industry: Garnering Drift-wood. Lakes and creeks, the two coasts of the... industrious peoples... a stoppage...

Third Industry: Hop Picking and Berrying.—From Texas to Central New York this great industry progresses, the wave of busy-fingered industrialists starting with the advent of the Texas watermelon early in June and resting finally along the Mohawk Valley. Matters in this great industry take a vacation from late in the fall until the plentiful whistle of the whistle. The day is still and there must be a stoppage.

Fourth Industry: Fishing for Fish.—Still anotherMoney is made on the banks of the Seine in the Fifth Ward, Paris, France, this industry has spread until, in fact, it is looked upon as an industry by clam and oyster piring, the search for free stove wood and the nickel. It has been the source of more lies than all the mimeographs in capacity.

Fifth Industry: Here Discussion Enters.—Agriculture, steel and iron, railroad ing, mining, all these industries are enclosed for offers in this class. The best claim four of these occupations have for supremacy is based on continuous performance. There's always something doing on the farm—putting in the crops, taking them out and putting them in again.

Small Wonder That Highbrows Are Making the Pictures

H ERE'S a digest of the plot that held five reels together in a recent moving picture production: Telling his life story to his physician to whom he gave him to mineral water the hero leaped into the sea presumably to find it. But such was not the case. When the leper leaped into the ocean desire to live itself his desire to get to South Africa with the aid of a tramp schooner.

The leper captured another championship when the owner of a diamond mine died and left to the leaping leper and son some spurious diamonds, with which he decorated his belt. Vengefully the great leper, swimmer and leper, adorned to his belt and gave a belt to the medico who had fed him the poney mineral water.

Now, don't crow You can't have the picture to exhibit in your theatre until some time after November 9.

W. K. Architect Now Better Known.

Betty Blythe's brother-in-law, C. H. Kyson, a well known architect of the Pacific Coast, has been appointed to decorator and scenic expert for the Lasky Company. Mr. Kyson will have charge of sets and see to it that characters and interiors are in keeping with the story being filmed. He is the one who designed Miss Blythe's wedding gown.
Some Practical Pointers on Announcement Slides

It is often required to reproduce both reading matter and a photograph on the same slide, as in slide announcements for motion picture theaters. It is usually necessary that any modification, the result being either weak lettering with good reproduction of the photograph, or strong lettering and a faint photograph with clogged up shadows.

In order to obtain accurate tone rendering in the photograph and at the same time get good definition in the line portions, it has been found at the Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company that either of the following methods will give satisfactory results:

1. Assuming that the photograph and reading matter are arranged on the same card, when copying, use an emulsion similar to that of the Seed 23 plate or Eastman Commercial film, and adjust the exposure and developer so as to obtain good tone reproduction of the photograph, ignoring the letters in the line portions. When dry, block out the photograph portion of the negative with lantern slide or negative varnish, and when dry "cut" or slightly reduce the image with potassium ferrocyanide and hypos, wash thoroughly and then intensify.

If the slide is now printed on an emulsion similar to that of the Seed 23 plate, the shadow detail in the photograph will be retained providing the negative in the first place was given a full exposure.

2. Instead of proceeding as above, the photograph and reading matter may be copied separately, using a process plate for the line work and Eastman Commercial glass for the photograph, adjusting the size of the latter so that it just fits into the space allotted to it on the glass negative. After making a positive from the Eastman Commercial glass negative, a negative is obtained from which a positive can be made, that is, so as to obtain white lettering on a black ground, affix the film to the negative and use this as the master negative.

Film may be affixed to glass by means of a solution of gelatine dissolved in glacial acetic acid. By warming the acid gently it will take up an equal weight of gelatine. If the solution is too thick it should be thinned with a little acetic acid. Apply a little of the cement to the corners of the film, and when tacky press the film into position.

A third method consists in printing the line work on one slide and the photograph on a second slide, the two being bound together face to face, thus eliminating the necessity of a cover glass.

In this case it is better to print by contact in order to insure accurate registration. After setting the reading matter (reversed left to right) and a master negative of the photograph, the size of the latter being such as to leave a clear space on the positive.

In case a quantity of slides are to be made of the same subject the last method is to be preferred.

Correcting a Misunderstanding.

Through a misunderstanding it was reported in the trade press recently that the British Government was receiving a large sum from the distribution of "Fighting For Freedom," the serial being released in this country by the Universal Crofton Manufacturing Company. The fact is that the revenue is paid by the Universal Company to the Official Government Pictures, Inc., and not to the British Government.

The British Minister of Information, through its New York office, announces that it has leased the United States rights to "Fighting For Freedom" to the Universal American Company and that the British Government has no financial interest in the earnings of the pictures, although it is deeply interested in the wide distribution of the pictures among the people of the United States.

World Pictures Retaining Employees.

During the enforced layoff because of the fact that the company is keeping its office organization intact and at work in order that a resumption of its activities may not suffer through inability to keep the machine properly geared.

The scenario department shows no let-up. Stories, novels and plays are being read and passed upon. Last week Mr. Wm. Kobly, head of the scenario department, and Mr. Kohn an original story, which will be converted into a photoplay for Montagu Love and June Elvidge. Mr. Kohn has just completed his Wood's play which will be produced some time during the present season.

The sales force has been retained as the company cannot afford to lose sight of the idea of retaining its patrons. The losses growing out of the engaging of new talent is such that at least six months' revenue has been lost.

By having at least six months' reserve no loss is incurred in the engaging of new talent.

Having at least six months' reserve, the negatives of the studio in the studio no way affects the release dates on the pictures supplied by the Universal American Company. This holds good for advertising material which has been made months in advance of the required time for its distribution.

Universal to Feature Local Publicity.

Universal set into motion last week a new newspaper publicity campaign. The project is directed by Tarkington Baker, a newspaper man of broad experience, who came from Indianapolis to take up the position. The project has been under process of development for the last six months.

It is the purpose to establish intimate relations between the company's exchanges and the local press. All the newspapers of the country hereafter will be served with Universal publicity, largely through the channels of the local branches.

The material will be specially designed to meet the individual style requirements of the various newspapers. It is a typical example of the advertising material which is sent over the country visiting all the exchanges.

Hampton Del Ruth with Lehman.

Henry Lehman, vice president and general producer of Sunshine Comedies, Inc., has engaged Hampton Del Ruth, well known in Los Angeles as one of the comedy screen writers and producers. Mr. Del Ruth is busily assisting Mr. Lehman in turning out several excellent scripts, work on which already has been started.

Boone, Iowa, had its first Sunday pictures on September 29, when, despite strenuous opposition, the mayor refused to stop the showing of "Pershing's Crusaders" at the Princess Theatre.

Mutual Sells Foreign Rights to Sixteen Five-Reelers.

TWO important foreign trade transactions have been concluded during the last week by James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual Film Corporation. The rights to sixteen feature-length productions have been sold to the British Isles and South America. Both deals include the productions of the Empire All Star Corporation, which pictures are distributed and controlled by the Mutual Film Corporation.

The sale of the British rights was consummated through Frank S. Phelps, Mr. Sheldon's London agent, and the sale for South America was made through the Hamburg Import Film Company of New York.

There has been a persistent demand from England for the Ann Murdock and Fairbanks feature, as well as an increase in the popularity of these two American stage celebrities in the British Isles. The Empire productions featuring Miss Murdock include "My Fair Girl," "The Beautiful Adventure," "Outcast," "Please Help Emily," and "The Impostor." Virtually every one of these productions has been presented to the speaking stage in London, notably "Outcast" and "The Beautiful Adventure," which scored big successes. "Please Help Emily" was adapted from one of the most recent of Fairbanks successes. "The Beautiful Adventure" is originally from a French farce and "Outcast" had its premiere on the London stage.

The other Frohman plays included in the sale are "The Girl and the Judge," starring Olive Tell; "The Runaway," starring Julia Sanderson; "Her Sister," featuring Miss Tell, and "The Unseen," with Miss Tell. The Goodrich productions which have been sold include "Reputation," "A Daughter of the Islands," "Loved Him Best?", "Her Second Husband," "Queen X," and "American Maid." They are all American motion picture plays, but Miss Goodrich's popularity in London has been built in American plays.

Fairbanks Writes Another Book.

Douglas Fairbanks has written another book. The title is "Making Life Worth While." The success of his first book, "Laugh and Live," is responsible for his reputation as an author of a new volume of cheer. It is another message from the man who knows how to keep himself happy and well and is willing to pass on his experience of life. The Sphere Publishing Company over 400,000 copies of "Laugh and Live" were sold in this country.

Influenza Delays "America's Answer."

Dennis J. Sullivan, manager of domestic distribution of the Division of Films, Paramount, announces that owing to the epidemic of influenza throughout the country and the fact that in many states the prevalent disease has developed into the closing of the motion picture theatres, the release date of "America's Answer," the U. S. Official War Picture, has been changed from October 28 to November 4. The picture will simply suspend the bookings until the situation has been cleared.
All Five Select Stars Are Continuing Production

There has been no let-up in the production of Select Pictures. All five of Select's stars are at the present in the midst of production, and, therefore, the companies of Clara Kimball Young, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Alice Brady and Marion Davies are7busily engaged. As the Select product consists, with the exception of a few specials, only of feature pictures produced by Select's respective stars, the resumption of activities among the theatre of the country will find Select well prepared for the distribution of announced features.

Clara Kimball Young is busy at the Sunset Studio, Hollywood, on "The Road Through the Dark." Maud Radford Warren's clever story of the war. The leading man is Jack Holt. The picture is being directed by Edmund Mortimer.

In the same city Norma Talmadge is busy on her next Select picture, the David Belasco stage success, "The Heart of Wetona." This is an Indian story by George Scarborough. The roles of direction are in the hands of Sidney A. Franklin. Miss Talmadge's leading man again will be Harry Mortimer.

Constance Talmadge's next Select picture, in which she is presented by Pathe, is "A Lady's Name." This is an adaptation by Julia Crawford Ivers from the famous stage play of the same name by Cyril Harcourt. This piece is being directed by Walter Edwards while Miss Talmadge's leading man will be Harrison Ford.

New York City and its environs furnish the background for Alice Brady's forthcoming "In the Hollow of Her Hand," and the one which will follow this, on which Miss Brady is at present working, "In the Hollow of His Hand." Both of these stories have been adapted and directed by Charles Maline. David Powell is Miss Brady's leading man in "In the Hollow of Her Hand," while A. J. Herbert plays the opposite role in "In the Hollow of His Hand."

According to Julius Steger, who is directing Marion Davies in her forthcoming Select picture, "The Belle of New York," a number of the interiors already have been made, while sites are being selected for the exterior shots. Raymond Bloomer will be Miss Davies' leading man. The Palmer role is in the able hands of Christian Rub.

Under the circumstances, and in view of the several productions which each star has ahead of her in her respective Select series, it would be next to impossible to curtail production work and keep abreast with the certain demand for new subjects that will obtain after the releasing ban has been lifted.

Universal Gets Close-Up of President.

Cameramen for the Current Events and American Spirit of the Universal accomplished a feat when they captured a close-up picture of President Wilson marching at the head of the great Liberty Loan parade in New York. They did this in the face of organized preventive measures by the police and in full view of thousands. Some suggestion of what happened is shown in the pictures they got.

The scene opens with a long shot view of the President and his attendants marching toward the camera. These shots are then followed by a close view of the President as he passed by the reviewing stand, and a still closer view of his face as he passed by the reviewing stand, and a still closer view of his face as he waved and flashed his arm toward the camera.
Cromelin Tells Hirsch Why
He Bought “Wives of Men”

IT IS SELDOM a purchaser of a film or a publicist of the Exhibitor to whom he pays his money why he made the purchase. President Paul H. Cromelin, President of the Pioneer Film Corporation, controlling the picture, wrote President Nathan Hirsch, of the latter concern:

“You closed the matter of foreign rights to ‘Wives of Men’ with my company in record time, and I am now going to underscore the reasons. I believe in exporting a film if buyers can advertise well. It is a day of big publicity—advertising is one of the fields in which there has wisely been little time of conservation. The very title, ‘Wives of Men,’ lends itself to big publicity, inasmuch as it is a kind of title that will arouse curiosity, and that is a leading object in any advertising campaign. In every foreign country exhibitors are going in for what we Americans call ‘easy’ advertising, that is, linking a question to the title of the film; in this case, for instance, ‘What Sort of Women Are the Wives of Men?’ etc.

“I also showed interest in your picture because it dealt with practically every class and condition of society, from the richest to the poorest, and gave it an appeal to all classes of audiences, permitting the cinema man to go over every class omitting the ‘high-brows’ of his community. The approval of the New York newspaper critics also impressed me greatly. I have seen the picture myself, when I was able coldly to check up these opinions. Newspaper comments are not so all-unanimous a newspaper comment is very significant.

“More, the concluding reason dovetails with my opening one: Campaign book, photographs, lobby displays and posters are unique, and I call it ‘The Big thing.’ This means much to the people I serve.”

While all of the foreign rights were disposed of promptly, Mr. Cromelin announced that a number of good American states are still available.

Blackton Story Is of “Work or Fight.”

The theme of “Safe for Democracy,” the first animated film ever shown in the country, has been quietly producing since he completed “The Common Cause.” This is Proctor Produce’s patent “Work or Fight” law. It has for its principal large local important shipyards. Anthony Paul Blackton has noticed on that subject around the idea expected to prove a surprise. Commodore Blackton also announced that the “Stand by Democracy” is scheduled for a pre-release run at a popular Broadway house shortly.

The picture is directed by Paul Blackton as “Big Steve, a knight of the road. Ruby de Remer is leading woman, with Helen Ferguson, Ida Darling, Eugene Strong, Gus Alexander, Aubrey Beattie, John C. Wade, John H. Gouldsworth and Sidney D’Albrook in other prominent roles.

Exhibitors’ Supply Install Simplex.

The Exhibitor’s Supply Company, 400 Maller Building, Chicago, Ill., has branches at 157 North Illinois street, Indianapolis, Ind., and 204 Manhattan Building, Milwaukee, Wis., and distributor of the Simplex projectors in the states of Illinois, Indiana and Eastern Wisconsin, has been active in the promotion of Simplex sales.

A few of the important installations include: Fox Theatre, New Bedford, Mass.; Roxy Theatre, St. Louis, Mo.; Andover Theatre, Massachusetts; Vincennes, Ind.; Columbia Theatre, Logansport, Ind.; Arcadia Theatre, Winchestor, Ind.; John Curtin’s Theatre, Rochester, Wis.; Butterfield Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.; Majestic Theatre, Madison, Wis., and two of the “show houses of the world” company in Chicago.

Anita Stewart Returns in Mayer’s “Virtuous Wives.”

WITH production work complete and the task of assembling and editing well under way, announcement is made to the public by Louis B. Mayer, of Boston, of the release soon of “Virtuous Wives,” first of the special Anita Stewart productions, from the distribution through the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit.

“Virtuous Wives” is said to be notable in two ways. It marks the entry into the production field of one of the industry’s prominent exhibitors and exchange-men and provides the vehicle for Miss Stewart’s return to the screen after an absence of several months.

The production is an adaptation of the new famous story of “Virtuous Wives,” by Owen Johnson, who is recognized by magazine and book publishers as the peer of authors whose biggest and most popular works have been founded on New York society life. The published version of the story first appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine, in which it ran serially for ten months. Shortly before the last installment was printed it was got out in book form.

Introduced to the American public by a national advertising campaign conducted by the publishers of Cosmopolitan, in which space was used on forty-two thousand newstands, thousands of billboards, and in hundreds of newspapers and nationally circulated magazines, “Virtuous Wives” made its first appearance to the one and one-half million readers of Cosmopolitan heralded as the greatest American fiction story of the year.

Mr. Johnson’s central character, Amy Forrester, the young society girl to whom marriage is only an incident and brief interruption in her endless social pursuits, is said ideally to suit Miss Stewart’s personality and ability to portray roles requiring refinement and delicate shading. Mr. Mayer, whose initial effort as a producer is along lines based on well-defined ideas of his own, is not only prominent nationally as an exhibitor and exchange man, but is probably one of the best known and largest of the theatre and exchange operators in New England.

The firm of Gordon & Mayer, of Boston, is controlled by Mr. Mayer and N. H. Gordon. In addition to owning and operating a circuit of twenty-seven of the largest theatres in New England, including houses in Boston, Worcester, Springfield, Rochester, New London and Hartford, they conduct Boston’s biggest independent film exchange, under the firm name of the Gordon & Mayer Film Service.

For several years, and during the last year particularly, Mr. Mayer has been keenly interested in the producing branch of the industry. The slow but certain change in the demands of theatre patrons for increasingly better quality in the productions they see satisfied him that a new era of greater features was coming. He explained that one positive indication was the comparatively long runs that many of the bigger special productions have had in New England theatres.

Miss Stewart’s leading man in “Virtuous Wives” is Conway Tearle, well known for his work as a score of legitimate stage successes. Hedda Hopper, wife of De Wolf Hopper, portrays the character of Irma Delbarre, a typical member of the feminine branch of the Four Hundred. The part of Rudolph Debarre, “the fray, fumbling thing who finds only in his cup the courage to remonstrate, and then in tones inaudible,” is played by Edwin Arden, who was a master character actor.

William Boyd, another New York stage favorite, who is now rehearsing with one of the forthcoming Shubert productlogues, has the part of Monte Bracken, society’s pet, Captain Mortimer, but recently invalided to America as a British commissioned officer disabled by wounds received at the front and who was before the war a London favorite, plays the part of “Jap” Laracy, pal and confidant of Monte Bracken.

Prominent on the American stage, and several of them well known to the motion picture public through their work as principals in a number of recent special feature productions, are Philip Leach, Harold Gwyn, Virginia Nordon, Katherine Lewis, Lucille Clayton, Owen Williams and Master Thomas Carr.

The direction of the picture was in charge of George P. Gershenson, who is now supervising the assembling, editing and titling. It is expected that he will conclude this work by the first week in November at the latest.
Julia Arthur Sees Herself as Screen Edith Cavell

A PRIVATE showing of Blunkett & Carroll’s production, “The Woman the Germans Shot,” was held last week for the star, Julia Arthur, the director and others connected with the picture. The final cutting and titling of the picture was completed only recently, after several months of constant work.

Director John G. Adolfi declared the picture had more than come up to his expectations, and declared himself thoroughly satisfied that it would rank with his best screen productions.

As this picture marked the motion picture debut of Julia Arthur, who appears in the leading role of Edith Cavell, the British Red Cross nurse, the noted star was intensely interested in the showing. She had witnessed from time to time separate scenes of the picture, but seeing it as a whole was a new experience, according to her, and she expressed herself as much surprised by the final result.

“It is very hard for one who is new to motion pictures to realize how anything so connected comes out of the scenes taken in course of production,” she said. “During the making of the picture I had very little confidence in my work or in the picture itself. I realized, of course, that the theme was a tremendous one, and I knew that the screen version of it was excellent, but I could not visualize it as a completed thing. I suppose every actress feels this way after her first screen experience.”

“I am frank to say now that I think the picture is tremendous, and should do a great deal of good. Director Adolfi’s handling is masterful; he has developed to the full all the wonderful possibilities of both the leading character and the story.”

In the cast supporting Miss Arthur are Creighton Hale, George LeGuere, William H. Tooker, J. W. Johnston, Paul Panzer, Joyce Fair, George Majeroni and Sarah Alexander. The scenario is by Anthony Paul Kelly.

Hutchison Makes Dive in “Wolves of Kultur”

At the stage of the scientific development of the photodrama, where marvels are accomplished in showing seemingly difficult and dangerous stunts, a real perilous one without taking is to be truly appreciated by the lovers of romantic sensation. Such feat can be seen in “Trapping the Traitors,” the third episode of the latest Pathé serial success, “Wolves of Kultur,” released the week of October 27. Charles Hutchison as Bob, the hero, makes a dive from the window over a jedge, eight feet in width, and into the water sixty-five feet below.

The serial in the beginning shows the murder by German agents of an old inventor of a wireless torpedo. Alice Grayson, his niece, played by Leah Baird, swears to avenge him, and to recover the plans. She meets with many thrilling adventures, and is rescued from death many times by Bob Moore. As this episode opens, Bob is seen facing detective Barclay’s revolver in the country home of Alice, where she had confined Hartman, the master plotter, who had possession of the plans.

This romantic and patriotic play is meeting with success throughout the country. “It is a bugle call to Americanism,” says Allen Sangree, well-known editor and author.

Garson Pictures Not Yet Slated.

Harry Garson calls attention to the fact that he has made no definite arrangements for marketing or the distribution of the Blanche Sweet pictures, which includes “The Blushed Hour,” already completed, and “The Indomitable Sin,” now in the making and which will be ready for release the early part of November. Statements have been made in some of the trade papers and in the daily press which would convey the impression that the Sweet pictures were to be released on the Select program. This is not true. Mr. Garson has had many flattering offers, but will make no decision until his return east to dispose of the matter. This will not be until “The Unpardonable Sin” is finished.

Bloomer and Rub Play in “The Belle of New York”

Julius Steeger, who is directing Marion Davies in her Select picture, “The Belle of New York,” paused long enough in his work at the Jerome Talmadge Studio Monday to announce the names of Raymond Bloomer and Christian Rub, leading man and comedian, respectively, of the coming production.

Mr. Bloomer, who is well known both on the speaking stage and screen, will have the part opposite Miss Davies, that of the young and idle spendthrift who is “rescued” by the “belle.” Last spring Mr. Bloomer played the matinee idol in the Shubert production of “The Squab Farm,” which enjoyed a long and prosperous run at the New Bijou Theatre. Previous to this engagement he had appeared in a number of Elesaco productions, including “The Good Little Devil” and “Fair and Rain,” in which he had the leading part. Mr. Bloomer has also played prominent parts in screen productions, the story of which is of which have been with Marguerite Clark.

Christian Rub, the other member of the cast whom Mr. Steeger announced, is among the country’s foremost character actors and comedians, having virtually starred in all the productions at the Irving Place Theatre for the last three years. Mr. Rub first appeared at the Irving Place in small parts, but was soon elevated to important roles. During the last three years he played the lead in all of the plays produced at this playhouse. Mr. Steeger is enthusiastic over the progress of “The Belle of New York,” and predicts that it will be the greatest triumph of Miss Davies’ career. “The Belle of New York” will be Miss Davies’ next Select picture, and will follow “The Burden of Proof,” which is now being distributed.

“Her Moment” Has Coast Debut.

A highly successful first run engagement of “Her Moment” at Clune’s Auditorium, Los Angeles, during the first week of October is reported by Manager George J. Ekre, of the General Film Exchange in that city. The seven-part drama written by Samuel H. London, featuring Anna Luther, and directed by Frank Beal headed the week’s program. An extensive billboard campaign was part of the picture’s debut, and newspaper space was freely used in the advertising. The author, Mr. London, took direct part in the various arrangements, the result being that the production has been aroused to a pitch of anticipation, turned out strongly to see the picture.

The producer, the manager announces that John W. Noble’s drama, “Shame,” with Zena Keefe, has just concluded favorable first-run showing in Los Angeles.

Sergeant Bryer Describes Post Exchange Theatres

Division Exchange, Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio.

Perhaps it would be interesting to announce the opening of something new, something about movie shows down here. We have two belonging to the post exchanges and a Liberty Theatre. The exchanges are operated independently of the Liberty circuit, as they are clearly a local proposition and the profits derived from them go into the company funds of the soldiers.

Both houses have a seating capacity of about 1,400. They are equipped with two Power's GB machines and a Gold Fibre screen. The buildings are large and roomy and the ventilation is excellent.

The program consists of a five or six-reel feature and a two-reel comedy or a news reel and a cartoon comedy. We do not do all of our booking direct with the exchanges in Cincinnati and run the best programs within thirty days of release date.

Our policy is to give the boys the biggest and best subjects obtainable at a standard admission price of ten cents. We change pictures daily and furnish exceptionally good music. There are ten pieces in each orchestra and they are conducted by J. C. Seay, former leader of the Metropolitan theatre orchestra of Cleveland, and Courtney Turney, of the Colonial theatre.

We have built up a large number of steady patrons who attend the shows almost every night. The officers bringing their families regularly. The men enjoy clean dramas and plenty of comedy. They applaud and show a lot of enthusiasm for the picture and laugh heartily when a good comedy is shown. I find that an audience made up of young persons is most difficult to please than one would imagine. They know when a feature is poorly directed and they appreciate one that shows good work on the part of the star and the director.

Doug Fairbanks, William S. Hart and Charlie Chaplin are the biggest favorites, with Douglas Fairbanks, Constance Talmadge, Madge Kennedy, Theda Bara, Clara K. Young and Mary Pickford are among some of the women stars that have a good following.

Captain Graham, of New York, who is in charge of the exchange, has recently appointed me as manager of both houses. Before entering Uncle Sam's service I was special representative for Paramount-Article pictures in the Chicago territory. I have made a large number of friends in that district as well as in Michigan, where I opened that territory for Pathe several years ago.

The flu epidemic, which reached a high stage in camp, has shut us up and we will probably stay closed until there is no more danger of spreading it among our audience.

M. H. BRYER, Sergeant.

“Dancing Excellent Training for Screen,” Says Tourneur

Dancing is excellent training for screen action, says Director Tourneur, and may, in time, overpower the dramatic stage in filling a part for the dancer. Many are now giving this for dancing requires complete control and flexibility of the muscles. The dancer must be a master of grace, and must be able to control his body to indicate a variety of emotions. Grace of movement is a requisite. The dancer must be a master of dramatic pantomime. Every one of these things are essential elements of screen acting.

“I predicted this idea to the casting of ‘Woman.’ Every feminine member is a dancer. Flore Revelles was a prominent member of the Morgan Dancers. Gloria Goodwin is well known as a modern dancer in vaudeville and in musical comedy. She also danced with the Morgan Dancers and has her own company of classic artists. Ethel Hait’s been in the Century Roof show. Diana Allen is a dancing member of the Zeilfied Follies; Lyon Donaldson and Fair Bines are also dancing members in the Haydens’ Hall of Illusion & Wilk, Inc.

No definite arrangements for its distribution have been made. The few privileged ones who have had an opportunity of seeing the production feel sure that it will make a moment in the history of the screen. The releasing arrangements of this and forthcoming Tourneur productions are in the hands of Hiller & Wilk, Inc.

Many Flashes and Cut-Backs in Newest Petrova Picture

The rather long interval between the issuance of the fourth Petrova picture, entitled “Steal,” resulted upon the arrival of “The Panther Woman,” it is announced, due to the unusual efforts exerted in editing the film and in utilizing the advertising helps for the latter subject. Because of the nature of the story, dealing with the life of a sinister woman, an extended use is made of flashes and cut-backs, and the Petrova executives decided that the greatest amount of suspense could be obtained through the expert use of scissors, and is said that the result has more than justified their hopes as the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit reports it is “the fastest moving Petrova production we have yet seen.”

An interesting publicity campaign has been worked out for this production, and the special service bureau of the Petrova Picture Company has listed the following accessories: Single columns cut, 5x10 photos of star, 3x5 sepia photos, lobby display photos of star 15x20 together with autographed photos, also an artistic and unlabelled poster of white and a special electrical lobby display. In addition a complete list of accessories has been prepared by First National through whose exchanges this picture will be issued.

Twelfth “Hands Up” Episode Thrills.

The twelfth episode of “Hands Up,” Pathe’s Western serial featuring Ruth Roland, and released the week of October 27, is called “The Stranger from the Sea,” and is crowded with thrills, including a sensational scene from a cliff into the water by Echo Delane, the heroine, who goes through the adventure with her cowboy protector, “Two Gun.”

Pathe Releases Historical Picture.

Pathé announces the release on October 13 of an interesting topical reel entitled “Victory’s Triumph,” which praises President Wilson and his War Cabinet, showing the admirable manner in which the Nation’s efforts were directed during the interregnum, which terminated the prosecution of America’s war activities—not only since the day in April, 1917, when he announced the declaration of war against Germany, but showing the preparations which were made prior to that time.

Goldwyn Ready With Rex Beach’s Latest

Rex Beach and Goldwyn have completed a Rex Beach “surprise” production, “Too Fat to Fight,” and announce it for release in November, simultaneously with the inauguration of the financial drive of the Young Men’s Christian Association, the Young Men’s Hebrew Association and the Knights of Columbus. “Too Fat to Fight” is the dramatization of a story to appear in the midwinter issue of a magazine, and reports that the film will feature the activities of the American organizations, including the Salvation Army, that are backing the thru the War Industries in the United States, France and Belgium.

Frank McIntyre is the featured player in the production, which was directed by Horace B. Howard. McIntyre scored a directorial success with his Marine Corps picture, “Flying with the Marines,” directed certain of the military scenes.

One of the great advantages of this production for exhibitors is that it will at once receive the benefit of the hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of advertising and publicity that has been given Goldwyn’s “The Four Horseman of the Apocalypse” and “The Conquering Hero.” A number of localities will set in the daily newspapers of the nation during their drive.

“Whose Little Wife Are You?”

Picture patrons are promised twenty minutes of simon pure hilarity in the Paramount release, “Whose Little Wife Are You?” Charlie Murray, Wayland Trask and Mary Thurman are the featured players. The picture also features many other well-known persons, among them Eva Thatcher, Joseph Baldy Belmont and Alice Lake, and beeps and peeps of everybody in the Sennett roster of comedians appears. Even the redoubtable Ben Turpin and Charlie Loyd have “bits,” as do Vesta Spalding and all the Sennett girls, the famous dog Teddy, and also that ever-popular acte, the clever feline combination of Pug, the

Twin Cities Enthusiastically Greet "The Yellow Dog"

The patriotic principles in "The Yellow Dog" have been enthusiastically received in the twin cities—Minneapolis and St. Paul. J. A. Burnquist, Governor of Minnesota, has accepted the position of generalissimo in the state-wide drive on yellow dogism. Secretary of State Julius A. Schmall is acting major general.

In Minneapolis within the Anti- Yellow Dog Clubs, with a membership of over two thousand, have been organized in the public schools. The work of these youngsters has already been noticed. J. Edward Meyers, whose election to the office of Mayor of Minneapolis is practically assured, is the active head of the Minneapolis Clubs with the title of colonel. The city has been divided into sixty school districts, and the clubs of each ten districts are placed under the supervision of a prominent business man who bears the title of "major," and are indirectly connected with the Department of Justice; two colonels and a lieutenant colonel, who is the division organizer and secretary, comprise the general of the colonel staff.

In St. Paul, Commissioner of Education Albert Wunderlich has taken up the Anti- Yellow Dog organization work with considerable enthusiasm. He has followed the Minneapolis idea of dividing the city into districts and appointing major, colonel, lieutenant colonel, and staff.

Four High School principals are working as majors, and Carl Dresher, deputy school commissioner, is titular Anti-Yellow Dog staff.

Commissioner Wunderlich expects to develop a division of three thousand members within a month. Mayor L. C. Hodgson, of St. Paul, a singing patriarch, poet, and enthusiastic boss, worker, is backing the St. Paul Anti-Yellow Dog Campaign.

Plans for the organization of Duluth, Minn., are now under way and a full report of the campaign in that city will be made shortly.

Third Pyramid Production.

The Pyramid Productions, whose first two features, "Inside the Lines" and "The Man of Bronze," starring Lewis Stone, have proved successful beyond the expectations of the producers, now announce a third picture, "The Charm of Naxos," which will soon be ready to put upon the market. Doralaina, star of the production, is also author of the story upon which the picture was based. Dancing, which is part of the daily life of Doralaina, plays a great part in furthering the plot of the story. The heroine finds herself on a cannibal island in the South Seas, where she is taken up by the savage inhabitants of the island, who hail her as their long promised goddess of the sea. Doralaina's success in "The Naulaka" has earned her commendable praise from the critics, and hearty approval from the picture patrons.

Vitagraph Players Work on Blue Ribbon Productions

VITAGRAPH'S production of "The Lion and the Mouse," starring Alice Joyce, will be a most lavish program production. Miss Joyce will be surrounded by a exceptionally strong cast and production has already been started. It will be released on the regular Blue Ribbon program as one of the eight productions in which Miss Joyce is scheduled to appear during the coming year.

Earle Williams, who returned from the Orient after an absence of ten months, has begun work on "A Gentleman of Quality," by Frederick Van Rensselaer Day, under the direction of Wilfrid North. Mr. Williams came East especially to make this picture in Eastern surroundings, and he has with him a popular company, including Anees Ayres and Florence Deshon.

Harry T. Morey, whose "The King of Diamonds" was released last week, is in the midst of work on a Blue Ribbon feature having the tentative title of "Dan Laffouch." He is working under direction of Paul Scardor.

Corinne Griffith is working under direction of Kenneth Webb. She has also been out on location for the better part of two weeks making scenes for a new Blue Ribbon feature, which will bear the title of "The Adventure Shop." The story was written by "Dud" Fisher, creator of "Mutt and Jeff."

Gladyes Leslie, under direction of Joseph Gleason, is almost finished work in "The Beloved Imposter," a quaint drama.

At the Triangle studio Besse Love, under direction of David Smith, is reported to be well advanced in making the picturized version of Grace Livingston Lutt's novel, "The Enchanted Barn," which will be the second of her Blue Ribbon feature releases.

Airplanes Exploit "American's Answer.

Detroit witnessed the most remarkable exploitation of a motion picture in the history of the industry as a preliminary to the opening of "America's Answer," the U. S. Official War Fatur, at the Majestic Theatre, Monday, October 11. Twenty airplanes from Selfridge Field circled over the city, dropping paper pamphlets advertising the film. The unique method of publicity created a sensation.

Keenan Brings His Best to Making of "The Bells"

FRANK KEENAN, though he followed in the footsteps of such an eminent star as Henry Irving, gave to his stage interpretation of Mathias in "The Hells," sufficient artistic, minute, subtle characterization that he created a new life and interest in the play which brought to the British player some new fame. And to the vivid screen version a Pathe extra-selected star photoplay, which will be released the week of October 28, is added subtle atmosphere and a psychological quality in action, lighting and development that were impossible to stage. The feature shows the profoundest appeal was by the sound of a voice which rises from the tortured soul of the murder of hate. In the picture this is a silent play of emotion calling for the supreme art of the player to get it across. Mr. Keenan brings to what he calls in this play the supreme test a long and varied schooling in the drama.

"The Unconquerable Spirit" (Pathe).

"The Unconquerable Spirit," No. 18 of the Official War Review released by Pathe October 28, brings significantly to the British people the declaration of President Wilson that "the Allied Commanders in the field will dictate the terms of an armistice, which can be considered the war is finished the enemy has ceased his atrocities on land and sea." This splendid series of war propaganda, in this, in the opinion and in the right set feeling, gives the beholder a thrill of the unconquerable spirit.

All through these views is expressed the patriotic feeling that the Huns' flight is shown—where he leaves his guns and munitions in his headlong haste, and not to be harrying his rear guard. The camera shows that along the Oise the captured guns and the captive soldiers were poured into the ranks of the Kaiser's retreating hordes.

Eight Reels for "Unpardonable Sin."

Marshall Nelan, who is directing "Blanche Sweet in "Unpardonable Sin," on the Coast, reports this production rapidly nearing completion. The picture, which is a short one, and which is taken from all reports will be the best thing both star and director have done.

In the cast besides Miss Sweet, who plays Deminy Parece and Alice Parece, are Matt Moore as Nell Wimnors, Wallace Beery as Colonel Klemm, and savvy Alden. The picture will be finished about November 1, and after a private showing to Government officials, will probably he released for a run in one of the New York theatres.

This will be decided by Harry Garson and his associates, who are handling the release, and it will also then be announced as to how the Blanche Sweet pictures are to be released.

"The Common Cause" Sent to Exchanges.

Although the definite date of release for "The Common Cause" has not been fixed the Vitagraph Company, through their officials, to the effect that Mr. Blanton's drama is to be offered going ahead with its plans for an extensive campaign in United States. To date two and a half weeks artists have been engaged in making sketches for the paper and advertising material that is to be supplied to exhibitors.

Advance prints on the production have been shipped to all Vitagraph exchanges, and it will be available for showing to exhibitors this week.

Hiller & Wilk Handling

TO HIS already lengthy list of serials, beginning with "Lucille Love," Francis Ford has added another, the "Allison Mystery," being handled by Hiller & Wilk, Inc. The title explains the character of the story, which is in fifteen episodes, and featured with Mr. Ford is Mae Gostin and Rosemaryihy. In addition, there is an unusually large cast composed of favorites who have appeared in Mr. Ford's former productions, which are too well known to motion picture audience to necessitate their being enumerated here.

The editing and supervision is in the hands of John H. Welbank, well known scenario writer, while Peter Gerald, who has had considerable experience with Francis Ford in the staging of the mystery elements of his previous productions, is the technical director.

Mr. Ford is now endeavoring in building up big situations in his serials with a pleasingly developed plot, and in the present serial he is said to have done his former efforts in producing novel and mysterious situations. The story of the "Allison Mystery," a jewel of great monetary and sentimental value, as it is held sacred by a number of people, it is called the "Eye of the World." Its first theft is from an Egyptian mummy case; an American woman, who is just as her daughter is being wedded to a wealthy sultan, a seemingly detached hand appears, grasps a revolver and fires a shot which lands in the head of the bridegroom. Among the guests is the famous American detective, Mr. Holbrook. The sultan, having created a soulless creature over which he lost control, is found dead. After that comes all kind of confusion, but many amusing situations have been contrived by the director who is said to have used full dramatic effect in the story, so that many of the wedding guests are under suspicion of the murder.

Dalton Brothers' Exploits

Furnish Subject for Film

PRACTICALLY everyone has heard of the Dalton brothers, who, a number of years ago terrorized Oklahoma, Indian Territory and Kansas by their daring bank and train robberies. Their exploits form the basis for a sensational feature film in six parts, which is being released by the Southern Pacific Film Corporation, 1476 Broadway, New York. Emmett Dalton, who is secretary and general manager of the company, is featured in this production, entitled "Beyond the Law," which is being offered on state rights basis.

This picture is described as a real Western picture, full of appealing human interest and dramatic content, and it is said to prove astonishingly true story before moving pictures were known. The scenario is the work of William Addison Burch, who also wrote the scenarios for "The Fighting Fifty" by Theodore Marston and photographed by Robert A. Ollson. Prominent in the cast, in addition to Mr. Dalton, are Virginia Allison, in the part of young Emmett Dalton's sweetheart, and Harris Gordan, who portrays Dalton as a youth.

Mr. Dalton, who is now a respected and law-abiding citizen, when interviewed, appeared averse to talking about his exploits. He stated, however, that he was not only the leader of his band, but the brains of it, and that, as for the past ten years he had been delivering lectures in various parts of the country on the making of pictures. He started in this work soon after being pardoned by Governor Hoch of Kansas, in 1887, after having served a portion of a life sentence imposed in connection with an exploit in Coffeyville, Kansas, wherein two banks were robbed, and in the melee which followed four civilians as well as four members of the Dalton gang were killed. Concerning two of his brothers, Bob, the leader, and Frank, were killed, while three others of the band were left behind. Concerning the exploits of the Dalton brothers appeared some time ago in the Wide World magazine.

The Southern Feature Film Corporation is composed of North Carolina capitalists, C. A. Turner, of Gastonia, being president, and C. D. Gray, of the same city, vice-president and treasurer, while R. D. Crawford lent his services as general manager of the directors. Mr. Dalton stated that it will be the policy of the company to continue its series of productions in the state rights market, all of which will be real Western stories.

Says Production Curtain

Enhances Value of Reissues

ACCORDING to an official of the W. H. Productions, there has been a period during which many of the companies have temporarily shut down on production. Such a condition, said Mr. Holbrook, is not need, and in this connection they call attention to the fact that their products have continued to be of the number of productions made during the past few years, and that the new productions which will soon be released through independent exchanges represent the pick of the entertainment output. These subjects are released in four new series as follows: Twenty-eight single reel Liberty Keystone Comedies, twenty-eight single-reel Eagle Keystone Comedies, fifteen two-reel Union Kay-Bee Western dramas, and fifteen two-reel Columbia Kay-Bee Western dramas.

Regarding the excellent business that is being enjoyed by the W. H. Productions' reissues many favorable comments are being received from large exhibitors and exchanges throughout the country. K. C. Cropper, of the Bee Hive Film Exchange, has stated, "Aside from the purely conservation values these reissues are certainly a great success. Our exhibitors all over the state are more than satisfied, and from them I gather that their patrons also are."

State Rights Sales

Reported This Week

A RROW Film Corporation reports the acquisition of "The Southpaw" by Playtop Company, St. Louis, for Missouri and Kansas, "The Perfect Model," "Her Affair," a feature of four Allison Lockwood subjects, "My Husband's Friend" and "The Woman's Law"; and to Jack R. Hunt at the Perfect Model for Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia and Virginia; also "Tune Within," "The Big Storm," Denver, for Utah, Idaho and Montana.

Greiner Distributing Corporation announces that arrangements have been completed for the distribution of the Ford Educational Weekly through the following exchanges: To Peerless Film Service, San Francisco, for California, Nevada and Arizona; to Southwestern Film Corporation, Dallas, for Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma, and to First National Exhibitors' Circuit for Louisiana and Mississippi.

Suggests "Wives of Men"

As Good Embargo Feature

WITH the releasing and production of new pictures stopped for several weeks, exhibitors throughout the country are taking advantage of the opportunity to show more than ever to state rights attractions, particularly those which can be played for several days. In this connection, the Pioneer Film Corporation invites the attention of theatre managers to its latest attraction, "Wives of Men," a good feature that can be booked for a run, as demonstrated by its two weeks showing in the prominent Broadway theatres in New York.

Says an official of the company: "It can be shown at least once a week for a week or more in most theatres, and even in the smaller theatres it is good for a run of from three to five days. This is a proposition that should be of interest to all theatre managers whose houses are situated more remote and to whom exhibitors put over something big. The feature stars Florence Reed in one of her greatest emotional roles. The story is one of deep and general interest, and the paper and advertising helps available all combine to make a great help to exhibitors at the present time."

Full details as to how and where book- ings for this production can be made will be obtained from the offices of the Pioneer, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York.

Unusual Cost Appears in "Deadly Sins"

The famous McClure series of "Deadly Sins," now being released in condensed two-part form by the General Film Company, form a series for exhibitors of all classes. The episodes are titled as follows: "Envy," "Pride," "Passion," "Wrath," "Greed," "Sloth" and "The Seventh Sin," but they are not allegories or morality dramas, but have been packed with heart throses, thrills, flashes of comedy and human interest. Each of the stories deals with an entirely different subject and could be presented as separate two-part film attractions, irrespective of their value as a series.

From the point of publicity, the McClure productions have received country-side advertising in several of the leading newspapers. The screen fiction version of the "Deadly Sins" also appeared in periodicals with large circulation.

Added to this is the popularity and reputation of Shirley Mason, the leading figure, together with the large following enjoyed by the five prominent stage stars who appear with her: Ann Murdock, Nancy O'Neil, Holbrook, H. B. Warner and Charlotte Walker.

Northwest Film Trade Board Helps Exhibitors to Secure Pictures if Their Shows Are Delayed in Transit

By S. J. Anderson, 807 Leary Building, Seattle, Wash.

As an effective agent of cooperation between exhibitor and film man the Northwest Film Trade Board has recently been in action and as the result of such action in the Seattle area, a number of films needed for the "April Fool" holiday last week were secured for the boards by the Seattle Film Trade Board. The boards have been very active in the past few weeks and have succeeded in securing a number of films for shows in Seattle, which were not available in the local market.

Early in the month, the boards secured a number of films for the opening of the "April Fool" holiday, which were not available at the time. The films were then shipped to the boards for distribution, and the boards have been busy in distributing them to exhibitors.

Strand Gets Them Coming Early.
A peculiar thing about the movie-going public in Sydney is that, according to Harry Beamson, manager of the new Strand Theatre (J. M. Franklin’s new house), the people of that town do not like to go to the theatre early. They prefer to come about eight o'clock and thus they will have to be educated to starting early and coming to their shows at line-ups at the Strand Theatre, however, show that the public is very willing to learn.

Canadians Like Gerard’s Film.
The Imperial Theatre, St. John, N. B., has had splendid business on "My Four Years in Germany," and the picture has been received with great enthusiasm. It ran for four days and the contract had one more day to run when the Board of Health ordered the theatre closed. A deputation of motion picture men met the Board of Health who showed the picture to the deputies and the contract might not be carried out, but the request was not granted and the managers expressed their willingness to fall in with the orders for the general good.

ASHER, head of the film exchange department of the Turner & Duhon Circuit, returned recently from a trip to Los Angeles and completed a deal for the purchase of "Eyes of the World" for the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit. This production is being produced here by J. P. McGoulder and will be known here at prices ranging to one dollar, and will soon be offered in the East. While in the city he attended the talkies, Chaplin, who was found to be hard at work on his third release.

Mary Pickford Spends Days in San Francisco.
Mary Pickford spent a few days in the San Francisco Bay region about the middle of the Liberty Loan drive, and some heavy sales of bonds were made through her efforts. She appeared at Union Square, in the tea room of the California Theatre, at the Imperial and at the Orpheum Theatre, arousing great enthusiasm. While at the California Theatre she raised a picture which was projected in the Cross Clubhouse on lower Market Street. She visited some of the shipyards, and also spent some time at the Oldest City of Oakland, her first visit there since a little girl. Her cameraman, Charles G. Roser, accompanied her on her tour, and, and took moving pictures, which were developed by Raymond A. Duhem and shown at local houses.

Loan Films Projected for Street Crowds.
Through the agency of Herman Wobber, director of the division of films for the exploitation of the Liberty Loan drive in the Twelfth Federal Reserve District, as many of the special films donated by the government, which will be gathered together were shown to street crowds one night recently at the Chronide Building, featuring "America's Answer." The theatre was projected from the Monadnock Building. The exhibition was witnessed by immense crowds.

Anderson Films to Be Made at San Mateo.
According to present plans the Golden West Producing Company will commence work at San Mateo on November 1. The first of November on pictures featuring G. M. Anderson. Jesse J. Robbins will be the director. The films will be distributed through the Porex Exchange. The first of the G. M. Anderson productions will be a combination of T. & D. theatres at Oakland and Sacramento.

Film Concern Incorporates.
Articles of incorporation of the Pacific Coast Film Corporation have been filed at San Francisco, with a capital stock of $50,000, by G. Kane, H. A. Levinson and A. S. Newburgh.

Patriotic Theatre Man.
J. W. Distasio, manager of the Liberty Theatre, San Francisco, who recently threw open his house to the general public without charge when two war pictures, "Let Us Forget" and "The Struggle of the Lusitania," were presented. These pictures appealed to him as being forceful arguments for the Liberty Loan Bonds, and he offered to operate with the Liberty Loan Committee in presenting these free of charge. The committee immediately accepted the proposition, and the showing attracted wide attention.

San Francisco Briefs.
Dave Bostwick, manager of the Universal Exchange at Los Angeles, was a visitor here during the recent stay of John Brandenburg. William J. Citron, manager of the local branch of the United Picture Theatres of America and his assistant, Mike Zar, have taken possession of quarters in the General Film Building. Marion H. Kohn has purchased the rights for seven Pacific Coast states to "Who Is Afraid of the Hun?"

The equipment of the York Theatre on Orleans Street has been removed, and it is doubtful if this house will be re-opened.

The capacity of the Lyricum Theatre on Mission street has been enlarged.

The Fox Film Corporation has installed prefabrication equipment on the premises to permit the making of subjects for exhibitors without delay.

Northern California Happenings.
W. R. Claman, of Orland, Cal., has taken over the Majestic.
Floyd St. John has taken over the theatre at Patterson, Cal., formerly conducted by M. Skinner.
The Strand Theatre at Vallejo, Cal., has been taken over by W. C. Maupin.
James Evans, manager of the Imperial Theatre at Fort Bragg, has taken over the Liberty Theatre at Fort Bragg.

Herndon Edmonds Calls to the Coines.
CALLED for limited service in Uncle Sam’s fighting forces, Herndon Edmonds, popular and well-known by film men in the Baltimore territory, who has for the past eight years been associated with the trade and for six years associated with the Baltimore exchange in Baltimore, reported for duty on Monday, October 14. Mr. Edmonds was called by Maj. Willard, assistant adjutant general, who is moving to the Wunder Wunder, and will probably have complete jurisdiction of the booking and operating of the moving picture shows given at the camp.

Improving Pathe’s Office.
While the moving picture theatres have been closed during the influenza epidemic in Baltimore, the department of the Pathé Company, 210 North Calvert street, where paper, slides and photos are kept, has been kept going. Only a small number of employees, in the presence of Mr. Frederick, who now acts as shipping clerk, booker and cashier. The improvements have continued, and it is expected that they will save them money. Mr. Frederick sold some of the obsolete paper, after discussing the plans with Nat Glasser, the manager of the exchange, gaining $7, and with this money, bought the wood, nailing and paint he needed and went to work. He took down one set of unnecessary shelves, and rearranged the others in sections and compartments, doing his own carpenter work. The sections are for slides, paper and photos and each compartment is numbered, and he which has made out gives the key to the films in each number. “It will save money and time for thePathé Coines Mr. Frederick,” and I can always be certain that no one will take photos and paper and forget to tell me about it, they will never get mixed up. It will also give him a complete check of the stock. Nat Glasser also has been very much in the office.

Miss Gladys Soden Educated.
Concerts in which moving pictures will play a prominent part to aid the men of other nationalities at Camp Meade better understand the cause for which they are fighting are now being arranged for at the camp. Lectures and moving pictures on the home front, as well as dances of the countries represented will be given when the concerts which are arranged will be given.
Presentation of Second Official War Film at the Majestic Impressive and Beautiful Turn thousands Away

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Building, Detroit, Michigan.

SUNDAY, October 13, was a gala day for the premier of "America's Answer," which opened a two-weeks' engagement at the Majestic Theatre, Detroit. It was simply impossible to handle all the people who came to see the presentation of crowded houses throughout the balance of the engagement.

One notable as the picture is its presentation. When the orchestra plays Victor Herbert's "America Fantasia" the lights dimmer and Wilson is unveiled above the proscenium arch. There is an elaborate prelude, its scenes being placed just behind the front line trenches where the Knights of Columbus, Y. M. C. A. and Salvation Army have refreshment stands. Here soldiers, Red Cross and Salvation Army workers take part. The Majestic Trio sing, assisted by a quartet and a large chorus, and it was the biggest modern vision of an old lady knitting while "Just Break the News To Mother" is sung. Throughout the whole arrangement of the house were carried out under the personal direction of M. W. McGee, manager of the house.

Besides the feature, the Majestic is showing a "Happy Hooligan" cartoon (Reedvisionals) and "American at Play" (Ferdon). The formal opening took place Monday night at eight o'clock, there being one premiere engagement. Detroiter A. E. Stecher, manager and staff, Mayor Oscar Marx of Detroit, and many city officials, representatives of theatre and newspaper visitors were in attendance. Raymond S. Harris, of the committee on public information, or the chairmen of the ceremonies, Abner Larned of Detroit, the great patriotic address. Mr. Harris and Manager McGee have arranged for special nights throughout the coming week. There will be a Ford night, Packard night, Shipbuilding night and so on throughout the two weeks.

On Saturday, October 12, preceding the opening, and through the efforts of M. W. McGee and representatives of the United States Signal Corps, a noted aeroplane from Selfridge Flying Field, Mt. Clemens, "aviated" to Detroit and dropped 100,000 leaves over the city. Incidentally, they did all sorts of daring stunts in the air, thrilling several hundred thousand people in all parts of the city. The heralds were performed over the city, and the engagement of "America's Answer" at the Majestic, and urged every man, woman and child to see the picture. McGee and advertising stunt ever known to Detroit and it was the kind of advertising that money could not buy at any price. Think what a flurin in the cinemas where six aeroplanes dropping down advertising circulars for a motion picture theatre.

Caruso Visits the Broadway-Strand.

Caruso gave a recital in Detroit on October 12. A fact of some weeks before he was in Detroit the Broadway-Strand Theatre was showing first-run "My Caruso" and the news of the recital was notified of the attraction he went there Monday afternoon with several of his secretaries. The house was closed and he left the office without in any way making himself known. It wasn't long, however, before the entire first-floor audience knew of his presence, and all eyes were turned that way. After viewing the picture he was taken inside and lay. Right of Columb, managing director of the theatre, who chatted with him for some time. In connection with the presentation of this picture at the Broadway-Strand, Eddie McGloth, the soloist, rendered the Neapolitan and Italian airs that Caruso is famous for—being one of Caruso's favorite songs. Eddie learned it, by the way, from a passenger brought aboard the freighter "Whirlwind Campion on Fox Specials.

Last week Manager M. S. Bailey, of the Fox Exchange, had all his salesmen in Detroit. Each man had a certain territory, instructed to specialize on the big Fox productions, such as the "Big Six," "Queen of the Sea," "Prussian Cur" and "Why America Will Win." The total result has been that scarcely a theatre in any part of the city is now without some Fox bookings.

Meed with Hodkinson Corporation.

C. A. Meed, recently manager of the Regent Theatre, Detroit, and previously with Pathe, Vitagraph and Goldwyn in various parts of the country, has been appointed Detroit special representative for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, and is busy planning the building of Paralta in this territory, making his headquarters at the General Film Exchange.

Dennison to Manage Fox at Minneapolis.

D. Leo Dennison, who recently went with Fox, is now branch manager of the Fox Exchange in Minneapolis. He worked with Fox, "Dennie" was manager for General.

Moule to Manage the Washington, Too.

Tom Moule, manager of the Madison Theatre, Cincinnati, has been appointed manager of the Washington Theatre as well by John H. Kunsky. Tom will do the same duties as supervising their management and direction. At the Washington he will be assisted by Mr. Decker, and he will be assisted by Ed. Foley. Mr. Moule formerly managed the Alhambra for Kunsky, since his connection with the Kunsky Enterprises he showed himself to be a real showman and executive, and has been successful in every undertaking.

Charnas Pays a Visit to Detroit.

Harry Charnas, president of the Standard Circuit, is paying a visit to the Detroit visitor on October 12, stopping off on his way from New York. He spent the day at the Fox Exchange, seeing the operation of the Detroit branch. Mr. Charnas recently purchased from $25,000 to $50,000 worth of theatres. The Standard offices have been hard hit in Cleveland and Cincinnati on account of most of the theatres closing in those territories.

Cincinnati News Letter

By Kenneth C. Crain, 207 First National Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio.

No Loan Banks in Cincinnati.

WHILE Cincinnati was "over the top" of her Fourth Liberty Loan quota at the end of the second week largest of any city in the country, the loan of War films, it was a matter of great regret among exhibitors and film men that these pictures could not be shown on the city to enable the surplus over the quota to be as large as possible. As the closing date went into effect at the beginning of the second week of the campaign, however, both the second and third weeks of the filing period proved to be a let down the aid of these special pictures, but without the stimulus and encouragement with them, minute speakers had been given regularly, the theatre. The speed and enthusiasm shown by Mr. Charnas, the famous odd millions so promptly, therefore, was considered more praiseworthy.

Exhibitors Close House During Epidemic. .

Manager and showmen on their own initiative or following the suggestion of the health authorities, have been quite prompt in closing down the inactivity to give their houses a thorough cleaning and airing. The extremely cool weather has kept the theatres being kept rather well closed during that month, but the desirability of such a course is emphasized by the influenza outbreak, and in consequence, many houses have been thrown open and aired from top to bottom. This M. T. McFarland, for example, of the three big downtown house operated by Manager Libson—the Strand, the Walnut and the Pioneer. These three houses had their regular, fall cleaning a few weeks ago, but during the closed period Mr. Libson and his workmen still put in more thorough cleaning and airing.

Ruth Virginia Libson Dies.

Ruth Virginia Libson, the little four-year-old daughter of Libson, manager of the Walnut, Strand and Family theatres, and a prominent figure in moving picture circles, died last week of brief illness. Mr. and Mrs. Libson have received heartfelt expressions of sympathy from a wide circle of friends.

Labor Films to Be Shown.

The theatres may be closed, but the moving picture film is still on the job doing a generous and effective share of war work. It is primarily perfo-contrary to what some people have suspected by films showing the importance of labor’s share in the war, and to the fact that thousands of men who by men in factories engaged in Government contracts, will be shown through theatre screens throughout Pennsylvania, New York, and Ohio. Over 600 plants in this immediate vicinity will see the picture, telling how the patriotic interest of the industrial workers and induce them to stick to their jobs and inculcating that they are as much in the war as the men in the trenches.

Incorporates Bennett Theatre Company.

Film Men Push Loan Despite Influenza.

DESPITE the epidemic of influenza which has temporarily closed the picture business for the present in Philadelphia, great interest has been shown by the exchanges, managers in behalf of the Fourth Liberty Loan. Max Milder, chairman of the exchanges committee, reported last week that subscriptions that $52,450 worth of bonds have already been disposed of by the various managers and their representatives. Mr. Milder, manager of the Paramount and Artcraft Exchange, announced that his employees had already subscribed to the full amount, and there was more coming. Jack Levy, of the Fox Exchange, states that nothing short of surpluses is expected to be his share from his exchange. In fact, the Triangle, World, Masterpiece, General, Select, Peerless, Pathé, Kleine, Sherry and Vita-

Exhibitor Advertisements in Street Cars.

Alexander Boyd, of the Arcadia Theatre, has advertised his theatre generally for the first time in the street cars of Philadelphia. An artistic design displaying the Arcadia Theatre name and date is placed on the car size cards, with sufficient space to allow the announcements of the weekly program to be placed in the writing space. Mr. Murphy, who will have charge of this car advertising, has arranged to have each week’s announcement.

TO ENLARGE PATEH'S BOSTON OFFICE
Growth of Business Necessitates Extensive Alterations—Reorganize and Increase Sales Force

By Robert N. Howe, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

A CCORDING to Manager Stanley Hand the space now occupied by the Boston office of the late exchange is not large enough to handle the business that has been built up in New England, since the exchange has been under his management. Due to this fact extensive alterations are to be made and within a week the office will be double the room to work in that they formerly had.

The office as it is at present is of an oblong shape, Manager Hand's office is in the foreground on the right hand side as you enter the doorway on Isabella street. The office is divided into two sections by a counter which extends the entire length of the room. The right hand side of the counter is vacant, and the side to the left is occupied by the general office force. The second floor consists of the exhibitors' room and the poster department.

When the alterations are completed, Manager Hand's office will occupy the space formerly taken up by the booking department. The elimination of the counter will allow double the working space of the office force formerly had, and the booking office will be removed to the front of the exchange. The exhibitors room and the poster department will remain unchanged.

Manager Hand has reorganized his entire force of salesmen, and has taken on three new men. In the past week, Joseph Mack, well known in film circles of New England as president of the first motion pictures exhibitors' league in Massachusetts, and as former manager of the Hub Theatre, has been assigned to cover Western Massachusetts. Mr. Epstein, another well known to exhibitors of New Hampshire and Vermont, will cover the entire state of Maine. A. M. Hare has been appointed to replace Jack Jennings, who recently joined the navy and who is now stationed at the United States Naval Training Station at Hashington, Mass.

1. E. Jones, a Victim of Influenza.

Members of the film industry and local theatre men were shocked to learn of the death of Prof. Nidham, who has been a member of the Boston Olympic Theatre, who died October 8 of influenza after a week's illness.

Mr. Jones was 35 years old and one of the most popular men connected with local theatrical interests.

Mr. Jones leaves a widow and child. He was a 32d degree Mason and in addition to his connection with the Olympia Theatre was associated with the Gordon-Mayer Film Corporation.

The funeral was held October 10 at his home, 43 Richards street, Brighton, with services to be held on Thursday.

Thomas Spy on Road to Recovery.

Thomas Spy, business manager of the Gordon-Mayer Film Corporation of Boston, who has been ill for the last five weeks, is now on the road to recovery, according to the physician attending him. He has been ill with slow type pneumonia and it is stated later he will be past the danger point. He is expected to be back on the job within a month.

Mutual, Exchange Supervisor Visits Boston.

M. G. Stephenson, general supervisor of the Mutual exchange, was a visitor in Boston last week. He came over to make the changeover of management in the Boston exchange, and to look over the business prospects for the coming year. He served many years as Souther supervisor at New Orleans before his promotion to general supervisor.

GRAND OPENS WITH GERARD'S FILM.

The GRAND THEATRE, at Bluffton, Ind., which has been closed since April 4, when it was damaged by fire, was reopened October 1 with a three-day exhibition of Griffith pictures, "Four Years in the Wild." Many compliments were received by the management on the attractiveness of the house. The theatre has been entirely remodeled, reconstructed and redecorated and now compares favorably with any of the large theatres in the state. The new projection equipment is one of the most complete in the state. The booth has been completely equipped and the theatre is one of which the management may justly feel proud.

New American Pleases its Patrons.

Hard luck hit the American Theatre, at Terre Haute, Ind., a pretty stiff jolt last week, Friday afternoon, October 4, after having been closed for more than a month for improvement, which was ordered closed because of the influenza epidemic.

On the afternoon and night of the reopening all of the old patrons—and a number of new ones—of the theatre flocked to the place to see what had been done during several weeks of darkness. After the "Oh's" and "Ah's" and "Isn't it pretty" of admiration drawn by the view of the big screen of the newly completed and expensively decorated walls and ceiling, the new chairs and comfortable manner of their arrangement was examined. The audience settled down to enjoy the antics of Mabel Normand in the Goldwyn comedy, "Peck's Bad Girl."

The whole theatre was changed during the closing period and now presents one of the most up-to-date picture theatres in the Middle West. Shannon Katzenbach is the genial manager of the theatre.

To Show "America's Answer" in Evansville.

Arrangements have been completed by a representative of the Mutual Film Corporation, Ind., for an exhibition there about the first part of November of the second production of Mabel Normand, "America's Answer." Otto Behrens, president of the organization of registrants, closed a contract this week with J. G. Cooner, government representative for the picture. The proceeds from the exhibition of the film will be used to furnish the United States Naval office, which has been established at the Boone camp, at Evansville.

Mahan and Reed Open the Paramount.

"The Paramount," the new motion picture theatre that has been established at Kokomo, Ind., in the room formerly occupied by the War Memorial Theatre, will open the season with "The American Way," the new motion picture that Mr. and Mrs. Will Rogers have recently completed.

A. F. Brentlinger, manager of the new Liberty Theatre at Terre Haute, is confined in a hospital at Fort Wayne, Ind., suffering from a slight attack of influenza, which developed recently. Manager Masen of the Orpheum Theatre at Fort Wayne, which is also controlled by the company of which Mr. Brentlinger represents, has assumed the management of the Terre Haute theatre during Mr. Brentlinger's illness.

INCUNABULAR FILM BUSINESS.

The Spanish influenza epidemic, which has resulted in the closing of all motion picture houses, theatres, schools and churches, has affected any public gathering, has had a very serious effect upon the moving picture industry. Most of the theatres have been temporarily closed for business conditions the past week, but quite a number of picture men have felt the effects of influenza.

Dale P. Hill, Kansas and Oklahoma travel er for the World Film Corporation, is only ill at the hospital with influenza.

The release date on "America's Answer" has been changed at the request of the Government. The former date was October 22.

Eddie Carr, Kansas travel er for the William L. Sherry Service, is ill in Augustus, Kansas, suffering from a slight attack of influenza.

The William J. Sherry service has called a convention of local managers in view of the fact that all picture houses are closed by order of the health boards. Mr. Sherry and the representative of the American Film Company in this territory, died recently from influenza. The contract after an attack of influenza.

Fred Savage, of the De Luxe Theatre, Kansas City, has been ill for days with influenza.

Mantles Goes to Mutual in Minneapolis.

I. F. Mantles, for the past year manager of the Kansas City branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has been transferred to the Minneapolis office. Minneapolis is Mr. Mantles' home city, and, therefore, the transfer comes as a surprise to friends. Mr. Mantles, who has been acting as assistant manager of the St. Louis Mutual Exchange, is in Kansas City looking over the situation. Mr. Brown has been associated with Mutual since its beginning, and has had wide experience in the game, having held practically every possible office in his eight years of experience.

Despite Epidemic, Hallenais Push Loan.

Despite the closing of the theatres Buffalo exhibitors have organized a number of units to hold outdoor meetings and attract large audiences, so that audiences which in the past were reached in the theatres regarding the Fourth and Loan. The chief exhibitors, are assisting him: Main and Utica streets, J. Michaelis; Lafayette square, according to street societies, F. J. Sitterly, W. Swartzemeyer, and H. Kohler.

Film Men Sell $3,700 of Bonds.

The film men and their staffs conducted a successful bond selling campaign at Lafayette square and sold $3,700 worth of bonds. Pictures and vaudeville were used to attract the public.

The campaign was directed by Charles A. Taylor, John M. Sitterly, Samuel Caver, F. O. Hopkins, M. Cohen, T. R. O'Brien, and John S. Barril. Mr. Sitterly also acted as chairman. W. Swartzemeyer and William Kohler.

The film exhibitions were conducted as follows: Main Street, the Fine Arts; Lafayette square, the Buffalo Film Exchange.

Whole of the thievish, Mr. Mogler found that they had rifled and cracked a safe in one of his rooms, and taken $30 in the evening. He has about $2,700 all told.

McKeen Succeeds Thomas at Fox.

George McKeen, formerly manager of the Paramount-Artcraft office, has succeeded D. M. Thomas as manager of the Fox Exchange in St. Louis. Mr. Thomas left the Fox Company recently with the intention of going to New York. Mr. McKeen has been in charge of the Fox Company, opened its beautiful theatre, the Liberty, in St. Louis. This theatre will be in charge of M. Marcus, who came from New York to direct its opening. Mr. Marcus was superseded last week, and is expected to return to the Fox Exchange office.

How Gardiner Syndicate Gets Its Business.

In forwarding the accompanying photograph, T. R. Gardiner, of the Gardiner Syndicate, vouches for the information that it gives one of the reasons why this concern, which he is the general manager, is enjoying a large volume of business. The gentleman to the left is Mr. Gardiner, and he is being assisted by John M. Sitterly, sales manager of the Gardiner Syndicate, while the gentleman who is being thus "induced" to sign a contract is James Wallingford, of Buffalo. Said contract calls for first-runs for the Gaumont serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," of Keith's and the Hippodrome theatres, Buffalo.

Though it has been in business less than six months, having purchased the interests and offices of the Veribest Photoplay Corporation, 47 West Swan street, Buffalo, the Gardiner Syndicate is one of the most successful in giving business. The company is specialized in short subjects, the majority of which are reissues, including Mack Sennett Keystone, Chaplin reissues, Patty Arbuckle reissues, and Shorty Hamilton reissues, as well as Billy West comedies, together with William S. Hart Hearsall feature reissues, and is releasing the new Gaumont serial, "The Hand of Vengeance." On account of the increase in business the Gardiner Syndicate expects within a short time to open a branch office in Albany to serve the Western section, and John Sitterly will be in charge.

By Mary Moore, 6035 Kingsbury Boulevard, St. Louis, Mo.

The Plaza Building in St. Louis gives promise of becoming the Film Building in every way. It is the standard Film Company, or the American-Standard, as they call it now, under the direction of Barro, Rock, the chief of the beautiful quarters in the Plaza Building, and, together with the Vitagraph, the Hubbard, and Penmar, has taken charge of marrying the place look like a real film centre. It is understood that a number of the other large exchanges are contemplating similar moves.

Tompres Buys the Duchess Theatre.

The Duchess Theatre on Grand avenue, near the theatre, was sold during the week by Sam Bromley to George Tompres. This theatre should be a good investment, as it is on the grand avenue "white way," within two blocks of Forest Park, and a block from the New Grand Central and Liberty theatres.

Charles Vollmar Resigns.

To Explain Film Trade Board System.

J. Ray Weinbrenner, counsel for the Film Board of Trade of St. Louis, has been called upon by the exchange managers of that city the system by which the St. Louis Board of Trade sprang into existence and worked out a satisfactory and successful organization. There are plans afoot also for similar organizations in Chicago, Indianapolis, Memphis and Dallas. The Kansas City Board of Trade will probably affiliate with the St. Louis Board at once after its organization.

The St. Louis Board has virtually wiped out "bicycling." In this district, and has done much to rid the game of the obnoxious system of C. O. 15 by parcel post under which certain unscrupulous persons "hooked" a number of the exchanges for freight charges.

ALLENS TO BUILD ON DANFORTH AVENUE

Permit Granted to Erect Big Theatre on an Important and Growing Toronto Thoroughfare

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ont.

T HE TORONTO city architect has issued a permit to Jule and J. J. Allen for the building of the proposed new theatre on Danforth Avenue, one of the most important and promising thoroughfares in Toronto's coming thoroughfares. According to the permit, the building alone is to cost $250,000.

With the granting of this sanction has come the end of an agitation on the part of interested property owners and numerous exhibitors of Toronto, nearby property owners, the civic property committee, and the city council. As a result of this any other new theatres in Toronto for the remainder of the war. The Ontario Government heard several deputations, who protested against the issuance of a license for the new house, and the property committee of the city decided by a vote of 6 to 3 to memorialize the Ontario Government with the same idea in mind. The situation was followed by several meetings of exhibitors who desired to protect the interests of the three theatres now in operation on Danforth Avenue.

In an interview, T. W. McGarry, a prominent member of the city council, said that the Government had nothing to do with the construction of theatres, and that as long as they are not located in residential districts, the use of amusement places the Government has no option but to grant the license.

The Allen Theatre is owned by Mr. McGarry, "is to regulate the kind of entertainment, electrical appliances, exits and entrances.

At its meeting on October 9, the Toronto City Council refused to oppose the erection of this new theatre in Toronto, a day or two later the city architect granted the permit for the new theatre.

This theatre will be situated near an important intersection and traffic at this point is known over the north and north-westerly directions of the city. A main thoroughfare which will connect with the new theatre, is being built, the two streets one long, artery of traffic across the northern part of the city.

Two Toronto Film Men Die of Influenza.

Up to Saturday, October 12, two deaths from influenza were reported in Toronto. The cause of death is influenza. Among the first two, one of the men was Edward M. J. Allen, manager of the Allen Theatre, and the other was Edward M. J. Allen, manager of the Dreamland Theatre, Edmonton, Alberta. The former has been the proposed area of the new theatre for several months, and the other was a victim of the disease in the past. The Allen Theatre has been closed for six weeks, and the Dreamland Theatre has been closed for two weeks. The two theatres are owned by the same company, which has other theatres in Toronto and other cities.

The New Allen Theatre, 5925 Sherbrook street, Montreal, includes two Power's Model 6-B motor drive projection machines, one a 600-watt, the other a 1200-watt, and an Acme Gold fibre screen and Speer carbons.

The theatre seats 1106, all on the main floor and there are about 150 chairs in the loge boxes, which are located at the rear of the theatre. A panelled glass wind screen protects the patrons from draughts from the door of the theatre. Ventilation is by means of a large fan in the roof. A heavy wine-colored curtain, with gold trimmings, hides the screen when not in use.

The theatre was closed on the following day, owing to a notification from the authorities to close all theatres. Afternoon prices will be 10 cents and 15 cents, with war tax included. War tax will be 25 cents, war tax included, with the loge seats 50 cents. There will be no Sunday shows, although it is the usual practice of Montreal theatre to operate on Sundays.

The Rosedale Theatre Will Save Coal.

The Rosedale Theatre, 593 Yonge street, Toronto, has been closed for two weeks, with a definite announcement in local newspapers that it has arranged to open on November 1st. The theatre is being run by the manager of the theatre, who is the manager of the past winter, and that the house will be heated mainly with wood and soft coal. The theatre is one of the oldest theatres in Toronto.

"SHOULDER ARMS"
Charley Chaplin in His Second Million-Dollar Comedy Exceeds Himself in Originality and Effectiveness.
Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

CHAPLIN has lined the clouds of war with silver festoonings of laughter and color. "Shoulder Arms," the new comedy, is another triumph of Chaplin, the movie maker, who will be remembered when the "dog," "slog," and the "dervish" episodes are forgotten. Comedy becomes a classic art form as Chaplin employs his massive and inspired stage production in this newest Chaplin—there is as much skill and inventiveness in the conception and execution of this film as there are in the development of intense dramatic elements in photoplaying.

Chaplin is divided into twelve "zones," and every episode is worked out to the last ounce of its comedy possibilities. From Chaplin's trench, in the hands of a drill sergeant, Chaplin passes to his bunk post-haste, and there develops a routine of comical situations that would make a dyspeptic discard his pep-sin. When Chaplin comes out of the trenches and affects a triumphant capture new drolleries develop, with the Hun-villains, who are the victims of Chaplin's inventive genius.

Next there is dangerous work to be done, and Chaplin, to his immensely humorous discomfort, is selected from a squad of hundred per cent volunteers. He goes into enemy territory on scout duty, and we find him now disguised as a st bump, with his arms serving as gueeful instruments of defense and attack—the lively branches of a dead tree trunk. Flirtis is dealt with severely in surprise attacks, and when a fat Bug takes up the chase, Chaplin shows how cleverly he is camouflaged.

There is a chase through a thickly treed bit of forest. Chaplin zig-zags to escape the shots fired at him by the pursuing Hun. While the spectator searches for Chaplin in one scene, even with the Hun to help hunt, the comedian is so well disguised that there is much surprise when he jumps down from a stump in the foreground and discloses himself to view. This "chase" feature embodies a succession of continuous laughs.

Ultimately captured, Chaplin makes a valiant effort to escape. It is the Irishman's fee to exactness: "When you put your finger on him he is not there!" This, indeed, is a phrase emerging with comic significance in the case. As Chaplin goes on with his wild cavortings the scene cuts into a ruined house, shell-shot, with a defenseless heroine war-shocked and in pitiable distress. Chaplin becomes a hero, thwarting the Boche at a dozen turns in the comedy adventure.

There is no end of fun in this devastated cottage, and when all of the laughs have been written out of the situation the scene changes to German headquarters, where the Kaiser, the Crown Prince and Bernberg are expected. Chaplin, as he has rescued a girl he has rescued from the Hun in the wrecked shack have considerable fun with the ordinary soldier, and when the "Chief Highest & Co." arrive the Kaiser and his kind get plenty of bruising, to be finally chased with Chaplin rolling in the hour of the automobile right into the Allies' camp with its load of Hunzollers.

In all this Chaplin never stoops to a single vulgar act. Right at the finish he plants a sturdy kick right where everybody in the audience will want to extend their own compliments—and so, despite opportunity, Chaplin restrains his favorite method of comedy impulse until the right time and place. Chaplin has never done anything in such artistic low-comedy cleverness as "Shoulder Arms." It is a comedy classic.

It is worthy of remark more than incidentally that Chaplin, brother and manager of the star, works all through the film as Charley's first aid and comedy assistant. Syd proved that Charley is right in his earlier claims that of the two brothers Syd was not such a bad cut-up after all. Syd is Charlie's "bunkie" and pal all through the new comedy, and contributes in no small degree to the results.

"THE IRON TEST" - First Two Episodes of Latest Vitagraph Serial Promise Plenty of Excitement.

IRCS is life the background against which the deeds of daring in the new adventures of "The Iron Test" is shown. Like all the other continued week next week stories produced by this company it is written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, and has the same jump-and-zinger situations and appeal to the seasoned taste of the continued serial film. Constructed to supply the needs of the spectator who craves the type of "original," "touching," "funny," "sensational" type of" the old man who is mad at his mental, "The Iron Test" starts off on the dead run, and the heroine and her sweetheart receive quick assurance that the villains of the plot are going to serve their deadly deeds red hot and searing. No frequent cutting of the style of the man who writes the subtleties.

In Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway the sheriff appears two actors whose acting ability of nerve will never fail them. This important point being satisfactorily settled, it is next in order to state that both leading members of the cast are uncommonly adroit at the kind of action required. As Bert Forde, a nervey young chap, who is thrown suddenly on his own resources, and joins a circus as a rough-rider and ex-auto-racing hot shot. In his acting he gives his likeable personality and knowledge of screen art into full play. Carol Holloway as Felicia Bennett, the young girl, who is the lady rider of the show, shares honors and dangers with her costar.

The first episode is called "The Ring of Fire." Bert's cousin is the chief villain leading the girls who have been blackmailed by his father has just died and left ten millions. If Bert is out of the way this money will come into his hands. With this incentive the cousin bends all his energy to invent some sure method of death for his cousin's fortune. Bert, his cousin, and Edith, who are traveling in a covered wagon, are sent at headlong speed toward a desert cliff, 400 feet high. A character know as the Red Mask adds mystery to the story.

"WHEN DO WE EAT?" - Paramount Presents Edna Bennett in a Comedy by Gardner Sullivan.

Reviewed by Louise Reven Harrison.

TITLE has nothing to do with the story except as a starting point. The theme revolves around the exaggerated type—the real ones are funnier—are playing in "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Miss Bennett is in the cast, and very hungry, when the action begins. She escapes, enters the car of a freight train, sleeps there on some straw, wakes in the morning, and is so starved that she jumps the train. She rolls down an embankment uninjured, and makes for a farm. The action now begins farcical, some very theatrical farmers, not the real kind, chasing the girl about, and eventually arresting her. A Keystone marshall takes her to a fare-jail, and all this is very stupid. She is released for no reason, and becomes a member of the household of an old lady who keeps boarders. In this household are two crooks waiting to rob the village bank and its young and innocent cashier. The crooks are operating under a Chicago leader known as Tenderfoot. When Mr. Sullivan devised the elements of a very clever comedy.

To rob the bank there is to appear an expert at opening safe combinations known as "Velvet Mary." The girl's nerves, however, realizing that she will only make herself known to them by indirect means. After the director of the police force, Mr. Tenderfoot, is sent to the detective "direction" as the gifted playwright it would have developed along more enterprising lines. The theme is a very negative one, but I believe that the hungry little actress is...
"Velve Mars" by entirely natural means, and a healthy and homely baby. Where there is theatrical exaggeration, artificiality and no revelation of human nature, the audience is in the wrong direction, but there is a good laugh or two in the final courtroom between the young couple. The first exhibition of Samuel Bennett, some redeeming glimpses of true humor which operate as a saving grace and may put the play over.

"LAFAYETTE, WE COME!"

Leonard, "Lafayette, We Come!" in these times of melodramatic "Kaiser" killings on the screen. Perret has capitalized on America's bloodthirsty passion upon the glorification of Franco-American unity of purpose and spirit. He has accomplished his purpose, made all the more compelling through the omission of the slam-bang assault upon Kaiserism that has been exploited so generally in earlier propaganda features.

In making this war picture Perret has pictured war just enough to carry the point, and so deftly has he turned the scenario into a clever satire, that the pernicious and propaganda in "Lafayette, We Come!" as there is in the more glamorous screen "Paris, Back to War," is at the hands of the moving picture industry in many other phases of the screen war.

The production is elaborate in detail. There are some extremely ornate settings, and what there is seen is well-developed by skilful direction. While the plot is rather slight, it is direct, and well-arranged. With the presentation of the heroic lead, and Dolores Cassinelli is adequate to the requirements of a role that excites little save fleeting vistas of her attractive personality. She is a pretty girl, and pleasing in method and manner. "Lafayette, We Come!" is sure to please the average run of picture audiences, and its purpose in more closely identifying the official relation appears, are increasingly advancing in the spirit of friendship between the two great Republics.

As a new side light on the war the Leonce Perret production will be hailed with as a commercial exploitaition. It should prove a profitable investment for exhibitors.

"EVERYBODY'S GIRL"

Vitagraph Production of O. Henry Story with Alice Joyce Will Make Many Gamers

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SOUTH AMERICA and the Far West were favorite fields for character and scenic effects in the days when his best stories are about New York and the people that are continually striving for the next position. "Everybody's Girl," produced by the Vitagraph, with Alice Joyce as the heroine, is a story of a country girl, having a bully of a romance, but it turns the light of O. Henry's sympathetic soul upon her, and shows a happy life that explains why so many young girls drift away from home influences when forced to live in the city and meet their men friends on the streets.

Florence is a pretty, healthy-minded young girl growing up in Brick Dust Row with her friend Ella, and goes out and sits in the park when she is forced to do the same thing. The parlor of their rooming house has been sublet, and the young people are forced to do the same thing. Both girls have picked up chance acquaintances and gone to the theater with them without being paid for it by for fun. One day, on a Coney Island boat, Florence starts a flirtation with a wealthy young chap who turns out to be the owner of Brick Dust Row. Their romance ends happily, but Florence almost loses him when she confesses her chance acquaintance. He is finally made to see that it is mostly his fault in giving the lodgers the use of the parlor.

There are other characters and incidents in this story that are plotted naturally. The doings of Bill, a gang leader, who is saved from the police by Florence, and the story of the husband of Ella, are among the most interesting features. With the exception of an entirely unembarrassed, badly done fire escape on the boat the picture is expertly produced.

It is interesting to note how easy it is to believe in the character of Florence, and that the young millionaire has not done a rash act that would have served only to improve the wretchedness of which any actress might be proud. May Hopkins as Ella, Walter McGrail as Bill, and, of course, as Bill, are the principal members of a uniformly competent support.

None of the situations need be given any serious thought. "Snobs" is, in fact, an easy play for parts. The leading actress, who plays the man in the play, plays the milkman who becomes an English Duke in the spirit of the French film. For an American audience, this scenario so appeals to the girl that she accepts her first suitor.

Walter McGrail plays Edward Andrews. The character lacks the winning qualities of the wide-awake young Irishman, but it is not without considerável sympathy for him, and acts with his customary earnestness and finish. COMMENTS

General Film Company

RAMBLE IN ASPHARTIA (Broadway).—Robert Harron and Anna Q. Nilsson in this story of very mild interest, depicting the wandering away of a young husband under the influence of a little girl. LITTLE MISS GROWN-UP (Oakdale).—This in five-feature little Gloria Joy appears as a child who has murdered her own mother. The action is slight and not altogether consistent. However, the acting of the little star will be found pleasing. WANTED, A BROTHER (Oakdale).—This is the last number of the Oakdale serial. It is the story of little Miss Gloria Joy, who does excellent work. There is plenty of heart interest in this offering, the work of the diminutive star is excellent. Altogether it is a pleasing example of her work.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

THE GYPSY TRAIL (Paramount).—Robert Housum's stage play furnished the scenario for this five-reel picture in which Bryant Washburn is starred. It is the second Washburn release under his Paramount contract. This is an amusing picture. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

A DAUGHTER OF THE OLD SOUTH (Pathe).—A story of a romantic girl's foolish infatuation and her attempted revenge, Pauline Frederick in the leading role. Reviewed in last week's issue.

SEVENTEEN (Paramount).—A sequel of the story by Booth Tarkington, with Jack Pickford fairly good in a role without adequate support.

PRIVATE PEAT (Arclight).—The true story of Private Peat. "Two Years Hell and Back." Peat the one-man Private Peat himself in the leading role. Reviewed in last week's issue.

First National Exhibitors

SHOULDER ARMS (First National).—Here is Charley Chaplin's second million dollar gross. It is a story of the most promising situations. "Shoulder Arms" is a comedy classic—just as inventive and structurally artistic as the most intense dramatic production. The screen will never be the same and the public will "laugh it's head off" at Chaplin in this, his newest and by far his best mirth-provoking picture.

Fox Film Corporation

THE WOMAN WHO GAVE (Fox).—Evelyn Nesbit, divorced wife of Harry Thaw (with her son, Russell Thaw, featured) is star of this historical picture. It is a thrilling story and Nesbit proves to be a big money maker for those who can exhibit it. That the picture of itself will entertain is the one thing sure. Miss Nesbit may not be considered a great actress, but there is the commercial possibility that curiosity seekers will be satisfied with the mere screen showing of an unfortunate woman who has been distressingly buffeted about by relentless fate. Right there is the advertising angle and the attending possibilities for a "clean-up."

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation

THORTH A WEEK.—Tom Moore and Tallulah Bankhead play the leads in this five-reel comedy, directed by Thompson Buchanan. It is the story of a chauffeur who marries a society girl and is interested in a racket and the story is amusing. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

EVERYBODY'S GIRL (Vitagraph).—A.O. Harlan directed but featuring some clever acting in this picture. The picture has its author's usual entertaining slant on life. Cast and production are worth watching. The picture is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

THE IRON TEST (Vitagraph).—The first two numbers of the new Vitagraph serial are called "The Ring of Fire" and "The Van of Disaster." Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady are the authors of the serial. It is a story of circus life and starts off like a circus parade. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation

SCREEN TELEGRAM No. 66 (Mutual).—The opening item in this issue shows President Wilson leading the Liberty Loan parade. The streets are built up with Argentina legs being floated from Oregon to Southern California; Knights of Columbus entertain women and men at the movies; women at Philadelphia taking to picking and shovels to help out railroad section gangs; and society women at work in big Government plant making war work easier.

Pathé Exchange, Inc.

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW No. 17 (Pathé).—Transportation of supplies in Italy opens this number. A striking feature of which in French Observation balloons, some of which are lost out of the hangar. General Pershing is shown inspecting German prisoners. Scenes from Chateau Thierry and the company town of Dornaments are pictured at the close.

THE SUN MESSAGE (Pathé-Astra).—Epide-Some startling occurrences take place in this installment, which keeps up the interest well. Eddy, who is the hero of the story, is taken to a prison in which the Inca's have confined her. He tells her his story and reveals to her the hiding place of the Sun Message and the collection of great value. This is afterward sought by Killman and his followers, who endeavor to kill Echo at the close.

TRAPPING TRAIORS (Pathé).—Episode No. 3 of "Wolves of Kultur." The action is definitely better than the number, which is better constructed than the previous ones. It concerns the further efforts of Alice and Bob to hold their papers, as Eddy, who is held a prisoner. Barclay and Helen also figure prominently in the number, which contains good dramatic situations throughout.

Universal Film Company

WHIRLWIND FINISH (Star), Aug. 24.—A two-reeler directed by Paul Robinson featuring Marie Wilcamp, Harry Blake, Clara Horton and others. This starts off like a comedy, but develops later an original and diverting plot, with some amusing features. The story is the one to see, and in race and in later years the same jockey wins it back for him. This has the atmosphere of the paddock in good measure and the close-ups of the racing events are excellent. A good one.—NEALY A CHAMPION (Star). Sept., No. 21.—A two-reel comedy by Harry Edwards featuring Dorothy Jordan, Harry Nolan and a bevy of college girls. The boys have a lot of fun with the faculty of their school. Finally all hands go to a house party, where Lee takes the place of the chaperone. Some lively situations result, but nothing offensive. The story is original in plot, but has a strong Juvenile flavor and will please.

FRENZIED ZILDY (Nestor), Sept. 22.—An eccentric comedy with poetic sub-titles. Charles Evans appears as an en-capsulated giant, who is thrown in gastronomy, which led to his incarceration. The humor is of a somewhat erudite order and will appeal to not overly particular.

GROWN-UP NUN (Nestor), Oct. 5.—One of the Lyons-Moran comedies that will be liked by the public. It presents a burlesque on the making of a picture based on an Alaskan story. The comedy is good and quite inoffensive and has been cleverly designed.

KING OF THE KITCHEN (L-Ko), Oct. 10.—A fine five-reel comedy called The Kitchen, Mae Emery, Billy Armstrong and Eva Novak in the cast. This begins in a restaurant and ends with a kitchen scene of the chef. A city couple drop in and make an effort to steal the cash box. This has a number of laughs in it, the action being of the non-comical type.

DON'T FLIRT (Nestor).—An eccentric comedy by Walter H. Newman, featuring Ernest G. Pilkington, Marisquina, etc. and Jane Bernoudy. The proprietors of two beach concessions get their love affairs tangled and this leads to a general mixup. There is hardly enough plot to hold this together and the action never becomes particularly funny. There seems to have been a stronger idea behind it to hold the interest well.

OH, MAN (Nestor).—A domestic farce-comedy by Tom Gibson. This is another variation of the familiar plot in which the young man marries a wife and child to fool his uncle. The colored baby brings the usual laugh, and the number will succeed with those in particular who are not too fastidious.

THE HUMAN TARGET (Western).—This two-reel picture tells an interesting story. In a small town a man who has lost his husband through the sinking of a ship, uses her wiles on a member of Stixono's royal family and obtains from him a SHOT IN THE DUMBWAITER (Star).—Another amusing "Paté" comedy, in which the Nye and Violet Moscavouch. The story contains two former convicts, one the brother of the other, who is a statistician. The convict tries to blackmail the youth and drag him back to a criminal life, but the sister intervenes. The plot and action are spirited and the comedy is good. A few one or two thrills are recorded, but the close is not very strong. This is about an average number.

ADVERTISING AIDES: Don't let any man, woman or child in your territory overlook the fact that you have the very latest Chaplin postcards, plenty of paper. Take up the equipment suggestions in the press sheet. You can write the house furnished with window displays with the same bunch of junk. You might start a Chaplin contest. It has been done. Last time in July the re-Phil Clark at It will work well again. This time make them copy the military equipment Chaplin carried best, offer a prize for the best equipped soldier.

ADVERTISING AIDES: Two one-sheets, one six-sheet, one twenty-four sheet. Press sheet, music cues. Half-tone and line-cut cartoon heralds, window card in two sizes. 25x28 cartoon in four colors. Slides.

"ASHES OF LOVE"*
The Graphie Film Corporation Presents Ivan Abramson's Latest Creation with James K. Hackett, Eiffie Shannon and Mabel Julianne Scott.

CAST:
James K. Hackett... Eiffie Shannon
Mabel Julianne Scott

THE STORY: The story presents the terrible picture of a woman who loving her dead husband forever more, as she tells him of that daughter's disgrace in order to save her reason. Ethel marries Arthur Woodridge, old enough to be her father, to provide comfort for her mother, though the latter urges against the move. The man she really loves marries her cousin, Helen. Helen discovers their affair, but refuses to sue for divorce. Ethel dies, and Woodridge is committed. At last, to save him from the suicide's dethroned reason is leading him to, the mother tells him of Ethel's infidelity, only to be denounced, but in the end the death of Helen's husband leaves her free to spread the two films.

Advertising Angles: In addition to capitalizing Miss Brady's popularity you have Miss Holmes to play upon. Work both angles. Recall the magazine publication of the story. For a catch phrase or "million dollar sweet-heart" idea. Allude to the unanswerable stories of girls who married for money, and tell that this is the story of a girl who didn't. Play it up as a "different" story.

Bradley Barker

The Story: Nicholas Barrable has retired to the country. He has with him his niece, Agnes, and her husband, George Roydant. He is at his wits' end from the dangers of the city, but they long for excitement, and flee to the quiet of the country. Agnes enters society, and George becomes engrossed in speculation. She becomes involved with an English nobleman, Lord Sulgrave, who falls into the clutches of a vampire. The climax comes when Agnes faces her desperate husband in her own room, and hides the corpse of her admirer. It is no wonder they agree that the quiet country life is best after all.

Feature Mary Roland as Agnes and Sam Hardy as Lord Sulgrave.

The Hodkinson Service Presents Louise Glauin in a Stirring Story of the Modernized Frontier.

CAST

Mary Thorne.............Louise Glauin
Mark Hamilton...........W. Lawson Butt
Chester Martin...........Hayward Mac
Marshall Thorne.........Joseph J. Dowling
Eagle....................Frank Lanning

The Story: Mary Thorne, the quarter-breed daughter of Marshall Thorne, has just returned from college, but when Mark Hamilton and his companion, Chester Martin, come, she adopts the beads and buckskin of the Indian the Englishmen suppose her to be an Indian. When they discover their error, Hamilton, who has come to love Mary, goes away. For her sake the father.braves the peril of Lost Lake to gain the gold he thinks may bring her happiness. He loses his life, but Mary finds in Hamilton’s arms the happiness she sought to give her.

Feature: Louise Glauin as Mary Thorne and W. Lawson Butt as Mark Hamilton.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Louise Glauin Star of a Stirring Story of the Modernized Frontier.

Advertising Angles: Tell that in this story Miss Glauin plays a part Indian girl, with a college degree. Lift the legend of Lost Lake from the press book, and get the editor to run it as a filler, with new men for your house. Then place it up and reproduce it in your advertisement, telling that there has been a story written about the legend. Do not make any direct connection between the first insertion and your advertisement. Let the first insertion appear to be accidental.

Advertising Aids: Two designs each one and three sheets. One six-sheet. Thumbnails and one to three column cuts in electro or mats. Press book.

Released October 14.

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor’s mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor’s audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

The "Y" and the WAR

When an officer said to Elsie Janis at the close of an entertainment in a Y.M.C.A. Hut: "You have kept my men from thinking of tomorrow's battle; they will fight better because of tonight," he expressed the big, underlying purpose of the Y.M.C.A. work. In other words, the

Y.M.C.A. is Helping Win the War

The Y.M.C.A. of wartime is vastly different from the Y.M.C.A. as most people know it. Its work has assumed tremendous proportions and achieved tremendous results. It is supplying a vital need—one that is not supplied in any other way. Its work is as important as that of any other organization which the war has developed.

Those of us who are bearing the lighter part of this great war burden must realize that it is not enough to raise and train an army. It is not enough to feed and clothe our men. It is not enough to care for those who are wounded. Soldiers are people, not machines. They must be kept mentally fit to make them efficient.

"It has been demonstrated—is being demonstrated all the time—that the nation gives freely for the building of ships, for the manufacture of munitions, for the housing, clothing and feeding of our fighting men and for providing medical aid to those who are wounded. It will give just as freely when it understands that without the games, shows, stores, reading, educational courses and home comforts which the "Y" provides, all this other giving will be futile.

Consider yourself in relation to your own work. Suppose you were taken from your job, removed to another town and put to work. Suppose at the end of each day's work you are your supper, went to bed, got up in the morning, had your breakfast and went to work and kept this up for weeks and months—nowhere to go in your idle time; nothing to do; no friends who cared about you. How long could you keep it up? How long could you do your work? That would be the soldier's life without the "Y."

Somebody said, "beware of the army that sings." Armies do not sing in response to orders. They do not sing because of the joy of fighting. They sing because their spirits are high, because they are mentally, morally and physically fit; and it is this condition of mind and body, this building up and maintaining of the morale of our men, which is the deciding factor between a victorious and a defeated army.

Four allied activities, all endorsed by the Government, are combined in the United War Work Campaign with the budgets distributed as follows: Y.M.C.A., $100,000,000; Y.W.C.A., $15,000,000; War Community Service, $15,000,000; American Library Association, $3,500, 100.

Steady, Flickerless Light

One of the features of the WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMP for motion picture projection, which will appeal to all progressive exhibitors and operators, is its simplicity of operation. When it is once properly focused, it requires practically no further attention or adjustment. The light source remains absolutely steady and uniform in intensity.

Three-wing shutters may be used with machines operated on alternating current circuits, and a perfectly steady picture obtained.

The WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMP is more reliable than the arc light, radiates less heat, and does not give off carbon gas or dust. (The latter is exceedingly injurious to the lungs of operators.)

We have prepared a booklet describing the use of the WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMP and its many advantages in motion picture projection, and will be glad to send a copy to any one interested.

Projectionist Ray Says:

"A projection machine, in action, is not visible to the public; but what it ACCOMPLISHES always is. It must possess QUALITY to 'get over.' That's Power's Cameragraph!

"Power's Cameragraph represents QUALITY in every part of its structure. It was QUALITY that put it at the head when this industry was started, and it is QUALITY that keeps it there today.

"Uncle Sam is the best QUALITY ever—particularly just now. It's QUALITY that has sent more than 1000 Cameragraphs 'over there' with the boys.

To MR. CHARLES CHAPLIN

with the compliments of

THE STRAND THEATRE

HAROLD EDEL, Managing Director

We think the capacity business of the Strand has done this week when most theatres have been shunned by panic-stricken people because of the epidemic is the most remarkable tribute ever paid any star of stage or screen.

We think it a most wonderful appreciation of "Shoulder Arms" that people should veritably take their lives in their hands to see it.

We are going to break our "one week run" rule and continue "Shoulder Arms" next week.

We are shouting this news from the housetops because we know you have chosen to make but two great pictures this year while you could have made double or treble the money by producing twelve mediocre ones.

We want you to know that your ideals are going to lead other true artists away from machine production—that your success has demonstrated what a star can do when he controls and is responsible for his own productions and we want you to know that, so surely as the day follows the night, the public will reward you.

We feel that the Strand through its efforts for the betterment of exhibitors has earned the right to thus publicly commend your efforts for the production of truly great pictures.

The Board of Health Said:—

To Executive Heads of All Film Producing Companies

You are making every effort to save money, men and material, both to aid the Government, and to put your business on a sound, economical basis.

Then you will want to know all about our processing system of printing and developing positive film at lower rates per foot than you can obtain anywhere.

We said lower rates—we don't care what you are paying—and we mean it.

IN FRANCE AND IN FLANDERS

In France and in Flanders a battle line hundreds of miles long stretches from the Holland border to Switzerland. From one end to the other it is aflame. It would be impossible for one individual to see it all, yet by means of the Official War Review your audiences may get a broader idea of the great things that are happening than the soldier in the front line trenches.

The official cameramen of United States, Great Britain, France and Italy have made this possible. Your audiences see what scores of them, all along the line, are seeing with Government aid. Do you wonder that the

INFLUENZA EPIDEMIC ON THE WANE

Reports from State Chairman of National Association of Motion Picture Industry who were requested to report by wire on the conditions in their states.

Conditions are extremely bad at the present time in Washington, Colorado, Nevada, Idaho, Texas, Iowa, Louisiana and Nebraska. In all of the other states from which reports were received conditions are improving, the epidemic is being conquered, and the theatres are expected to open within a week.

In the Western division of the country, conditions are particularly bad. Washington reports that it is impossible to determine the reopening dates of the theatres, and that it will be at least five days after the epidemic has reached its peak before the epidemics even show signs of fading. The death rate is climbing higher every day. Extremely drastic measures are being taken to check the epidemic, only essential workers being allowed on the streets, and all stores, with the exception of food and drug stores, being closed. No relief is expected inside of two weeks.

The epidemic is likewise on the increase in Idaho, Colorado and Nevada, with no relief in sight. It is expected that it will be at least two weeks more before the theatres of these states are permitted to reopen. Conditions in Wisconsin, Montana and Utah are said to be improving, and it is expected that the theatres will be doing business on or before Election Day. In Wisconsin the epidemic is being conquered in the southern part of the state, but is spreading in the northern half and in the rural districts. It is expected that the State board of Health will authorize the local boards to raise the ban at their discretion after November 1. In Minnesota cold weather and snow have arrived, and it is expected that this will wipe out the epidemic. It is believed that the theatres will be permitted to open about November 3.

Serious Also in Southwest.

In the Southwestern section of the country, Texas, Iowa, Louisiana and Nebraska are still confronting a serious condition. The cities of Des Moines and Omaha show a little ray of light, as the theatres in the former city opened on October 28, and the latter on November 3. Conditions throughout the rest of these two states, however, are bad, as the theatres have been closed for three weeks, and the present outlook is that they will not be reopened for another two weeks. In Texas only a few towns are open, and the death rate is high. Conditions in Louisiana and Nebraska are likewise bad. In Arizona it is expected the theatres will be open on November 4; Arkansas, November 6; Kansas, November 2, and Mississippi, November 4.

In Denver no official date for reopening theatres in that territory has been set. The epidemic is on the increase in many sections. A general permit for the reopening of theatres is not expected for at least two weeks.

What World Correspondents Report.

The following reports from World correspondents in various parts of the world will be found of marked interest. Among the most important of these messages is that from Chicago, in which we are told that indications forecast the opening of the theatres in that city this week:

Chicago Expected to Open Houses by End of October

Chicago, October 28.

Subject to the approval of the state director of health, Dr. D. E. Jack, Health Commissioner Robinson has announced the lifting of the quarantine on picture theatres in Chicago as follows under subjoined conditions:

On Wednesday, October 30, all houses north of Diversey Parkway; Thursday, all houses as far south as the north side of Twelfth street; Friday, all houses in the city, probably excepting those in South Chicago. The epidemic has been abating rapidly for the past three days, and if today's reports show a continuation of the downward curve, Health Commissioner Robertson will recommend the foregoing modifications of the city quarantine to State Health Director Drake, who is ready to act.

McQUADE.

Indiana Extends Closing
Order Until November 2

The ban on public meetings, theatres, schools, churches, etc., in Indianapolis, which was to have been lifted on Saturday, October 26, has been continued until November 2, as a result of an order issued October 25 by the State Board of Health. The decision to extend the order, which, by the way, is the third time it has been extended since it has been in effect, was reached after reports from out over the state are said to have convinced the board members that the time for lifting the ban is not yet ripe.

The only modification to the new order provides that in any county where influenza has not been epidemic for five days or more a special officer representing the national and state governments will be sent by the health board to make an investigation, and, if his report and other reports seem to justify it, then the board will issue such modification of the general order for that particular community as in its judgment seems proper. This means that theatres in some sections of the state may be reopened before the end of the week.

Conditions in Indianapolis have shown some improvement in the last few days. Up to 2 o'clock Saturday, October 26, 150 new cases were reported for the day, bringing the total in the city alone since the epidemic started to 5,317. The number of deaths reported for the day was 17.

More new cases were reported to the State Board of Health on Friday than at any other time during the week. Forty-seven counties reported 1,519 new cases. In all there are about 45,000 cases throughout the forty-seven counties...

The Indianapolis health authorities are now discussing the question of ordering everybody outside their homes to wear gauze masks as a preventive measure against the influenza disease. It is pointed out that in several other cities masks are being worn to a more limited extent, and have aided materially in cutting down the disease.

Some Seattle Exchanges

Work and Draw No Salary

BEGINNING with Seattle the Spanish influenza has quickly spread all over the Northwest territory, its appearance everywhere being quickly followed by orders from the local or state health authorities that all theatres, churches, and other places of public assembly close and remain closed until the epidemic was under control. So far it has not been controlled sufficiently to admit the opening of the theatres, although in Fremont, where it first appeared, and where it exacted a high toll of deaths both among the men in the Puget Sound Naval Station and among inhabitants of the town, the fatalities and the number of new cases appeared to be diminishing. It is feared, however, that the theatres there can be opened in another week. In Aberdeen, also, the closing order will probably be lifted within a week since tests proposed as being very light there. In Auburn there have appeared no cases, but the theatres were ordered closed on Sundays only, and the inhabitants of neighboring towns which have cases of influenza are accustomed to come to Auburn on Sundays to see the shows.

The cities and towns of Oregon were the only other places to be officially affected by the epidemic, and Salem, the capital, was not closed until October 15, ten days after Seattle. A few of the towns in eastern Oregon are open. About half a dozen towns of Washington, also, have not received a closing order at this writing, but all of Montana and Idaho are closed.

Exhibitors, Managers, Work Shipyards.

With such a state of affairs the Seattle exchanges, which serve the entire Northwest, have practically nothing to do. Consequently at a meeting of the Northwest Film Board of Trade late last week, the members were quartered for services of its members as a body to work in the shipyards of the city, which are so pressed for men. The offer was gratefully accepted by the shipbuilding companies, and at 4 o'clock each afternoon the film managers doff their high-brow, shell-rim spectacles and natty business suits for flannel shirts and overalls.

In the meantime shippers and inspectors have been discharged in most of the offices, and in some cases even the stockroom clerks are at work.

COMING to the conclusion that the influenza situation in Baltimore recommended the action, the closing orders which were recently issued by Health Commissioner Blake, of that city, were lifted on Thursday afternoon, October 24.

The new rules and restrictions as they apply to the theatres now to be enforced during the influenza epidemic are as follows: all houses are closed, as well as the pool and billiard rooms, beginning on Monday, October 28, may open at 7:30 p.m. and close not later than 11:30 p.m. Meetings may be held with secret orders between the same hours. Matinees are prohibited from being held by the theatres. The sale of tickets can only go on for evening performances until the seating capacity is filled, and no persons will be permitted standing.

In smoking in the theatres and spitting on the floors of such places also come under the ban of the health commission.

The health authorities throughout the State of Maryland were also notified. Washington, through the State Bureau of Communicable Diseases, on the same day that any restrictions of quarantine which had been established by the recommendation of the Government they were not permitted to raise.

San Francisco Houses Closed by Order of Health Board

A DATE line is almost necessary in connection with anything written concerning the moving picture industry these days, and this fact will be true today may be far from representing the situation tomorrow. A week ago theatre owners were being used as a target by the health authorities, but little below the normal. With the week the cases of Spanish influenza increased from about two hundred to nearly three thousand, and theatre attendance dropped more than 75 per cent. Less than a week ago theatre owners expressed the opinion that their places of business would not be closed, but that late conditions have taken such a change for the worse that drastic action on the part of the health authorities was regarded as a foregone conclusion.

A meeting of the San Francisco Board of Health was held on the afternoon of October 17, and a resolution was passed closing all theatres, moving picture houses, concert halls, dance halls, churches, schools and places of public gathering, the order being effective the following day. Dr. William C. Hassler, chairman of the board, and members of the board that from three to five weeks would be necessary to control the spread of influenza. Dr. George E. Enbright, president of the State Board of Health, was present, and approval of this action, and further states that the state board will adopt most of the provisions of the local resolution at a meeting to be held shortly, thus closing theatres throughout California.

Theatres in Many Towns Closed.

Many individual communities in the San Francisco region have already placed a temporary ban on theatres. The list to date, with the number of moving picture houses affected, including the following: Atascadero, 1; Antioch, 1; Auburn, 1; Benicia, 1; Colusa, 2; Clovis, 1; Chico, 3; Dunsmuir, 1; Dinuba, 1; Exeter, 1; Fresno, 10; Fremont, 1; Fort McDowell, 1; Gilroy, 1; Goshen, 1; Guernsey, 1; Gaviota, 1; Larkspur, 1; Los Banos, 1; Livermore, 1; Lemon Cove, 1; Mare Island, 1; Mendlo Park, 2; Mountain View, 1; Modesto, 1; Mountain view, 1; McCloud, 1; Oakland, 1; Park Polo, 2; Point Richmond, 1; Redwood City, 2; Richmond, 2; Redding, 1; Redwood, 2; Richmond, 1; Rio Vista, 1; Rio Linda, 1; San Jose, 6; Suisun, 1; South San Francisco, 1; Salinas, 1; Santa Cruz, 2; Stockton, 7; San Mateo, 2; Sacramento, 10; Sanger, 1; Santa Clara, 1; Sisson, 1; San Francisco, 1; etc. This is a very small list, and no doubt many other places not so far included will be closed later in the week.

Southern Picture Patrons

Eager for Theatre Openings

SPANISH influenza has occasioned a complete abatement in amusement activities in the South, and especially has this been the case in Louisiana, which has been hardest hit, both in the matter of the ravages of the disease upon the business interests and its invasion of the homes of people, closing schools and churches, and causing suffering and death.

The closing of all theatres and other places of amusement in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama has made the picture business there as well as in the rest of the South, as a result of the closing of the theatres, has been centered upon the contagion, but they have become amusement hungry, and they appear to be at a loss what to do and where to go for amusement and relaxation. Exhibitors regard the closing order as a sort of a blessing in disguise. Their patronage has been "cured" previous to the order partly because of inclement weather and partly because of public unrest. Some of them were merely making expenses, and a few closed even before the official notice was issued. The drain on the theatres was closed, the patrons began to realize that one of the diversions which they had come to regard as a matter of fact during the winter season of the year, has disappeared, and that the couture has been manifested in various ways. Hence the exhibitors figure that when the permission is again given, the patrons will flock to the theatres with open arms.

The best information now at hand indicates that Louisiana places of amusement will not be allowed to open much before November 10, if, in fact, they are permitted to open at all. Some of the shows in Mississippi are running, but this is not generally the case.

Philadelphia Closed Indefinitely

Philadelphia exhibitors and exchange men, whose hopes have risen that they would be permitted to reopen their theatres and resume business again beginning Monday, October 28, were sadly disappointed when a special meeting held by the Board of Health on Wednesday, October 23, when the members decided to continue the closing order for all places where liquor is sold, public meetings, etc., indefinitely. The board will not meet again until "some time next week," at which time it will hold a special meeting with sufficient decrease to warrant it, a date will be set for the lifting or the modification of the closing order.

Baltimore Theatres to Open for Evening Shows Only

November 9, 1918
KANSAS CITY, like other sections of the country, is suffering materially from the epidemic of Spanish influenza. Even though Kansas City was making itself felt through the past two weeks. The medical authorities early took steps to stamp it out if possible, and a number of schools and places of business closed. In addition, the Chamber of Commerce, attended by the city health board, members of the Chamber, and members of the allied theatres interested, by the managers of vaudeville, burlesque and operators. The result of this gathering was that resolutions were adopted urging that places of amusement, churches and schools should be closed, and that crowds in other places of business, street cars and cafes should be limited. This went into effect at midnight Tuesday, October 21. A week later, conditions looking favorable for a control of the epidemic, a second meeting was called for October 24, attended by the same representatives. As a result the theatres again opened and remained so Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. This proved to be an unfortunate move, as the cases of influenza, already on the increase, increased in number, apparently increasing slightly.

October 16, physicians of the City Board of Health, amusement representatives and other interested groups, met for a conference. The theatre men stoutly maintained their willingness to cooperate in every way to stamp out the epidemic, and asserted that the closing of the theatres would bring about the desired result they were more than willing to do so. However, they also insisted that no discrimination should be made, and that the number of theatres and other places of business should be reduced as well—department stores, street cars, hotels and every other place—stating it as their opinion that a very strict quarantine should be instituted. Members of the Chamber of Commerce, however, seemed to feel more or less in sympathy with the merchants, and induced the proper authorities to issue a proclamation, namely, that the number of shoppers was already reduced by the scare, and that stores should open at 9 and close at 4 o'clock.

The closing order for Kansas was extended another week by Governorapper and the State Board of Health. This applies to theatres, schools, churches and all public meetings.

Michigan's Health Board Shuts Theatres Indefinitely

SPANISH influenza has finally dealt its death sting to the amusement business in the State of Michigan. Up to a week ago the epidemic was raging in sectional parts of Michigan only. The governor and the State Board of Health issued an order on October 19 at the state capital, and after a two-hour discussion, at which were present the Detroit city health officer and several physicians, doctors, lawyers, and owners of all theatres, dance halls, skating rinks, churches and pool rooms, effective from October 20, for an indefinite period.

The loss of the Detroit theatres has the Detroit exhibitors bitterly fought against. At the meeting, there, arguing that keeping them open did no more than harm not only because of their latest ventilating systems, but because of their educational value. Dr. Inches, of Detroit, up to the very last was opposed to a theatre closing order. He had before him at this meeting charters stating that in cities and towns throughout the state theatres had been closed the number of influenza cases increased after the closing rather than decreased. The epidemic had been following the meeting of in the attendance at theatres of from 33 to 50 per cent, no theatres had been crowded, and every theatre was opening and closing according to the weather and to the coolness of the audience, turning it into a handkerchief. Several persons have been put out of theatres because they failed to do this. The theatre owners were taking every precaution, some going so far as to disinfect their doors and taking up their carpets before and after every matinee and evening performance.

Removal of State Ban Suggested

Governor Sleeper has given no assurance as to when this would permit the theatres to reopen. It has been suggested to him that he remove the state ban and leave the matter entirely in the hands of the health authorities in each town. But he has given out no definite statement as yet, and there is very little likelihood that the ban on theatres will be removed before November 1. The situation in Detroit has been on the increase since the closing, and just today, October 23, all schools are being closed and retail stores in Detroit are ordered to close at 4 p.m.

Even outdoor public gatherings are being prohibited, and now there is talk of having everybody vaccinated. Complaining theatre owners who believe their business has been dropped by closing house are going to obey all laws to the letter, and have assured local health authorities of their fullest cooperation in every way.

Closing Order Welcomed by Toronto Exhibitors

T HE closing of Toronto's theatres for an indefinite period, starting with Monday, October 21, by the local health officer was welcomed by the exhibitors, according to Thomas Scott, secretary of the Motion Picture Exchange, Toronto, Ontario. Speaking for the exhibitors, Mr. Scott said: "It is a fine idea. The moving picture men are always ready and willing to do what the authorities when the general public is benefited."

Toronto was almost the last city in Canada to close its theatres, and local exhibitors became just a little anxious, although they felt the people would blame the theatres for the spread of the disease locally. The people and the papers were more interested in the closing of theatres. The exhibitors were quite ready to close down, because attendance had fallen away off, except in a few instances, during the latter part of the week of October 11.

On the day that Toronto theatres closed all Canadian houses should have started in the great drive with the Victory Loan pictures to boost the Fifth Canadian Loan. On October 15, a member of the Motion Picture Distribution Committee of the Canadian Government, announced that on this day the theatres were open from coast to coast. It was clear that the five hundred or more special loan pictures were lying on the shelves of exchanges. He did announce, however, that the pictures would be presented in any theatre which would be reopened before the end of the official loan campaign for such period as would be allowed before the termination of the drive. The seventeen different subjects were to have been presented during the four weeks starting October 21.

At a meeting of exchange company heads in Toronto the question of what would be done by the exchanges during the "dark period" was discussed, and it was finally agreed to place all exchange-published health conditions to the writer. Branch exchanges are located in six cities—Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, St. John, Calgary and Vancouver. They determined what could be done, but it was felt that no step could be taken as a whole until some future date, the date being determined by the board of health. If small town theatres reopen before Toronto gets back to normal life the outside houses would be getting first runs of features and serials.

Rochester Opening Prebemaletical

The prospect in Rochester is that the theatres will be reopened during the first week in November. The original closing order expired on October 21, but conditions were such that it was extended and will be in effect at least one more week. There is no reason to believe that the order will be lifted on October 28. Instead of declining, the death rate has been gradually increasing here, although the number of new cases has been daily receding. Should continued improvement of the situation occur for several days in succession it is extremely probable that the closing order will be rescinded almost as suddenly as it was issued. The general opinion, however, is that the earliest possible date on which theatres will reopen is Saturday, November 7, but that whole thing is extremely prebemaletical.

Scourge Still Bad in Raleigh

In the opinion of Dr. Charles W. Stiles, of the United States Health Service, stationed at Raleigh, N. C., in charge of the influenza epidemic throughout the state, the worst will come before the middle of November. Conditions are gradually worsening, while other sections of the state are recovering somewhat from the scourge. Raleigh, being on the coast and the larger cities to be attacked by the malady. of the past. Wilmington closed tight on September 27, and was, therefore, closed for a period of three and a half weeks, during which all theatrical organizations were kept closed. At Richmond, five of the five theaters there. The action of the Board of Health was made known on Thursday afternoon, October 17, following acquiescence in the counsel of the two statesman who reconstitute the service at all of the theaters. On Saturday morning an effort was made by a minority of members of the Board to rescind the order, but this was nullified only by the fears of the timid ones. Business for the first three open days was reported extremely light by all the houses here.

Indications given out by the Health Board on Monday, October 28, that orders will be given that Charlotte theaters may reopen on Wednesday, are being comparatively light in its toll in Charlotte, owing to the fact that prompt action was taken before it had gained such strength as to make it necessary to close down all the theaters in the city as a whole. The action of the Health Board is taken apparently to keep their organization intact at heavy expense in order to be able to meet the large number of bookings which have been pouring in immediately upon the reopening of the theaters throughout the state.

Columbia to Open Early in November.

Indications at Columbia, S. C., point to a lifting of the closing order on theaters on or soon after November 1, reports from the health officials of the state being to the effect that the influenza epidemic is slowly subsiding and with favorable weather should be well in hand by that time. Spartanburg officials have been heard to say that they expect to lift the ban on November 1, although action of the State Board of Health will be necessary before any single theater anywhere in the state may open.

The closing order for the entire state was put over simultaneously by the State Health officials, and they will be giving guidance and advice to the different city health boards. It is not expected that the order may be annulled in the same manner, as some cities have suffered more acute attacks and are in much worse shape at this date than others, making individual orders necessary to open the different towns. The cities in which camps are located, including those in Spartanburg, Charleston, and Columbia, will probably not open as early as other less congested towns throughout the state.

Louisville May Open November 15.

The influenza epidemic has the hands of the exhibitors and film men of Louisville, Ky., tied firmly just now, and from good reports received it looks as though November 15 before things open up. Saloons and soda fountains are closing at 6.30 in the evening. All chairs have been removed from hotel lobbies, or prevented from being placed, a place in the city where the visitor can sit down and take things easy. Street cars are regulated to the number of passengers which may be carried, and must keep all windows open, a part of them being kept open even when it is raining.

The epidemic has spread to the rural districts, especially the coal and lumber regions, which are hardly turning a wheel at the present time.

May Lift Ban in Virginia in November.

Richmond and other cities in Virginia will not like to hear the report on the second week in November, sentiment being very much opposed to risking another epidemic scourge through allowing theaters to again open. For our part we feel that the State Board of Health will not lift the ban until all vestiges of influenza in the shape of an epidemic has passed.

Certain elements in Richmond made an effort Monday to have the state Board of Health reopen theaters on October 20 and the theaters on the following day, but sentiment of the powers was unanimous against such a course, and the state officials assured themselves to at least two more weeks of inactivity.

No Abatement of Scourge in Southwest.

With the influenza epidemic still raging throughout the Southwest there is little likelihood that motion picture theaters in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas will open during the third week in October.

For the present, El Paso, Dallas, and San Antonio, the three large Texas cities which apparently were going to keep their shows open despite the epidemic, closed all theaters October 16. In a few smaller towns the managers have been allowed to open owing to favorable local conditions. Amarillo, in the Panhandle, is the largest Texas city which had theaters open. But at one time.

Dallas film men are still keeping their organizations intact and hoping for a change for the better soon. Most of the film men and exhibitors in the larger towns in the state have been allowed to open. With the threat of the epidemic and the drawbacks of business to clean their quarters, move furniture, remodel offices, etc., office employees are standing around with nothing to do.

Requests to the Governor of Oklahoma that theaters be allowed to open again brought the reply that no opening would be permitted except on the recommendation of the Board of Health. The Board of Health give no satisfaction to inquiries regarding an immediate opening.

Arkansas a few scattered towns are reopening their theaters.

Dallas theaters hope to open before October 26. The situation in Dallas has improved slightly during the past few days.

Syracuse Reports Decrease in Cases.

Theaters in Gloversville, Amsterdam, Poughkeepsie, Schenectady, Albany, Rome, Ilion, and other cities east and west of Utica have suffered alike from the epidemic. Utica has been closed for two weeks and more. On Monday, October 21, Syracuse reported a decrease in the number of cases in that city, and it is said that he would discuss the advisability of lifting the closing order established two weeks ago.

Rescind Closing Order for Utica.

The theaters of Utica, as well as the houses in other cities in eastern and southern New York, have been closed for more than two weeks as a result of the prevalence of the Spanish influenza epidemic. The order closing the Utica theaters was given Tuesday, October 15, and theaters were closed until the order was rescinded allowing them to open Monday, October 28.

Cleveland May Open Early in November.

Indications that the Spanish influenza will keep theaters in Cleveland closed until after the end of November, perhaps longer, started the exhibitors to worrying during the second week of the shutdown.

Health Commissioner Rockwood stated that in his opinion the theaters could not open until a few days or a week at the end of November and signs of abatement. The middle of the second week there was no let-up, although the health commissioner thought the outbreak of the epidemic over.

The health department was of the belief that when the epidemic got down to a point where it was when the theaters closed, then the next 30 days would see the theaters to open within three or four days from that time.

However the zone system may be adopted or the entire state open the theaters according to wards in the city—according to the situation in each ward.

Washington May Open in November.

A steady decrease in the number of new cases of influenza may result in the reopening of the picture theaters in Washington during November. November 4 has been set as a tentative date for reopening the schools, and it is believed that the lid will be lifted off the class rooms and normal business then resumed.

Washington has been heavily hit by the epidemic, which, to date, has caused approximately 1,500 deaths. All business has been practically closed, and the number of people ill greatly handicapping the city. During the closed period, a number of exhibitors have devoted the time to cleaning the plants and redecorating their houses, while the exchanges took advantage of the opportunity to bring their work right up to date and make plans for the big selling campaigns that will open when business is resumed.

Ban Lifted in Petersburg.

Theatre managers of Petersburg, Va., have been kept on the job and kept guessing every minute in the day by the action of the City Health Board. Thursday morning, October 24, the board met and took action, which was to rescind the ban on downtown theaters, to be effective Monday, October 28. Storms of protests resulted immediately after the news spread. Another meeting of the city council was called to set the order of the opening order, with no new date set. Friday afternoon they again met, and issued orders granting the theaters authority to open on the following day, Saturday, their action being a surprise even to the theatre managers themselves, who have been playing for an early opening, but did not hope for such early action.

Newport News Theatres Open.

Theatres at Newport News, Va., opened during business on Monday, October 28, this action of the City Board of Health following recommendations from the state board, after canvassing the local epidemic situation and finding it greatly on the wane. Local quarantines of shipbuilding plants and camps were removed at the same time, and theaters will undoubtedly do capacity business.

Situation Improving in St. John.

The influenza situation seems to be improving greatly, and strong hopes are expressed that the theaters in this city, S. J., will open in the near future. N. B., may be opened next week. The matter is entirely in the hands of the Department of Public Health, and it rests with them to remove the ban when they are satisfied that no danger exists.
JOHN H. COLLINS DIES OF PNEUMONIA
Talented Young Metro Producer and Husband and Director of Viola Dana Ill Only a Week

JOHN H. COLLINS, Metro director, husband of the Metro star, Viola Dana, died of pneumonia at the Hotel Marie Antoinette, New York, October 23, after an illness of less than a week. He was probably the youngest director of note in the country, having been born in 1890. He not only directed Miss Dana in practically all of her Metro productions, but was the author of many of them, supplying the scenic versions of all. Among his original stories dramatized from the screen for his girl-wife's use were "The Flower of No Man's Land," "Riders of the Night," his young wife's screen values and did everything possible to bring "Blue Jeans," a picturization of Joseph Arthur's famous old melodrama, is considered to be the best work ever done by star and director. It was issued as a Screen Classics seven-act feature. Other superlative productions directed by John Collins and starring Viola Dana were "Aladdin's Other Lamp," "Opportunity," "Gates of Eden," "God's Law and Man's," "Lady Barnacle," "Weaver of Dreams," "The Winding Trail," and "The Light of Happiness." The list of his productions was a long one, and John Collins was beloved by all the members of the Metro staff of players, directors and officials. He was considered a young man of vision and rare ability, and his loss is keenly felt. His wife was with him at the end.

Death of Julian L'Estrange
ONE of the skillful actors who had brought great stage experience to meeting pictures was Julian L'Estrange, known in both England and America for his excellent acting, who died as a result of an attack of Spanish influenza at his home in New York on October 22. The news of his death first came to the profession at the funeral of Harold Lockwood, when telephone arrangements were being made for the accommodation of Mr. L'Estrange's body at Campbell's undertaking establishment. Funeral services were conducted at Campbell's Funeral Church.

Conspicuous achievements in theatricals made the name of Julian L'Estrange widely familiar to the public, and when he undertook moving picture work he was considered an acquisition to the screen. He will be recalled for excellent work in the Goldwyn production of "Thais," in which Mary Garden was starred, and as a Metro player in support of Emily Stevens—these being his more recent screen accomplishments. He also had been seen to advantage in a number of Famous Players subjects. Mr. L'Estrange was thirty-eight years of age, and his wife, Constance Collier, was playing with him in "The Ideal Husband," a stage production, when he was fatally stricken.
HEALTH OFFICIAL CONDEMNS HYSTERIA
Dr. Bracken, Secretary of Minneapolis Board Says Conditions Do Not Warrant Drastic Action

ALTHOUGH theatres of Minneapolis and Duluth are closed by the influenza order, St. Paul is still an open town as far as moving pictures are concerned, but there has been some agitation for the reopening of showhouses in St. Paul, especially since churches have been permitted to conduct services and schools have returned in defiance of the closing order issued by Dr. H. X. Guilford, city health commissioner.

With moving pictures and other places of entertainment still proceeding without interruption, St. Paul is drawing many patrons from Minneapolis to its showhouses; especially on Sundays when a large number of Minnesotans going to the Twin City for their entertainment. This fact has created some feeling among the exhibitors of Minneapolis.

The statement of Dr. H. M. Bracken, secretary of the Minnesota State Board of Health, that the closing of all public amusements, created a sensation in local theatrical circles and will be read with interest by moving picture men throughout the country.

"Minneapolis," he said, "is in the throes of violent hysteria, produced by the hallucination that an epidemic of old tuberculosis is more serious than ordinary, is Spanish influenza."

Denies Situation Is as Bad as Believed.

Dr. Bracken's announcement tended to lessen the fears of Minnesotans, disturbed by the closing of theatres, schools, churches and all public gathering places, by order of the Minneapolis health department.

Dr. Bracken, whose protest against drastic action in St. Paul prompted professional as well as laymen to decide against closing all public places, believes the people of the state, and in Minneapolis particularly, have foolishly allowed themselves to believe conditions are much more serious than they actually are.

In expressing regret because of the action of Minneapolis officials in closing public places, and especially schools, Dr. Bracken explained that the present epidemic—even at its worst in certain sections of the United States—could not be considered as serious as diphtheria and other diseases.

In substantiation of this statement he said health statistics would show that in army cantonments—where the epidemic of Spanish influenza has had its greatest effect—the death rate is only 4 per cent, while the diphtheria death rate, in the community at large, even with the use of antitoxin, is 0.0 per cent.

"In my opinion many of the cases, so-called influenza, are nothing more serious than ordinary grip," said the state health officer. "What is more serious than I can explain the action of Minneapolis officials in closing the city, as has been done. It is not in a sense of criticism that I am speaking. It is merely an expression from a State official who believes that a serious mistake has been made.

Conditions do not warrant such drastic action, in my opinion, and I believe that Minneapolis is in the throes of a violent hysteria, which surely cannot be abated by official action which frightens the community. Measles, diphtheria or any other contagious disease causes many deaths in army camps or civilian communities if an epidemic started, and surely the fatality among civilians is not so high as among soldiers. In fact, nearly all of the deaths reported are among men in service.

Reports Not Necessarily Correct.

"Everything in the nature of a cold is called influenza these days, but that is not necessarily the fault of the attending physicians. The scarcity of medical men—physicians—busier by far than ordinarily—have been compelled to accept the word of patients, as to symptoms, and with influenza it is not so difficult to distinguish it from other diseases; and the symptoms well known to all, and not so different from grip, many 'reports, not correct, are made."

"In the usual year—every year—when street sprinkling is stopped, we are subject to grip. Every year there are hundreds of cases of grip, and, of course, many more than the official reports. They will be far more serious than others in the past twenty or more years. True, the Spanish influenza has had its bad effect in many communities, and that has stirred up the idea that it not nearly so serious as the people have been led to believe. The present epidemic is similar to that of 1899 and 1900. What the people must do is to awaken to the fact that the epidemic is not so serious, but that it can be stamped out without great mortality."

Theatres Should Not Have Been Closed.

Dr. Bracken believes that the closing of schools was entirely unnecessary, and that the closing of theatres should not have been ordered at this time. In defense of his argument that the public schools should have been allowed to remain open, the physician explained that the closing of schools caused all children, including the slackers, to recede from the watchful eyes of intelligent teachers, and under the consistent care of twenty-seven trained nurses would be far more safe than playing at large gatherings with disease unchecked.

"Modern theatres, with their latest improvements in ventilation, cannot be considered as seriously dangerous to health as diphtheria or other diseases."

English Actors' Migration

DIRECTLY after the war in Europe broke out considerable adverse comment was heard in the United States over the evident fact that numerous English actors had been passing from the other side. Evidently the impression prevailed, and not without reason, that many Thespian deems it better to sail away from that being conscripted into the respective armies of the befriending countries of Europe. At the outset of the war conscription was not immediately adopted in England, but the handwritings were on the wall. It was not enough, and this foreshadowed drastic measures to get men to carry on, members of the theatrical profession, especially in London, the struggle for bread in a land where strife had not become evident.

It will be recalled that many American actors went to England in 1915 complained that their places were being taken by English newcomers. Whether the complaints were merited or not, the fact remains that immigration of actors into the United States expanded somewhat during the years 1914 and 1915. Thus official records compiled at Washington show that whereas 711 actors arrived here in the year 1913, 1,919 came in during 1914, while in 1915 11,206 were admitted. In 1912 and 1911 arrivals aggregated 873 and 1,020 respectively.

Since 1915, however, the inward movement of actors has dwindled considerably, only 632 actors having been admitted into this country in 1916, and in 1917 arrivals were further held down. In 1918 the figures receded to 214. Thus from the high point in 1915 to the light inflow of 1918 there has been a drop of 91 per cent. In the like period all immigration decreased 66 per cent.

Immigration of actors intending to make the United States a permanent home constituted a fraction of 1 per cent, of the entire movement of immigration.

At the same time emigration as represented by the outward movement of alien actors abroad have recorded figures. For example, only 154 actors went out during the year ended June 30, 1918, this number comparing with 159 in 1917, 181 in 1916, 201 in 1915, 257 in 1914, 325 in 1913, 573 in 1912.

Actors of alien birth, like other foreign born immigrants, once here usually stay.

The following table gives an idea of the outward and inward flows as highlighted in the official returns as actors:

PEDIGEO OF OKLAHO EXUDES THOUGHTS

Highland Theatre,
Guthrie, Okla., October 22.

BY

O'NEILL

You will no doubt be surprised to hear from me. But since the influenza started I have been so worried that I have slept more than fourteen hours a night.

Scientists tell us that influenza is a thing that started. We have no reason to doubt these men. They are smart, and should know whether or not they are paid for being smart. What we seem to need now is someone to stop it. That great job seems to be up to us.

If I had more time, more space, and more brains, I would tell you several things about “flue.” First, whatever would be the result should we try the following:

If a flea that flew
Got a fly to fleec.
Get the flea that flew
And make him a flea.

I write these things because of my pure unadulterated love of picture showmen in general. For we are getting ours.

We have no hesitancy in addressing you at any time regarding this great subject just as if you were my equal in every way. We were put on earth to be of use to each other, and if, by chance, you had better understanding and a better understanding of things in general than the other it is the wish of the great Creator. Let us so live that there is no great anarchy. We shall not be afraid to look our Maker straight in the face, I now dampen my slender pink tongue and shall seal this great message from the nude eyes of this hilarious but one of the wise.

As we still have no shows here, I must quit and write eggs.

Your esteemed and well done friend,
NED PEDIGEO.

PhIL LANG-EDITING FILMS FOR ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT

CHARLES R. Lang, well known in motion picture circles through his long activities as author, editor and production manager, is now engaged in the Industrial Education Section of the Ordnance Department, having taken up governmental duties last August.

Making his headquarters in New York, Mr. Lang is engaged in the study of selected material, films which are shown in war plants to stimulate productive effort. Two pictures prepared by him entitled, “America’s Defenders” and “Freedom Forever,” each in one reel, are now in circulation, and he is at present at work on others.

By careful editing, Mr. Lang is telling a compelling story in these films which depicts the activities of our armies overseas and the vital necessity of continuous productive effort on the part not only of the workers at home but the fighting forces.

Mr. Lang earnestly requests motion picture producers to co-operate with him in this work. The films, he states, are not shown in theatres or any place where an admission is charged. While he is particularly interested in the community theatres, he desires to cooperate with all producers in the educational work.

Jutkovitz Brothers Hang Up Record

Jutkovitz Brothers, proprietors and managers of the Columbia Theatre, Far Rockaway, N. Y., are justly proud of their record in the Liberty Loan campaign. From September 20 to October 19, inclusive, they reported gross sales amounting to $1,193.20. Their lowest figure was $575.00 for October 3, and they hit high-water mark October 16, with $312.10.

Mrs. A. Warner Dead

Mrs. A. Warner, wife of A. Warner of Warner Brothers, producers of “My Four Years in Germany” and other patriotic features, died at her home on Monday, October 28, after a brief illness of pneumonia.
of health authorities. Closed houses are being renovated and precautionary measures are being enforced in communities where houses are permitted to remain open. Preventative propaganda is being freely circulated on the screen and through house programs, all of which will go a long way to break the progress of the disease.

While this enforced closing means a large financial loss to every branch of the amusement business, we have yet to hear of the picture theatre owner who has failed to give the fullest co-operation to the authorities. That time has passed when picture men were compelled by force of law to observe even the commonest regulations, which indicates some steps in advance over other days together with the recognition of a strong sense of responsibility on their respective communities in times of distress. This recognition is the thing that makes the theatre man and his house a part of the community in which they do business and earns the respect and confidence of that community. When all these present troubles have passed picture theatre men will find their reward in renewed and increased patronage which their services have earned. As the old copybook phrase declares: "Virtue has its own reward."

** *

IT HAS been rumored that, owing to the receipt of so many conflicting stories as to the profits of the picture business and the inability of congressional committees to discover just what proportion of the taxes the industry ought to pay, the Government may decide to appoint a film administrator whose duty it shall be to ascertain just what the motion picture business amounts to and what revenues it should pay. While this suggestion is somewhat revolutionary in its nature, there are those who feel that it would not be unmixed with beneficent effects. But what is the Government to do? It has tried to be equitable in its treatment of the motion picture business. It has acknowledged its essentiality to the extent of permitting it to continue against a strong feeling in certain quarters that its activities should be materially curtailed. But when the question of taxation came up no one in the industry has seemed able to give information upon which a rate satisfactory to all branches of the business could be based. There was too much passing of the buck in the way of mutual accusations. Statements of fact did not seem clothed in the habitiments of truth. There was a strange lack of agreement among those who were appointed to represent, or who assumed to represent the motion picture industry and, finally, a singular lack of knowledge upon the really vital affairs of the industry among those representatives.

Is it at all strange that the plan of taxation applied to the motion picture industry should fail to meet the approval of the men engaged in that industry? In all probability the congressional committee charged with preparing the schedules gave up trying to get helpful information from the representatives of the picture industry and acted upon their knowledge and belief. On top of the dissatisfaction created by the tax schedule came the general suspension of the picture business. This has probably led Government authorities to believe that the men in the industry are unable to properly conserve their interests and that an administrator is a necessity.

FACTS AND COMMENTS

INFLUENZA and its progress continues to be the absorbing topic in motion picture circles and will, in all probability, continue to be until the epidemic feature of the complaint has run its course. The wave of high intensity seems to be sweeping gradually westward. In the east there are signs of abatement, and picture theatres, closed because of prevalent sickness, are opening, while closed houses are the order in the west. The situation is an unfortunate one, and one that must be endured. From reports received from MOVING PICTURE WORLD correspondents motion picture theatre owners are accepting the situation and doing all in their power to comply with the requests
DARKNESS BEFORE DAWN
By Robert C. McElkavy.

It has been decreed by fate that the film industry shall quaff from the "cup of trembling" that has been held up to the lips of suffering humanity. Doors to moving picture houses throughout the broad land have been closed as a result of the epidemic of influenza, many of them without warning. A great number of producing companies have seen fit to suspend operations temporarily, and the engine of production is being given a well-earned rest.

At this moment of natural depression it is a good time to take a survey of the film industry, to look back over its perpetually striving past and to glance ahead to the promising near future.

Such a course is not only profitable, but stimulating. Only the present is filled with apprehension: there is little to be ashamed of in the past and a great deal to hope for in coming months and years.

What a mad scramble it has been, since some time along in the late nineties, when certain discerning individuals began to realize that the film as a means of public entertainment was something to reckon with! Many of these men were laughed at for the eagerness with which they began exploiting the moving picture, but many of them remain today with the proceeds to show what they have accomplished, through wisdom and foresight, during these years of steady growth. Other individuals have plunged more recklessly and suffered as a result. But it has been demonstrated beyond a doubt that the film industry has come to stay.

More recent years have awakened the public mind to a new sense of the importance of the film. Its artistic possibilities, its historical value, its industrial utility, its educational scope, its news interest—is there any end to its manifold public uses? Can there be any doubt in the mind of any thinking person that the people as a whole have adopted the film and taken it to their heart?

It is well for those connected with the moving picture, at this trying hour, to reflect upon these things. This is no time for faint-heartedness in the face of a merely incidental setback. Most of all, it is no time for a weakening in any way of the great organization the industry has built up. The morale of the industry should be protected at all costs, for the day is not far distant when the now distressed and anxious public will be clamoring at the doors of the moving picture theatres, with the same old eager smiles of anticipation.

Already the ban is being lifted in certain communities, where the plague has been stamped out. The doors that closed without warning may be opened freely very soon. Exhibitors and producers should for this reason keep a close eye upon the situation. It will not do to make hard and fast rules, for when the public seeks recreation it must find it somewhere. It is better to keep some sort of an entertainment going, wherever possible, at any practical sacrifice, than to disappoint your clientele.

It is regrettable, above everything else, that this closing should have come when the screen was doing such valiant work for the Allied cause. The threatened peace propaganda has come with a vengeance and is all the more insidious because the military situation is so hopeful. But the time for relaxation will not have arrived until Germany has cried "Kamerad!" There will be no doubting the real victory when it comes, and all doubting and speculation until that time can have nothing but a mischievous effect. Against this sort of thing the film is both a weapon and a shield.

It is a time for watchfulness and vigilance on the part of the film industry. The channels of supply should be kept ready for the demand upon the instant. The work of the film is too important to permit of any sinking back or general lethargy because the ratio of profit is not up to normal. It is a time for sacrifice and service, and most of all for counting our blessings as compared with the complete paralysis of many other industries.

MORALS AND THE SCREEN
By Edward Weitzel.

Every once in so often some zealous soul breaks into print to remind the screen of its ever-widening possibilities as a moral force and the great uplift it is capable of and owes to the world. Well, this is not to be denied! But something still remains to be said. Like the stage and the printing press, the screen has duties aside from acting as an effective means of conveying moral truth and beauty to mankind. No one wants to be uplifted all the time. Such a process is capable of better results if administered in the proper proportion and the patient allowed to relax into a less lofty frame of mind and indulge in a reasonable amount of light entertainment that is without thought or care for the ethical or the intellectual pose. The law of contrast is an excellent teacher. Even such a subject as the Great War has its limitations and would soon tire if used continually as the theme of a motion picture. To repeat an assertion made in these columns: "The screen is more in need of fifty five-reel stories on varied subjects than another "Hearts of the World."

Truth and the Screen.

There is one moral duty of the screen which, like all other moral duties, is founded on common sense—tell the truth about itself and its rivals. Every once in so often some misinformed or willfully misleading soul puts in a claim for the screen that can only be substantiated on the ground that the youngest of the arts owes nothing to her elder sisters and can learn nothing from a study of their long experience in revealing life. Several screen authors and actors who once held this theory have now gone into retirement and the public has forgotten they ever existed. An open mind toward every rule of dramatic construction and a firm determination to go on a still hunt for these rules wherever they are to be found will one day give the screen what it still lacks—a drama as well as a novel form. When that time arrives the author who writes for the "movies" will study his plot carefully before he decides whether to turn it into a screen novel or a photoplay.

Limitations That Broaden an Art.

One of the things to be learned from the stage is that a condition which is often spoken of as its limitations is really a source of power. A striking example of this is found in "The Copperhead," Augustus Thomas' fine play. The piece is in four acts, and the first three take place in the same scene. The human interest is so strong that the audience cares no more for the external surroundings of the characters than it does for the coat on the supposed traitor's back. A man's soul is being passed through a fiery furnace; his love and affection are being sacrificed on the altar of duty and devotion to his country. The world becomes very small at such a moment. All the sublimity of mankind may be encompassed within the walls of a painted scene.

Another thing to be learned from the stage is the value of a steady climb upward in interest and force. A recent moving picture which has won high praise—and deserves it for its skill in character drawing, local color and the acting of the star—mounts upward with irresistible dramatic impulse during its first-half, and then drops back into a pace that is tame by comparison. Proper technic would have made this picture a real photoplay.

A Stage Critic's Tip.

Lawrence Reamer, in the New York Sun, never goes out of his way to say a few kind words for the screen, but the last sentence in a recent article of his applies to the photoplay quite as pertinently as to the spoken drama. After noting a change in the manner of building the French farce and explaining that certain literary men who have not mastered construction are fond of arguing that if subject and character are satisfactory, technic ought to take care of itself, the stage critic closes with this warning: "Subject and character have a pesky way of wriggling out of all comprehensible relations when they are not controlled by the laws which experience has developed into the playwright's craft."

HE'S TREATING 'EM ROUGH

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

Not less than thirty-three hand grenades are thrown into the pages of The Authors' League Bulletin by Robert Macalarney, scenario editor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in the shape of "Don'ts for Scenario Writers." There is an effort made on the part of Mr. Mac to bind up our wounds—his article is "for the tyro"—but it is all too plain that he expected to hit a lot of "beginner-authors" among those who are members of the League, else why publish in the Bulletin? Aside from this little camouflage, however, he is charmingly candid and splendidly sincere.

I wonder if Mr. Mac has read the oldest book in the world?

It is that of Ptah Hotep, giving instructions to a tyro, his son.

Ptah Hotep's bombs were fired about 3500 B.C. in Egypt.

It's an even bet his son paid no attention to them.

Man wants to get his own experiences by himself.

At least, most men do who are conceited enough to accomplish more than is expected of them, such as authors. They are gifted with an egotism which enables them to work better and enjoy themselves more than if they really knew themselves as they are. Those who succeed in lighting up other hearts and minds than their own write in a flame of passionate sincerity and revise with a technical skill of exquisite pains. Without these no author ever wrote a story of artistic merit and popular success.

Sincerity is the foremost element of successful authorship.

Is that not eliminated in the machine-made drama?

Is there any such thing as true authorship in writing to the order of this or that much exploited star? Wait a moment. Let us admit that the finest screen performers are those whose intense and interesting personalities bring to life the author's idealizations. Is not the idea of acting that of "suiting the action to the word?"

Is not the actor's art purely that of interpretation, suit ing the action to characterization and definite purposes of the play, using his personality to intensify the role without doing the author's conception injury—to the contrary, contributing to the force, beauty and charm a composite effect?

Mr. Robert E. Macalarney knows all this.

He knows that star personality is a billboard attraction.

He knows that star performers are usually fine actors.

They do not appear to advantage in colorless roles of vehicles.

There is no guarantee of perpetual value in these stars outside of Farce when they are permitted to repeat themselves with monotonous regularity. Our people are good-natured, but they are not so childish as to accept one feeble inanity after another, and such insanities are creaky old repeats and wornout imitations, for the sake of seeing a star ride in the vehicle. Of course, Mr. Macalarney knows this, just as he knows that the best stories are the result of creative impulse, an expression of the social life that lies behind that impulse, interesting to society because of society, fascinating to people as a dramatic expression of themselves as they are or as they expect to be, for Americans are ever busy with the coming values of life. He knows all this, but he treats authors harshly, insisting that their work shall contribute to the upbuilding of social health, that plays shall be true to the standards of the times in which they are written, or the authors, the tyros, might as well write "vehicles" in synopsis and leave the fabrication of so-called "continuity" to the studio hacks.

Many of these shots will tell, but Mr. Macalarney need not expect to get what he desires, especially because he is attempting to fill a requirement only temporary. The tremendous changes going on with new outlets for human energy on every hand, will bring about tremendous changes in screen products. These will result from riper judgments and clearer estimate of dramatic values than have yet been shown in the ordinary run of screen plays. Some producers will adhere to the conventional, as they have in the past, and with the same result, to be superceded by new, alert and progressive craftsmen. Not among the progressives will be found those who adhere to the star-vehicle idea. That idea has been tried and found opposed to the expert manipulation of an art and to the complete expression of truth through it as a medium.

TOUCHIN' ON REGULATING

At various times in the motion picture business, as in other fields of human endeavor, attempts have been made to turn aside or obstruct the natural trend of things. Out of that tendency has come anti-trust suits, actions at law to prevent a restraint of trade or the maintenance of boycotts and blacklists and all sorts of tricks calculated to beat the other fellow to something or prevent him from getting somewhere. Combinations have been made to prevent something from being done by the other fellow when he wants to get somewhere that someone doesn't want him to get, after someone got what he wanted by the same method from someone else.

When the captains of an industry arrive at this state of mind there is nothing of which we can think that will do them so much good as a vacation.
Owing to a number of complaints registered with the Moving Picture World by school principals and lecturers regarding the obtaining of educational film suitable to the illustration of subjects which each had in mind, and also with regard to the discourtesy met with through moving picture exchange managers failing to reply to inquiries regarding such film, we invite correspondence on the subject from those in charge of visual education in-the schools. It might also be well in registering complaints to suggest readjustments, and to state in each case as nearly as possible what class of films are required, and for what purpose the projection machine is being used, recreational or class-room needs. In order that we may bring your requirements in an intelligent manner before exchanges and producing companies who can or who care to be of service in an educational way, it might expedite matters to have an estimate from each as to the number of reels that might be contracted for at a nominal rent per week or per month.

On behalf of the manufacturer and also of the exchange man, we say that he is not running his business on altruistic theories. His very existence in the industry which he represents precludes such a basis unless his good fortune to be a millionaire several times over. It is, therefore, necessary that his business be run on a safe financial basis if he is to continue to serve the public. It is just as necessary for the exchange man to have an approximate idea of the number of films of certain kinds that he is to be called upon to supply within a given period to the schools and other educational institutions of his district as it is for the baker to know how many loaves of bread to have on hand for his customers daily. And unless the manufacturer is also aware of the calls which are to be made upon him, he, too, is liable to be caught napping.

The education is through a lack of knowledge of the business requirements of the moving picture industry, apt to expect too much from a service on which it makes small and intermittent demands. To make room for new material which the producer offers him and which the exhibitor expects and for which the must-be-entertained public clamors, the exchange manager at regular periods of not more than six months clears his shelves of old material—prints which are worn out or which are little called for. It is this system of perpetual motion which evidently is not understood in educational circles and which nonpluses the educationist when he suddenly awakens to the fact that he could use a certain reel or set of reels of film which he has heard or read about in the trade magazines some months or years previous, and finds that they are not available, and frequently not in existence.

There is but one remedy for the perpetuation of standard releases and that is national amalgamation of the exchange system on a visual education basis. This carried out in a practical rather than a visionary way, would make it possible for the exchange man to meet the educational demand on a common plane. It would also eliminate, to a large extent, the enforced use of the "rainy" or scratched film which is so injurious to the eyesight of the child. It would make possible a source of supply and demand hitherto undreamed of.

MARGARET I. MACDONALD.

"France's Dusky Warriors" (Pathé). One of the most interesting and informing of the French and British official war subjects. This picture the war work of the French forces in Morocco. It is full of striking scenes from the native life of those countries, under the stirring influence of war preparations, equipping and mobilizing troops and sending them to the front. The review of troops mounted on fine Arab steeds is particularly colorful. There are also interesting views from the commercial life of this country, which is a great food center for the Allies.

"Official War Review No. 17" (Pathé). This issue contains a number of very interesting things. It opens with the transportation of supplies on the Italian front, shows General Pershing inspecting a fresh batch of prisoners on one of the American fronts and contains some scenes from the shattered towns of Chateau Thierry and Dormans, where the Germans committed great depredations. An amusing and well informed feature is that showing the manner in which observation balloons are handled.

Carl H. Carson with Educational. One of the most significant of recent moves in the educational field is the engagement of Carl H. Carson by the Educational Films Corporation of America as manager of a department which will be devoted entirely to the requirements of public schools and other educational institutions. Mr. Carson, previous to taking up his duties with the Educational Films Corporation of America, was at the head of the Visual Educational Association of California. He came East last January to co-operate with Lincoln & Parker of Worcester, Mass., and only recently accepted the position offered him by the Educational to supervise a department devoted to school needs. A visit to his office revealed a remarkable system by which he is able to lay his finger almost instantly on the key to information regarding any subject which he has tabulated. School courses will be worked out by Mr. Carson in a practical way, and in the near future we hope to be able to give our readers an interesting story of a source of supply and a manner of distribution that should go far in remedying the prevailing film difficulties in schools owning projection machines.

"Allied War Heroes" (Sherry-Burlingham). The latest of the Burlington travel series which the William L. Sherry Service is handling is entitled "Allied War Heroes" and shows the arrival in Switzerland of allied heroes from the starvation camps of Germany. Many of these brave men had contracted tuberculosis and are shown in the picture being transported up the sides of the mountains via the railway to a sanitarium situated at a point of unparalleled beauty in the Swiss Alps. Here they are given the best of food and the finest of attention. A view of the exterior of the sanitarium shows the sun parlors overlooking the scene of mountain grandeur, snow-capped peaks and mist filled valleys.

Post-Van Scoy Scenics in Favor. The Rivoli Theatre has recently been making use of a beautiful series of scenics photographed by Van Scoy and released by Post. Among these were "Dame Nature's Love" and "Midst Peaceful Scenics." Both of these subjects are beautifully photographed and nicely subtitled with the scenes of the pictures used as illustrations of the lines of the subtitles. The Rialto during the week of Oct. 20th exhibited the Pathé subject "The Thorough of Transportation," which covered, not only the evolution of transportation methods, but showed the various details in the manufacture of a motor truck.

Cohen Buys North Star Theatre. Sydney S. Cohen has purchased from Heyne & Scharf the North Star Theatre, occupying the entire block on Fifth Avenue between 106th and 107th streets, New York, with an orchestra seating capacity of 1,500. The theatre is being renovated, and will be operated along similar lines to Mr. Cohen's other theatres.

Keep on Going

APPARENTLY few exhibitors have seen the story of the two frogs. According to this ancient yarn two frogs found themselves in a can of milk after a pretty good flood. One of them urged that they should be drowned, but his more vigorous companion advised haste. It was a long run to town and when they set off the hearted frog lay dead at the bottom of the can, but the hustler was fast asleep on a pat of butter his efforts had churned into a life raft. Too many exhibitors belong in the dead frog class. Business drops off when the men go to the front. We do not make a fight to intensify the business left home, but cut down to two or three nights a week. Others, with no better territory, make a fight and get the people who are left to come more often and make up their receipts. In this case it is not to be denied that it is hard to coax people to come when living expenses have risen so alarmingly, but the people must have amusement, and not even the twenty per cent. tax is going to keep them from it, if the matter is presented to them in the proper light. When the ten per cent. tax went on, the reports from over the country were enlightening. The manager who apologized for the increase got his patrons dissatisfied. He realized that the tax is an imposition and confirmed his amusement buyers in their belief. The man who let out a whoop of patriotism kept right on getting the business, and even convinced many that is was now a patriotic duty to attend the theatre. Fred Schaefer, of the Crystal, Wayne, Neb. in that section of the country there is a cigar named after the Irish poet, and Mr. Neillson offered a matinee ticket for every ten bands from this cigar. Of course he hooked up with all stores handling the cigar, and worked it for a release in which the M. P. Tom Moore appeared. C. E. Marquis, of the Martha-Ellen Auditorium, Central City, Neb., offers tickets in a contest to discover words spelled backward in the house organ. This is a new angle to the big spelted word idea, and can be used where that has stood.

"In Its Merits."

Here is an advertisement from Scranton, Pa. Fred Schaefer, of the General, who sent it in, supplies his own comment when he writes:

It strikes me that some comment on this ad is justified for the reason that it is from a big vaudeville house—Poll's—that the ad features this one-reel film. I had a run of a week at this house, and further that the ad does not attempt to make capital from the film, but plays up its merits. The effect this film had on audiences and reviewers in Scranton is exemplified in the remarkable reviews which was given it in the Scranton newspapers. The vaudeville bill was reviewed in the usual manner, but the Red Cross film was given a half column solid type replete with highest praise.

The space is a double four and a half. It might look better were the six point rule carried down around the cut signature, but the width of the cut prevents this.

IT'S GREAT

There's no getting away from the fact that people in town stand up and cheer, and there's nowhere behind until the music stops and the show goes on.

Jack Wyatt and His Scotch Lads and Lassies

from the point of view, the pictures and pages will be very hot. The show will be given in conjunction with another great film, "The Great Pershing's Parade," which will be the glittering feature on the program.

"The July 4th Parade In Paris" in the life of the town. Last nights on the vaudeville and liberty stages were made.

Jack Wyatt and His Scotch Lads and Lassies

from the point of view, the pictures and pages will be very hot. The show will be given in conjunction with another great film, "The Great Pershing's Parade," which will be the glittering feature on the program.

"The July 4th Parade in Paris" Will Be Here All Week. Don't Miss It or You Will Regret It

A vaudeville advertisement in which a one reel subject is made the headline, since there is no room to spare. In these times the one-reel battlefront pictures are sometimes better than the longer releases, and it pays to feature them all if they merit.

Booming the Crusaders.

George J. Schade, of Sandusky, Ohio, made a hit with his Crusaders, and yet it says it cost lots less than it looked. The cut shows how the elaborate display looked from the sidewalk. The photographs were made before the front was completed. Above the street ten feet beyond the sidewalk line, with a clearance of ten even feet. The second cut gives a better idea of this effect, though it is not so good a photograph of the general effect. The palace was made with translucent windows and at night was lighted from within, as well as indirectly lighted from the outside. The basis of the window displays is a 24-sheet cut-out for each film, masked in with every other. There is a practical flag beside the General, and a huge one below the sign as well as smaller ones on the towers of the castle. Instead of the expensive combo board, the entire display, including the cut-outs and the castle, were made of corrugated paste-board, stiffened with two inch strips and varnished with a cheap varnish. The castle was painted with cheap "barn paint. The use of corrugated board is a new idea to us. It costs very little compared with combo and will stand up for a week without trouble. We think Mr. Schade has beaten his own record. He reports a big business not only at the regular performances for three days, but at two special morning performances for the children. Wednesday he had them standing up for two hours. It bears out what we have already said: that it is easy to clean up with a picture if you circus it properly, and this applies with particular force to these Government pictures. You must create the idea of bigness in the minds of your patrons, since they are apt to class them with war weeklies and educational.

From England.

The Bridgewater Meeting House, St. Helens, England, sends in a very neat program with the full synopses for each release, with casts and dates, and on the inside cover places the musical program for the period covered. There are sixteen pages and cover and a four-page insert in addition, 24 pages in all, and it is very well done, with a star portrait on the cover and a little gossip. The program covers a month, and covers it thoroughly. The English advertisers are more conservative than the American showmen, but they do thoroughly well what they attempt, and many of the smaller English houses get out more inviting programs than the large houses here. The Bridge Street Review is among the real ones.

Pleasing Yourself.

My teacher tells me that I must write stories like the story of a novel. "I don't like this style of stories," she added, "and I won't write them." We knew the teacher rather better than we did the writer, and we knew that he was merely pointing out certain stories that tell a story. He was, perhaps, giving over emphasis to certain stories that he liked personally, but in the main the examples he cited were all good current fiction, and we were aware of nothing in the handling. That is, his ideas in the "strong" stories with unhappy endings that all beginners take to at first. Experienced writers know that this style of story does not sell steadily. Now and then one will be taken because of its unusualness, but there is no steady demand for this class of work and the stories are not really strong. They are gloomy and tragic, but they lack real strength of appeal because they do not gain sympathy. Think out your tragic plots, if you will; write them. If you must, but if you pay a man to teach you to write, be willing to concede him a knowledge superior to your own, and follow his instructions particularly if, as in the present case, the teacher. Write to please yourself if there is only yourself to please, but when you start to write for the market, write what the market will buy, and write only that.

The Home Correspondence Schools, Springfield, Mass., has issued a revised edition of "Writing the Short Story," by Dr. J. Berg Eschenwein. It is substantially the same as the previous edition, but is even more carefully edited than the former standard textbook.

Novelty Stories.

It is good advice not to get too unusual in stories intended for the screen, but it is equally good advice not to get too usual! A story too wildly improbable is not apt to be accepted by an editor, but the same holds even more true of the same old stuff all over again. There must be a certain percentage of novelty in the handling. "A. ideas like the "strong" stories with unhappy endings that all beginners take to at first. Experienced writers know that this style of story does not sell steadily. Now and then one will be taken because of its unusualness, but there is no steady demand for this class of work and the stories are not really strong. They are gloomy and tragic, but they lack real strength of appeal because they do not gain sympathy. Think out your tragic plots, if you will; write them. If you must, but if you pay a man to teach you to write, be willing to concede him a knowledge superior to your own, and follow his instructions particularly if, as in the present case, the teacher. Write to please yourself if there is only yourself to please, but when you start to write for the market, write what the market will buy, and write only that.

A Rarity.

A late issue of the Author's League Bulletin defines an "Author's League Author" as "one who knows when he is being cheated by the movies, and why." And the definition was written by Dean Burnett, who was conducting a humorous column in the Evening Sun when the regular author was taking a week off. The Author's League is increasing its membership among the screen-play photoplay writers by its flings at the motion picture business, and also appeals to a proportion of real authors who have had their brains children butchered by incompetent direction and cutting, but there are comparatively few authors who have been "cheated by the movies," and the League would be doing better work did it seek to help raise the standard of authorship. Too many members have cheated the movies by selling inferior product.

Reflections.

Perhaps it is only natural, but none the less it is a mistake to try to write your own life into your plots. If you have recently suffered a bereavement, do not write about death, or slander the legal case because you got the worst of it in a lawsuit. Store up all that happens to you as part of your general stock of knowledge, but do not base your plots upon the happenings of your daily life. That is not authorship, but a sublimated form of keeping a diary, and few such books are very interesting to strangers.

Has the Idea.

"I am not writing war stories," announces a correspondent, "but I am making a scrap book of certain phases of the war. I'm young yet, and I can afford to keep this material until war stories come into demand. There is some sense in this idea. Stories of the war will not be in great demand until the scars are healed, but a scrap book of daily incidents will be valuable when there is a demand for such material and we have mostly the histories to turn to. Current press clippings will then be found more inspiring than the dry historical facts—but the author must be very young who hopes to make use of this material at the proper time.

Too Busy.

It has been suggested that by permitting authors to copyright their scripts the revenues of the Government could be materially increased at this time. Doubtless they could, but the initial revenue would probably be more than offset by the cost of a building in which they could be kept. The Copyright Office is cramped for quarters, at best, and the scripts would seriously add to the burdens of the office. This is not the time to work for copyright legislation. Congress is busy with far more important things.

Selling Schemes.

The best selling scheme is to pick out the very best of your stories to offer and then to offer only the best of those. Even the best of the best is apt to be none too good.

Saving Daylight.

Instead of burning the midnight oil trying saving daylight. Just about dawn these mornings is a fine time to think. The air is still cool and fresh from the night and there is little stirring. You can plan a lot of things before the milk comes. Try it some time.

Do Your Own.

Don't let friends give you ideas. Most of the time the story is not apt to be good, and when it is it is safe to say that the idea is not original and you may be accused of plagiarism. One man we know lost his reputation for honesty through sending around a bunch of stories an alleged friend gave him. Think up your own plots. They are apt to be better balanced and you'll know more about them.

Send Them In.

"How can I find out whether Paramount is buying—or can you tell me?" asks a correspondent. The way is to send in some stuff. If they buy it, they are.

Too Quick.

Rome was not built in a day; neither was a good synopsis.

Get Ribbons.

It is cheaper to buy a new ribbon than to lose the sale of a synopsis because the editor won't read it.

Select Carefully.

With only eighteen to twenty releases a week, what chance do you stand with a synopsis that is not the best you can do?

Paint It Over.

There may be nothing new under the sun, but you can camouflage a little.

Changing Over.

Now try and write a plot in which the heroine does not go to France and meet the man she loved in the hospital.

Crook It Up.

It's a long lane that has no turning and a longer story that has no sudden twists.

Better Place.

If your comedy synopsis is so humorous that it makes you laugh, fix it up as bit and send it to the movie papers. It is comedy of words, but the action probably will be slow.

The Aim.

Write first of all to please yourself, but try to write so as to please yourself and the editors.

Keep On.

Don't despise your own work because you see better. Keep up your courage and you'll do better work yourself in time.

Gauging the Synopsis.

It is not the number of words in a synopsis that counts. It's the number and value of the situations.

TECHNIQUE OF THE PHOTOPLAY

BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A book replete with practical pointers on the preparation of stories for the screen, answering the hundred and one questions which immediately present themselves when the first script is attempted. A tested handbook for the constant writer of picture plots. "Straight-from-the-shoulder" information from an author with a wealth of real "dollars and cents" experience.

Manufacturers’ Notice.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which are to be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are read, and the printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be read by various in cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every line, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you: cannot answer without a lot of study.

Of Large Importance.

For some time past it has been necessary for projection machine manufacturers, in common with all other manufacturers using metals, to secure from Federal authorities a permit before raw stock could be secured. In order that matters might be brought to a more stable and satisfactory basis insofar as possible, and the supply of concern, the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, through the War Industries Board, after appointing a committee, upon which were representatives of the War Industries Board, after appointing a committee, upon which were representatives of both the Power’s and Precision companies. This committee held several sessions with representatives of the War Industries Board in a manner that considerable stock of raw stock is assured, but the following text has been addressed to all projection machine manufacturers:

WAR INDUSTRIES BOARD.

Conservation Division.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 17, 1918,

To the Manufacturers of Motion Picture Machines.

It is of primary importance in the present emergency that the country’s resources be used to the fullest advantage, and that we husband our supply of materials, equipment and capital to the best possible advantage.

The Conservation Division of the War Industries Board has been in touch with the industry, and has plans in progress for saving essential materials and equipment, and for reducing the amount of capital tied up in manufacturers’ and dealers’ stocks.

The division has been informed that manufacturers of the industry are producing machines with lenses of a lesser variety of sizes than is necessary, and that a great saving in the weight of machines can be effected, with a further saving by substitution in many cases of some less essential materials for the brass and aluminum now used, and that economies can be effected in the distribution of accessories. The elimination of the avoidable use of brass, steel, iron and aluminum, which are always required for war pur- poses, is particularly desired.

The schedule which has been prepared for projection machines will be sent to each manufacturer of motion picture machines. A copy is enclosed.

This program of manufacture is to become effective as of dates noted therein, unless by some modification it is shown that further conservation of much needed materials can be brought about. If you have suggestions in regard to where greater economies can be effected, we shall be glad to receive them. Please address the Conservation Division, with assurance of your cooperation.

CONSERVATION DIVISION.

WAR INDUSTRIES BOARD.

The schedule referred to is as follows:

WAR INDUSTRIES BOARD.

Conservation Division.

Washington, Sept. 17, 1918.

SCHEDULE FOR THE MANUFACTURERS OF MOTION PICTURE MACHINES.

1. The purchase of new lenses to be restricted from this date to 4 inches focal length, and 16 inches, 20 inches and 24 inches square. There is no restriction in dealing in second-hand lenses of any size.

2. After September 20, 1918, the following: to purchasers only upon request as extras.

(a) Rheostats.
(b) Rewinders.
(c) Reels.

3. Each manufacturer to reduce the weight of his machines as much as practicable and to advise this Division immediately of the amount of this reduction.

4. Each manufacturer to substitute some less essential material for brass, aluminum and steel insofar as possible, and to advise this Division of the action taken.

CONSERVATION DIVISION.

Mr. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine works, advises me that his company is making every effort to comply with this request. Mr. W. C. Smith, general manager of Nicholas Power Company, says: “We have pledged ourselves to co-operate with the War Industries Board to the fullest extent, and to do all we possibly can to reduce the weight of our equipment, which will not cease to be a number of changes, aside from the rheostat, rewinder and reel.”

Projectors and theatre managers will take note of the limiting of projection lenses to 4, 5 and 6 inch focal length. This will have the effect of convenience in using the lens, but it will be nothing serious. It is only that the elimination of brass and aluminum is particularly desired.

Will Visit Ohio.

The convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, which was to have met in Cleveland October 21, has been postponed, owing to the epidemic of Spanish influenza. The postponement will be for such length of time as may be necessary to meet the conditions, but it is not expected to be more than two or three weeks, or a month at most.

On the 17th of September, at a meeting, the secretary of Local Union 576, Mansfield, Ohio, writes, asking if it would be possible for him to send word to that city and address the theatre managers and projectionists of Mansfield.

I have never yet refused a request of that sort, and I am quite sure that this will be no exception to the usual rule.

New Wire Terminal.

A. P. Reed, Syracuse, New York, sends in sample of new “Eclipse” clamps, designed for use in lamp house, or where there is too much heat to allow of a soldered connection. The clamp, in construction, is made of bronze metal and grips the wire very similar to the way it would be gripped in a lamp. The clamp is circular, and the method of inserting the wire leaves room to be desired. The picture which insulation is stripped gives inside the clamp, so that no raw wire is left exposed to mechanical bond. On the next page we see view of the clamp and cir- cal contact: also, a side view of the wire clamp. The Eclipse clamp looks good. The only criticism, or sugges- tion I might perhaps better call it, would be that more metal be used—that it be made on somewhat more generous proportions. The screw is smaller than I.

would myself use; also the clamp bar is weak. Such devices are subject to your highest censure, because when high amperage is used, therefore they must be of generous proportions. The clamp is probably strong enough if handled carefully, but I have found that many operators, and even some projectionists, are likely to strip the clamp screw with two or three blows when screwed in with little pressure, with result that when the clamp gets loose or the clamp bar will give unless it be very strong.

Aside from this one possible weakness, I can recommend the Eclipse as being a thorough projector. The price is low—40 cents each.

Question Box.

Can He Be Licensed?

A Georgia projectionist says:

Much pleased with the handbook received a week ago. It is well worth the money invested in it. Will you kindly advise as to whether or not I can be licensed? Will be sixteen years old in December and have had nine months' actual experience.

Whether or not you can be licensed is entirely a matter for your local examining board. And what do you really think that it would be exactly the right thing to license one as young as you, after only nine months' experience? Let me inquire what you have studied during those nine months? You have just started projection. What is that, and should you have had at least nine months' experience? What other books have you read? Would you expect to graduate from a locomotive fireman to engineer in nine months? Let me ask you one or two simple questions. What various effects may be produced in your screen result by moving the lamp-house closer to or further away from the mechanism? Suppose you took charge of a projection room, how would you proceed to determine whether or not the projection room leads were large enough to supply maximum current demand without waste by reason or excesses? Will you consider the audience lighting as being an integral part of your projection problem? What do you know about the results of changes in various surfaces under various conditions?

These are just a few of the various things you must understand in order to be a projectionist. You must even have knowledge of them in order to be the operator of a moving picture machine, if you are to operate the machine with any degree of intelligence. There are hundreds of other equally important questions. Get the question booklets and see how many of them you are able to answer intelligently. For instance, you are a projectionist, and are a projectionist, which means that some examining board has examined you and declared you qualified. You are a part of an examining board or projection plant within your jurisdiction. You secure a position, and in your charge are placed two high-class projectors and a motor generator set, altogether worth well up toward $1,500. The motor generator is worth, say, $600, it will be serioously injured if not properly lubricated. What would you do, in any emergency, such as commutator brushes start sparking. Where would you look for the trouble? There would be no danger of a high voltage clear around the commutator. What would you do and where would you seek the trouble? For instance, if the commutator it feels very hot to the touch. How would you determine whether or not it is too hot to touch safely? Again, you have a new projector proposed to purchase a new projector. He asks you which is best. Could you advise him about which he would choose? Suppose the projector, tell us how you would proceed to determine the following points, viz.: What distance should they be apart? What distance from the condenser to the screen? What should be the distance of the projection lens and the distance of revolving shutter from same? How many shat fraction of the machine was cutting more light than necessary under the conditions, giving you to take up the tendency until necessary, and if so, how would you remedy the fault?

These kinds of applications are not trying to discourage you, son, but merely pointing out to you ability to get a light load, which had a machine and you do not make not does not make you a competent projectionist, or even a competent repairer of the machine. Following the foregoing, hold communion with yourself and answer your own query as to whether you can, or at least, should be licensed.

Still Alive.

W. H. Shephard, formerly of Davenport, writes from Sooakie, Washington, in part, as follows:

Thought I would let you know I am still with you, but I wrote that my address has changed somewhat. Have noticed from time to time, in the newspapers, advertisements, or other places, the change the name or title "operator" to "projectionist." This is, to my way of thinking, an excellent idea, and I don't think men, themselves, nine out of ten of whom shall call themselves "operators," and I, as long as the title of the book is what it is that is what we must use in the advertisements. If we were otherwise you would see that and changed so quickly that it would make your head swim. The new book will be of great help to all of you, projectionists and operators, because I have the inclination to differentiate between the two. We have many men who really are nothing but operators, and darned poor ones at that. They would never be projectionists. The projectionist must have brains into his work, and whereas I would hardly go the length of saying that the projectionist is superior to the operating man, still if they have the usual supply they don't seem to use them, which amounts to saying they are not much use. I notice your operators—nothing more, I presume, but it may really be impracticable to differentiate by applying two titles. What do you say to that?

Why just this, Brother Shepherd: The title of the book cannot possibly be changed without throwing away a large number of them, and so long as the title of the book is what it is that is what we must use in the advertisements. If it were otherwise you would see that changed so quickly that it would make your head swim. The new book will be of great help to all of you, projectionists and operators, because I have the inclination to differentiate between the two. We have many men who really are nothing but operators, and darned poor ones at that. They would never be projectionists. The projectionist must have brains into his work, and whereas I would hardly go the length of saying that the projectionist is superior to the operating man, still if they have the usual supply they don't seem to use them, which amounts to saying they are not much use. I notice your operators—nothing more, I presume, but it may really be impracticable to differentiate by applying two titles. What do you say to that?

Changing Friction Drive.

Huck Done, Payson, Utah, proposes to change his Powers friction drive, as follows:

Though I have been a department reader for lo these many moons, this is my first time that I have written. Last winter we installed two new Powers 6-A projectors. Everything is satisfactory, but we are thinking of changing from an direct drive and want your advice regarding some. Which do you regard as the better practice: To leave the Powers machine intact and turn it in line with the pulley, or to remove and install it on a solid base. We have a number of size of pulleys in order to do this.

What you presumably propose is to drive by belting direct to the flywheel. This, Old Man, I regard as highly objectionable. The bearing carrying the flywheel end of the flywheel shaft has heavy, high-speed duty to perform in any event, and to add to it the pull of a belt is nothing short of bad practice. The is more true since the opposite end of the shaft has a mechanism that is not a bearing, and that is something so highly sensitive that one ten-thousandth of an inch variation may show up in the screen re-

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

The Evolution of Picture Music
Is the Result of Conscientious Effort

Part I

B ACK in the days of the store front "Movies," there was noise with the picture instead of music, for the photoplay. The film was run in silence except for the beating of the big drum outside, for the purpose of drawing the crowds to this new form of side show. Intermittently might be heard the voice of the "barker" droning his droll catch-phrases, informing the inquisitive populace that for "One dime, ten cents, or a tenth part of a dollar," they could see "the greatest wonder of the age, the cinematograph showing MOVING PICTURES." The greater the merits of this one-reeler, the greater the noise which accompanied it.

That was in 1903—not so far back as we count years—but from the standpoint of the film industry, dimly in the distant and distasteful past. Following closely upon the discovery of the "movie"fad could become a great entertainment institution, a few progressives installed a piano to entertain the audience, which arrived early and were forced to find amusement in the sight of the pianist. Occasionally some blind student, who had been forced to learn the score of the latest Victor recording in order to earn his living, would be found playing the piano in various parts of the town. The pianist was in charge of the "music" and would play away some hours. The audience, whether it was a noisy or silent one, seemed to like the music.

Then, from the left or right side of the screen, a drum or tambourine, often apportioned to the "roll," would be heard. The noise itself was often an advantage, since it would break the monotony of one long piece, and would also serve to attract the attention of those who had just entered the theatre, to make them hurry up to find a seat. The advantage of this noise was that it encouraged the audience to remain in the theatre, since it was not possible for them to hear the music. The noise was thus an incentive to the audience to remain, or else it would be lost.

Well, if "music" means life, that "Movie" house became the liveliest place in town. It resolved itself into a question of who could make the drumming and clashing glistening glissandos. On the other hand, the loyals of the pianist could not conceive of superiority in an instrument called to sound by the fingers. Never should it be said that Big Bass Drum, his little brother, Snare Drum, and his first cousin, Cymbal, adhered to a mere piano to out-vocalize the great family of Percussion. That started something else.

Whereas the first era of picture accompaniment gave us noise on the outside, the second produced greater din on the inside. In the excitement of the contest, the participants forgot all about the picture and lovelorn he-roses being mourned their sad lot to the accompaniment of musical cannonading, while Death, Despair, Distress, and Deep Grief stalked through the story to the same thunderous racket.

This phase of picture playing grew worse even in spite of the fact that almost all the showmen followed the lead and installed pianos. Nowhere was there a second, or even a first, cousin, a tenor drum. The band went on the roof and the conductor ordered them to play louder and louder. The noise grew even worse and the audience was in a state of great excitement. The noise was continued until it became a roar. The audience was driven from the theatre, and the pianist and drummers were dismissed. The noise was so great that the audience was unable to hear the music.

The moment the lights went out, and he could no longer be seen, he refused to be heard and took himself off to one of the back exits to enjoy a cigarette in quiet. The shuffling of the piano pedals was heard in the silence of the theatre. The piano player was soon heard to be playing his own music, and the audience was in a state of great excitement. The noise was such that the audience was unable to hear the music. The noise became so great that the audience was driven from the theatre, and the pianist and drummers were dismissed.

Yes, indeed, those were the halcyon times! Sometimes as many as twenty shows were run off in a day if the crowds were eager; if not, the number fell away to ten. Rainy days were the belles noir of the showman and the ball halls. The pianist had to dodge his macintosh and rubber boots, calling his wares from beneath the shade of an umbrella. Likewise, the pianist dreaded wet weather for the hours of his working hours became longer in the aggregate.

By accident, a conscientious musician must have slipped into the ranks, for it is recorded that one so far forgot himself as to play soft music for a particularly larly touching death-bed scene. The records and cards brought in by the pianist received much applause—not the death-bed scene—but the innovation. That young man started something. He had fitted music to a portion of the plot, and, though it was only one scene and, in all probability, the big moment of the picture, his idea was the tiny seed from which has sprung up a profession enlisting over forty thousand musicians.

Naturally the next step was the rearrangement of the duties of the pianist. Let the people wait in silence! His work in the past had been too valuable in accompanying the picture to permit the playing of interludes. He was called upon to play for all the scenes and use his own judgment. He did both. His playing was bad, but his judgment was worse; so they brought the big drum from the outside and hired a man to light it up.

The pianist, however, remained and the "movie" house became the liveliest place in town. It resolved itself into a question of who could make the drumming and clashing glistening glissandos. On the other hand, the loyals of the pianist could not conceive of superiority in an instrument called to sound by the fingers. Never should it be said that Big Bass Drum, his little brother, Snare Drum, and his first cousin, Cymbal, adhered to a mere piano to out-vocalize the great family of Percussion. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

On a poor, run-down farm in Scituate, Mass., in January, 1785, there came into the world a child of poverty, who never lived to enjoy anything else except for a few rare and long divided intervals.

His life began prosaically enough, and he dragged through the years too lacking in ambition to be worth the notice of any study. At fourteen, he had acquired the most superficial knowledge of the "Three Musketeers," a seemingly, a natural talent for writing, and.region composed several short poems.

These verses were published in the village school master and the local minister. Both gentlemen were greatly impressed. He is remarkable. The minister took the lad into his family and conscientiously tried to

Then Woodworth took matters into his own hands and decided upon printing as a career. But this was a very curious

During the war of 1812-15, Mr. Woodworth conducted a weekly newspaper called "The War," which he had mismanaged a monthly magazine, and the result was inevitable. Again he repaired to a printing office and found it to be the lesser of two evils. He seems to have made the shortest good impression in this place, for he was adjudged to be the style of a romance, a history of the war with England. It was entitled "The Champion of Freedom." He lived and he died, but at the time it was so popular that the printing was begun when only nine years old.

The Old Oaken Bucket was written in the summer of 1819, when, with his long-suffering and devoted wife, Miss Woodworth, came to New York. They settled on the corner of Duane street, New York City. One day he came in, tired and thirsty. He poured out a glass of water and set the glass down, he exclaimed:

"That is very refreshing, but how much more refreshing would a draught from the old oaken bucket I left hanging in the well at my father's home, near the town of Moores, Missouri, be?"

"The Old Oaken Bucket," by Woodworth,

"The Old Oaken Bucket," as the composer of the music, but he was merely the arranger. An adaptation of "Araby's Daughter" furnished the melody.

Pershing Says Music Is Essential.

Mr. Pershing, who recently arrived in France, he immediately discovered a great difference, on comparison, between the United States and French bands. He found the French military bands were never less than fifty instrumentalists, and that a band cost them $4000 to $5000. He took immediate steps to use either the military bands of the U. S. increased from 24 to 72, strictly for the instruction of musicians, which already has caused great improvement.

The improvement would be still more marked if we had a distinct unit of their own, instead of being attached to the headquarters, non-commissioned officers and men. The work can be done through either orders of the commander-in-chief, or Congressional legislation.

The press dispatches credit General Pershing with making another improvement.

"The Doughboy's March" was written by the usual machine-like precision that take away soulfulness.

The violinist and composer, Alex Michot, rendered the "Bell Song" from "Lakme" and proved herself most adept in coloratura reefs. She was tried in the biggest things in opera because of its long duration without accompaniment.

Mrs. Edward Morris, who has recently returned from France, has contributed the usual musical cadence by "pulling" the orchestra, the break was made imperceptible.

As we ambled out, Hezekiah seemed in a brown study. He was concocting, now, whether or not to change the usual way of the evening to the usual way of the usual way of the usual way of the evening.

"Midst Peaceful Scenes" showed valleys and mountains, rivers and rivulets, forests and glades, and the usual pastoral elements of the scene, with the usual good taste.

The Horn solo was particularly pleasing and the general orchestral ensemble was fine.

THE CONGRESSIONAL BAND.

I was present at the performance of the band in the Strand lobby. We were more than surprised, and a bit disgruntled, to find in the program tickets for an old friend. Hezekiah was the conductor, and he hailed from the "all thin, thin, thin, thin, thin, thin, thin ground, which he so obstinately calls a farm, giving him and his family daily sustenance.

After the band had been duly performed and our tickets had been taken, we found seats. From the moment the war started the program ended at the close of the performance, "Hez"—we called him that for short, when we wanted to intimate that we were not going to comment upon the various musical offerings. Hezekiah, being "the champeen" hand around, we made "By Heck," his opinion upon musical matters was highly rated among his fellows.

"Wal, I'll be swizzled if that there orch-es-tra ain't the biggest I seen since I was in Boston. That Cardas, I reckon be a dance that comes from somewhere in the war zone. It certainly sounds mighty.

He was right. The overture conducted by Carl Eduarde, was good in the full significance of the word. The conductor held the audience spellbound, and we were unanswerably captivated.

After the Topical Review, which was printed vigorously but not always in time with the marching soldiers, Hirams broke out again.

We broke right, and that at moment Miss Jane Holden finished her song and the audience simply screamed their applause. It was truly an ovation and merited indeed. Miss Holden's voice is remarkable and her singing portray the harmonica at once thrilling, beautiful and sweet.

During the war, Miss Holden was used to give benefit concerts, to enable her to continue her music studies. During the war, a"A R G A Y's March" was composed by her and published.

The whole performance was one of the finest we have seen in the Strand. The musical artists, as well as the orchestra, were entirely first-class.

The Greatest Ballad of the Day
An Immense Hit
"WHEN I COME HOME TO YOU"
Music by FRANK H. GREY
The Popular Writer of Many Successes
Words by J. WILL CALLAHAN
Author of the Famous "Smiles"
This song is destined to be the most popular song of the day.

CHORUS
In my waking hours I'm planning
All the things that we shall do; And in dreams I find the paths that wind Through scenes we loved and knew.
And I tell myself at evening— When the long, long day is through—
That I'm one day nearer to the time
When I come home to you.

HONOR ROLL

THE WALTZ WE LOVE

By ARMAND VECNEY

The Successor to Missouri Waltz
Published by Chappel and Co. New York

This waltz should meet the needs of every leader in pictures. It has a perfect rhythm and a wonderful melody. Add it to your library.

Liberty Loan Drive Boosted by Song.

"O never a Frits shall sail

On a ship that sails with me.

Never a box or bale

In that country of Germany."

Thus the chorus of the song runs. It is not at all surprising that the new song, written for the Fourth Liberty Loan Drive in service in the Fourth Liberty Loan Drive when it embodies the above sentiments.

This song is one of which are by A. P. Herbert and the music by C. A. Lloyd, is not a gem of literature and was not written to be such. But it breathes the spirit of the men who are fighting to free the world from the machinations of the Hun, and it is written in such idiom that appeals to our hearts.

The publishers, Chappel & Co., Ltd., are to be congratulated upon this song. It should become very popular, particularly with our boys in khaki.

COAST STUDIOS CURTAIL PRODUCTION

Few Plants Will Stop Altogether, While Some Will Continue Operations Without Interruption

WHILE all of the west coast studios will have to slow up on production because of the general shut-down of theatres by the Spanish influenza, very few of the plants will stop production altogether.

The plan of curtailment put in operation at the Lasky studios will be followed by most of the other producers. When the theatre shut-down came all players not cast or working in a production at Lasky's were given a four weeks' vacation without pay. By the time the first vacates are over the people now working will be through with their plays and ready to take a month's lay-off, while the returning players will be coming in fresh and new with the fall season. It may be, unless the situation grows very serious and leads to an extended tie-up all over the country, few studios in Los Angeles will pinch themselves so absolutely.

The Metro, Universal and Fox forces, with the exception of the Lehman Sunshine Comedy companies, who will not stop at all, and most of the organizations with a number of producing units, will follow the four weeks' vacation plan.

The Chaplin, Clara Kimball Young, Griffith studios and the different stars producing at the Brunton plant, which includes Sessue Hayakawa, Bessie Barriscale, Kitty Gordon and Little Gloria Joy, will continue work without interruption.

One or two producers, while realizing the necessity of a curtailment of films because of releasing schedules being shoved anywhere from one to four weeks into the future by the theatre shut-down, have decided to keep right on with production while the weather is good and make the necessary adjustments in their output by laying off during the rainy season.

A Month Off at Fox.

Only one company is at work at present at the Fox studios in Hollywood during the influenza epidemic that is ravaging the west coast. This is the company headed by Madeline Traverse, who recently came from the east to make pictures at the western plant. Her director, Frank Beal, expects to have the production completed inside of two weeks, when the company will be laid off as required in the order sent out by the national producers. The Gladys Brockwell company finished "Quick-sands" before the closing order came, and no other play will be commenced for another month. The Tom Mix company was in the middle of a picture, but Tom had to undergo an operation for an old bullet wound, so the picture will be finished after the ban is lifted and Tom is well.

Jane and Katherine Lee, who arrived on October 16, will not begin work for four weeks.

Brunton Busy Despite Flu.

Three stars will begin production at the Brunton studios immediately, despite the "Spanish Flu" and the wholesale closing of all places where crowds may gather. The stars are Dustin Farnum, Madame Yorska and Lillian Walker. Mme. Yorska is making "The Garden of Eden," a picture which was written for her by Sarah Bernhardt; and Lillian Walker has begun the filming of "Fran," from the novel of the same name by Breckenridge Ellis.

Lottie Pickford Seriously Ill.

Lottie Pickford has been seriously ill at the Sister's Hospital in Los Angeles for the past week from a complication of diseases that include chronic bronchitis, pneumonia of the right lung and abscess of the ear.

Miss Pickford caught a severe cold on her way to Los Angeles from New York, and upon her arrival, on October 12, had to be taken to and attends Dr. Farnum's hospital, where her condition grew so alarming that her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, who was in New York, and her sister, Mary, who was out on a shooting trip in Oregon, were notified by telegraphed for. By the time they arrived Lottie had recovered sufficiently to be considered out of danger. Lottie Pickford has been in various campaigns for the Fourth Liberty Loan in the east when she was stricken.

Son of National Official Dies.

The son of Martin J. Doner, technical director of the National studios in Hollywood, died last week of pneumonia at Camp Fremont. Young Doner at the outbreak of the war went to Manila and was afterward sent to China. From there he went to Japan and eventually to Siberia. He had just returned to the United States, and was waiting for a quarantine to be lifted at the camp, when he became seriously ill, and finally in a hospital in Los Angeles when he became a victim of influenza, which quickly developed into pneumonia. The young man was twenty-eight years old, and had developed considerable talent for painting and sculpture.

Katterjohn Films.

An announcement has been made by Monte M. Katterjohn that an organization is being invited to produce a series of film features to be known as the Katterjohn Films. Mr. Katterjohn says that it is planned to make only four productions during the coming year, each picture to be made from an original story of which he is the author, and that it is his intention to follow each play from its inception in his mind until the final cutting and tinting of the completed picture. One of these features will deal with a task which war life will have Northern settings and atmosphere, and another may be a propaganda picture dealing with the present international crisis, is shown in probably be secured at the Brunton studios for the production of the pictures.

Hampton Back in Los Angeles.

Benjamin B. Hampton has returned from New York, and is busying himself with the Brunton organization, as he is interested in several productions now under way at that plant. One of these is the Matzene film, in which Mme. Yorska is starred, and another is coming Zane Grey picture which is being produced for production by George H. Perry. Zane Grey is writing the scenario himself, and the intention is to make it a new star production, with the two principal characters played by W. Lawson But and Irene Luther. Mr. Perry is jubilant because there will not have to be "so many geographical close-ups."

Two Endings for Eltinge Picture.

Fred J. Balshofer, producer of the Julian Eltinge play, "The Rhine," has made two endings for the picture, each appropriate and logical if certain changes occur in the war before the picture is released. One of these endings has to do with the present peace negotiations in the event of a peaceful ending of the war. But the other, and the one preferred by both producer and star, is the "flourish" ending of the American troops into Berlin. For the making of these scenes permission was obtained from the German government, and the soldiers themselves and equipment at Camp Kearney. The actual crossing of the Rhine, with the soldiers making their bridges across the river, the building of a bridge in the German capital was built on a ground accompanying the army camp.

De Mille Denies Rumors.

Cecil B. De Mille, about whom rumors have been circulating to the effect that he was about to sever his connection with the Lasky organization, has emphatically denied the stories, and says that, although he will continue to produce pictures for the Artcraft program, he will hold himself in abeyance until he is to respond to the Government's orders for propaganda films and other work, and that he will go to Washington in about a month, and that there is a probability that he will be sent on a mission for the Government.

Airships Now the Vogue.

Airships are now the craze at the Lasky plant. Cecil De Mille has been the owner of an airplane for some time, and just a week or so ago Robert Vignola bought one. The first passenger he took up with him was Vivian Martin, and the flight was photographed for
Los Angeles Exchanges Idle.

Every theatre in the Los Angeles Exchange territory has been closed by the epidemic of the flu which is sweeping the country. The City of Los Angeles was the first of the larger towns to shut down its theatres through an order of the Health Department forbidding public meetings and gatherings of all kinds, and the smaller cities quickly followed the example.

The decision to be under control of the health authorities, and it is hoped that the ban will be lifted within two or three weeks.

Film Row is mark time.

A few of the exchanges are still allowing their employees enforced vacations, but the great majority of the offices have retained all their help and will make no move to curtail, unless the situation grows worse, with a prospect of an extended shutdown.

Australian Film Distributor in Town.

John Tait, one of the leading film distributors in Australia, stopped over in Los Angeles, and has been in conference with a number of west coast producers in regard to obtaining pictures for distribution in the antipodes. In the make-up of the chief rivals of J. C. Williamson, another prominent Australian film man, who recently visited the United States on motion picture business, were accorded a reception.

Closed Theatres Cleaning House.

All the big moving picture theatres and all the little ones are undergoing a thorough housecleaning during the "flu" closing order. Some of the houses are being thoroughly cleaned and polished; others are being entirely overhauled; new carpets are being laid in others, and all are being thoroughly disinfected. It will be a long while before we will find itself alive in any of the Los Angeles theatres after the opening order is given by the Health Department.

Nell Shipman Leaves Vitagraph.

Nell Shipman, who made her first appearance as a Vitagraph star three years ago, and who has recently been appearing as a minor star in the story pictures of the Vitagraph studios, severed her connection with the organization on November 1. Miss Shipman says she has the highest regard for the work being done today, and for the future of the Vitagraph management, and speaks gratefully of the courteous treatment accorded her, but she has decided hereafter to contract with a leading producer by the picture. Miss Shipman's first picture under the Vitagraph management was the notable feature, "God's Country and the Woman," and her most recent films have been "Barre, Son of Kazan" and "A Gentleman's Agreement."

Increased Force at Lehrman's.

An addition to the producing forces at the Lehrman Sunshine studio includes, besides two directors who will work under the supervision of Henry Lehrman himself, Glen Cavanaugh, Vera Stedman, Jack Cooper and George Ovey; and Leach Cross, a prominent local boxer, who has been put in charge of the property department.

Robinson Wins Commission.

Carlyle Robinson, until a few months ago publicity manager for Charles Chaplin, has qualified for a lieutenant's commission in the Officers' Training School at Camp Pike, Arkansas. Just prior to entering the army last May, Robinson made a tour of the Southern States with Chaplin in behalf of the Third Liberty Loan.

Roaring Twenties.

Thomas Holding is leading man for Madeline Travers in "The Danger Zone," directed by Ted Tally for release at the Western Fox Studio.

The news has just come from Chicago that Hal Roach, publicity manager for Douglas Fairbanks, is ill of the Spanish "flu."

Unfair Nuisance.

Hal Cooley is scheduled to soon weld a Southern belle, H. E. Topham, daughter of an Atlanta business man.

Lila Lee has gone to New York during the closing season to visit her guardian, Mrs. Gus Edwards.

William Russell says that the reports that he died of Spanish "flu" were greatly exaggerated.

When Dave Morrissey, of the Fox publicity department, announced his intention of driving his own car in the future, Mr. Morrissey said "One day, and now let's go downtown and take out some additional accident insurance."

National Force Takes $200,000 in Bonds.

More than $5,000 was subscribed to the Fourth Liberty Loan by officials and employees of the National Film Corporation and their associates, and the "Ogden" and "The Billie Rhodes Features."

Richard Dix, of the Morosco dramatic stock company, has just been given an opportunity to prove his acting skill in a motion picture production recently completed by the Morosco company. Dix is making good progress in his work, and it is expected that he will be given the opportunity to play leading parts in future productions.
only a little over a month—and look what a local paper has done to him; "Stiles Welch, the well known movie queen, is scheduled to appear in person at the Gar- rick tonight and deliver a short and ex- changes. Mr. Lichtman's first stop was Pittsburgh, where he spent Monday and Tuesday. From there his itinerary up to October 30 included two-day stops at Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati and Chi- cago.

Mr. Lichtman will be away about six weeks, his trip taking him as far as the Pacific Coast offices. Following his re- turn to New York he plans to make a similar tour of the offices in the Eastern and Southern districts.

Moss Houses Sell Many Bonds.

The revised figures of the Allied The- atrical and Motion Picture Liberty Loan campaign show that B. S. Moss' five theatres in Greater New York sold $786,800 worth of bonds.

On the last week of the drive, Moss gave orders to his house managers and loan workers to forget the show schedule entirely and drive for loan sub- scriptions. On special occasions as many as two or three vaudeville acts on a bill had to be eliminated in order to get the audience home before mid- night.

World Pictures Installs

HAVING in mind an old adage of "Poor Richard" that a penny saved is a penny earned, the oper- ating force at the World studio at Fort Lee has been increased by the addition of one man who will constitute the reclamation bureau.

The World prides itself upon its effi- ciency in all its divisions, but it is real- ized that even in the best regulated or- ganizations there is bound to be some wastage. It is for the purpose of sal- vaging much of the material that, in the rush and hurry of production pictures, is frequently discarded at the studio, that this bureau has been established.

The first day the reclamation man went to work he spent his time picking up nails. By the middle of the day he had accumulated a large quantity, which he straightened out and placed in a barrel, ready for use by the carpenters. These nails, except for his work, would never have been put to use again.

The next day the man picked up a great quantity of rags and paper which were baled and sold for a considerable sum of money. Each day he claims a large quantity of stuff which has real value and which, except for his efforts, would be entirely thrown away.

That the World's idea in establishing this reclamation bureau was based on sound judgment is proved by the fact that during the first two days the man was on the job he made his salary for the entire week.

Review Board Prepares Slides.

In the effort to meet the great need for nurses in stamping out the influ- enza epidemic in New York City the National Health Commissioner asked the National Board of Review to prepare and distribute to the Motion Picture Theatres in this city a slide asking for the aid of nurses and house helpers in the emergency. Slides were prepared. The exhibitors displayed their usual willingness to use their screens for the benefit of the pub- lic.

"Crusaders" Posters Offend Soderberg.

Frederick Soderberg, commissioner of streets of Oakland, Cal., has been so insistent in his efforts to block the ex- ploitation of official Government films that the city council has found it neces- sary to hold him in check. He recently confiscated street banners advertising "Pershing's Crusaders," declaring that they were a public menace and being maintained in violation of a city ordi- nance. He excused his action on the ground that besides being a noxious danger they were being used to adver- tise theatres and expressed the opinion that a private concern that hides under such a misnomer as "Pershing's Crusaders," is doing its business does not deserve consider- ation.

His remarks were strongly objected to and he was instructed to return the ban- ners to L. Lesser, chairman of the Division of Films, State Council of De- fense.

Vitagraph Makes Canadian Loan Picture.

Besides making six Liberty Loan pictures for the United States Government in the recent drive, Vitag- raph has made a picture for the Ca- nadian Government to be used in its 1918 Victory Loan campaign. The pic- ture was made under the personal super- vision of Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, and was di- rected by W. A. Norris. Agnes Ayres, Templar Saxe, Chas. L. Presty, Kendall and others are in the cast.

The central character of the story is a returned, wounded soldier, whose un- shadedness and courage turn a party of revelers to a realization of what real hardship means and leads to their giv- ing the government money which other- wise they would have spent in gay times.

Lieutenant Davidson Visits New York.

Lieutenant N. W. Davidson, of the Royal Flying Corps, formerly Vancou- ver manager for Specialty Film Import, Ltd., who is now in Canada, was a visitor in New York last week with L. E. Ouimet, president of Specialty Film Import.

Lieutenant Davidson has been a cadet student in the Flying Corps for ten months, having resigned from Specialty to enlist. After an intensive course of "Pershing's Crusaders," "The Official War Review," and several special pic- tures that are being reserved for this service.

Free Movies for Men in the Hospitals.

One of the new activities of the Divi- sion of Films, Committee on Public In- formation, in charge of Mrs. Jane S. Johnson, is the furnishing of Govern- ment films for presentation at the army and home offices. On special occasions as these pictures have already been shown at the Naval Hospital at Charleston, and arran-gements are being made to extend this service, which is entirely free. Among the pictures being shown to the convalescent soldiers and sailors in the hospitals are "America's Answer," "Pershing's Crusaders," "The Official War Review," and several special pic- tures that are being reserved for this service.

English Opera House in Indianapolis; theatres in Chicago, Pittsburgh, Kanka-kee, everywhere. Did I remember Murray and Mack! "Come," said Riddle, in a mysterious voice. He led me to the door of a room. "Murray and Mack are in there," he said, "singing. Listen." I could hear them plainly. I could have heard them if I had still been at the viaduct, waiting for the car that never came.

Music was issuing from the cracks around the door; melody poured through the keyhole; the walls bulged with song.

Riddle opened the door, and there were Murray and Mack—Charlie Murray and Mack Sennett! Charlie was singing "Little One, Goodbye" in a voice of great emotion and feeling, and Mack was coming in with a melodious hum that would have put a hive of syncopated bumble bees to shame.

We stole away softly so as not to disturb them at their art.

"Got something else to show you," said Riddle, and he introduced me to a composite Gertrude Hoffman, Annette Kellerman and Ruth St. Denis wearing a gorgeous head-dress, two bushels of pearls, and standing on the regulation tiger-skin rug, without which no movie vampire is complete.

Who Knows This Brown Vamp?
"Celebrated vamp," said Riddle, "engaged at an enormous salary to play a part in our new comedy, Yankee Doodle."

I checked over all the vampires I knew. This one did not fit any of them. It was neither Theda Gladys, Louise nor Kitty—who the devil was it? "Page Miss Brown," I told my memory. "What screen has she ornamented? Locate her that I may say something nice and befitting to the occasion, such as 'Ah, yes, I saw you in Heloise, the Hectic Heart Breaker, Wonderful work—fire, spirit, verve, vigor, vim—all the stuff we are supposed to say at these times."

But nothing doing. No vamp by the name of Brown would come to the surface.

Then a welcome interruption came along in the person of that slimmest of all slim comedians, Mal St. Clair. Mal was made up to represent the royal Hunk de Fromage of Germany, and of all the artistic impersonations of odious individuals, Mal took the cake!

Mal As the Hunk Takes the Palm.
I felt like going out on the street and uprooting an entire palm tree and presenting it to Mal.

The vamp? It was Bothwell Browne, the—I almost said female impersonator—the exponent of feminine impersonations. And I don’t mind admitting that Doodle," Mal St. Clair is the Clown Prince; Bert Roach is Von Hindenberg and Ford Sterling is the Kaiser. Marie Prevost has a part where she has to disguise herself as a German soldier.

It certainly didn't look like the flu was making any difference at Sennett's. They were going right ahead with their laugh-makers the same as if things were normal and every theatre in the country running full blast.

Walter Wright was making a schoolhouse comedy called "The Village Chents," with a cast made up of Louise Fazenda and her capital O curl right in the middle of her forehead; Myrtle Lind, Chester Conklin and Paddy McGuirie wearing a little two-for-a-cent mustache.

Eddie Cline was busy with "Hide & Seek, Detectives," a rib-tickler, with Ben Turpin, Charles Lynn, Tom Kennedy and Marie Prevost as support.

McGaffey Relates a Sad Tale.

After Sennett's, I drifted out Vine street in Hollywood to Lasky's. No flu there, but evidences of the devastating and deadly character of the malady in a sad tale related by Kenneth McGaffey.

The ninetynine show that the members of the Fifty-first California Guards, formerly the Lasky Home Guards, were planning, has been postponed indefinitely.

That was going to be some show, too. Adam Hull Shirk was booked for a Chink conjurer's act, and McGaffey and Jack Mulhall had ordered Donald Crisp, the property man, to secure four milk-white stallions for their piece. Crisp had procured one of the stallions. I saw it standing out on the lot, and just because it was a wooden horse, Mc and Jack had refused to use it. I'm just putting this in to show that absolute realism was to be the keynote of the show.

Wallie Reid was going to appear with his bungalow band, and an all-star cast composed of Tully Marshall, Raymond Hatton, Bud Duncan and Guy Oliver were getting ready to revive that classic of the Kickapo Indian Medicine Circuit, "Big-Foot Wallace."

Theodore Roberts, Charlie Murray, Lou Anger, Noah Berry and Jack Holt were billed for the Darktown Gentlemen's Grill Room, an act absolutely boiling over with funny gags and comical sayings.

After the sad news that this rare treat was to be pushed somewhere into the dim and distant future, I went out on the stages.

Giebner Makes Plea for Old Husbands.

There I saw Lila Lee, who said she was just finishing up "Puppy Love," her latest film, and then a fine scene from Cecil De Mille's new play, which is not named, but is to be an answer to "Old Wives for New." Why in the name of tophet doesn't some director do something for Old Husbands. Elliott Dexter and Marcia Manon were in the scene, and it looked most promising.

Peeped into another set where Robert Vignola was engineering Ethel Clayton through a striking scene, and then went over to where Donald Crisp was making interiors for "Venus in the East."

Bryant Washburn, all dyed out in scissor-tail coat and silk tile, in the role of Buddy McNair; Clarence Geldart as the genuine English butler from Indiana, and Bud Duncan as the bell hop, all looked as though they had stepped right out of the pages of Wallace Irwin's story.

Neither Anna Nilsson nor Margery Wilson, who uphold the feminine interest in the story, were there, for which I was properly sorry.

I told Donald Crisp that he didn't look as if he was making any kind of a little joke with him, and he said:

"No, the Spanish Flu doesn't leave a fellow looking or feeling very 'crisp' when it gets through with you. You ask Washburn, if you don't believe me. We both had it while we were back East."

E. M. Porter Back on Job.

After a three weeks' siege with influenza and a light attack of pneumonia, E. M. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine Company, is back at his desk at the main office. He looks a bit fagged out, but says he is feeling fine, and has a good appetite.

Hospital Completing Plans for Teaching the Wounded.

The Nicholas Power Company has been co-operating with Sidney B. Lust, president of Fujikawa Inc., in the work he has undertaken of instructing returned wounded soldiers in motion picture operating. In a letter just received from Mr. Lust, the general manager of the company, states "it gives us great pleasure to donate to the Walter Reed General Hospital and the United States General Hospital No. 2 at Fort McHenry, Md., Power 6-B motor-driven Camera- graphs.

At the Walter Reed Hospital a new workshop building is to be turned over to Mr. Lust in which to carry on his work. Two big benches have been built and twenty-four film Indies set up, and the men are to be taught rewinding and inspection. The booth will be of a collapsible type, so that, when instruction is given in machine work, it can be removed and a large class taught at a time.

It is also planned to interest men who have not reached that stage of convalescence where they can attend the school.

Wheeled tables are being built to carry rewinders and machine heads, to be taken to the Indies. They will be furnished with a book of instruction, and by the time they are able to be up and about it is hoped they will have a good foundation of the work. Major E. T. Baldwin is in charge of the vocational work at this hospital.

At Fort McHenry a seventy-five-foot auditorium is to be utilized for the educational work.

Cameron Teaches Projection to War Maimed Soldiers.

To paraphrase Burns, "Man's humanity to man makes countless thousands happy." In the many directions in which war is rushing out, none more strongly emphasizes the above statement than the work being done by its Institute for Crippled and Disabled Men. Not only are the draft conditions depleting all ranks of the employed, which must be replenished, but the eye must also be cast to the future, when our wounded soldier boy must be readjusted for their usual lines of endeavor. To the crippled who are able to get about and have use of their hands this worthy work is a godsend. It has now been in operation since last May, and under the able direction of James R. Cameron as projection instructor the unfortunates of our city are given the opportunity of perfecting themselves in the knowledge of motion picture projection.

Classes are held daily, and the instruction is most thorough. At present the class numbers range about twenty, and it is rapidly growing. A large film concern has agreed to furnish employment for all who qualify. The interests of the public and film manufacturers have been enlisted, prominent among whom is the Nicholas Power Company, manufacturer of the "Camera-graph."

It is to be hoped this most worthy object will meet with pronounced success.
QUARANTINE IN CHICAGO HOLDS TIGHT
Influenza-Pneumonia Epidemic Reaches Crest
—No One Can Foretell Opening of Theatres

During the ten days ending October 22 there were 4,501 deaths in Chicago from the influenza-pneumonia epidemic. The official record in City Health Commissioner Robertson's office shows that the crest was reached Thursday, October 17, when 1,918 new cases of influenza and 477 of pneumonia, or 2,395 cases in all, were recorded. Friday, October 18, showed a total of 2,372 cases and Saturday, October 19, a total of 2,136, the latter figure showing a decrease of 236 cases from the total of the preceding day. The combined cases for Sunday and Monday, October 20 and 21, reached 2,700, a daily average of 1,350, affording a most assuring sign that the epidemic is on the wane.

On Wednesday, October 23, I called at the headquarters of Doctor St. Clair Drake, State Director of Public Health, in the Hotel Sherman, where I met the gentleman and Dr. J. O. Cobb, of the United States Public Health Service. Dr. Drake informed me that he was keeping in close touch with every important community in the state of Illinois and was receiving daily telegrams on the conditions in each.

He was careful in stating that the quarantine will be lifted by districts, as the improvement in health conditions makes it possible; also that there will be no such thing as the lifting of the quarantine in a state-wide manner. He laid particular emphasis on the statement that no one but the state health authorities can modify or raise the quarantine in any community or district, the local health bodies in every case being governed by the state health authorities Chicago, for example, forms a district in itself, and when Health Commissioner Robertson deems it safe to lift the quarantine then the State Health Board will act.

Dr. Drake held the opinion that probably by the end of the week closing October 26, or at latest, in the beginning of the week following, the quarantine will be lifted from Evanston north to the Wisconsin line, excepting North Chicago and Zion City.

During these quarantine days many exhibitors in Chicago are giving the interiors of their houses a thorough overhauling and cleansing. Quite a number are renovating and redecorating. Jones, Linick & Schaefer are giving the Orpheum, on State street, a brand new interior this week. The Woodlawn, Sixty-third street and Cottage Grove avenue, Chicago's theatre beautiful, is receiving the most rigorous attention under the scrutinizing eye of Director Andrew Karsas. The Aristo is being redecorated by its owner, Fred W. Hartman, and so on with a host of other houses.

At the time of writing (Thursday, October 24) no one, not even Health Commissioner Robertson, can give a guess as to when the ban shall be lifted from Chicago theatres. It is simply a question of patient waiting and hoping for the best.

Andrew Karsas Talks About the Woodlawn

During an interesting and instructive conversation, one afternoon last week, with Andrew Karsas, managing director of the Woodlawn Theatre Company, I was impressed more strongly than ever that success never rectly to the goal he has in view, so that precious time may be saved. While he prides upon the mistakes of others, in the sense that he avoids making such mistakes himself, yet is he always anxious to learn from those whose works proclase to themselves. It will be a mighty factor in the lives of the numberless generations of people.

The cornerstone of the success of Andrew Karsas in the exhibiting department of the moving picture business has been his unwavering belief in the great future of the moving picture. Ten years ago, when the moving picture was considered only a plaything and a novelty by the great majority, Mr. Karsas was obsessed by the belief that it would become a mighty factor in the lives of the numberless generations of people yet to come. And he still believes that, more strongly, if possible, than before.

When Mr. Karsas was considering the purchase of the Drexel Theatre, at 833 East Sixty-third street, about eight years ago, some of his exhibitor friends tried to dissuade him, on the ground that the price was too high for the business possible in that location. Mr. Karsas, however, not only paid the price, but expended quite a sum on a costly organ for the house. Then he gradually made himself known to his patrons and soon became a power in the community.

Drexel Known for Clean Shows.

He worked in harmony with the Seven Ward Auxiliary, an organization comprising thousands of the leading women of the community, consulting them on the selection of programs and winning their confidence and esteem by his clean and upright dealing. The Drexel soon became known as the house showing clean, entertaining and well-varied programs, so that mothers were confident that their children could attend, unaccompanied, every show at that house. But it seated only 600 people and Mr. Karsas sold out at a profit. Then he laid his plans for the Woodlawn, at 833-835 East Sixty-third street, in the same community as the Drexel.

A description of the Woodlawn appeared in the issue of July 20, this year, so that nothing further in that respect may be given here. It caters to a population of 75,000, in a territory covering four square miles. This is a fine business community and the Woodlawn Business Men's Association is one of the most prominent trade organizations in the city.

The members of the association just now are complaining seriously because of the necessity for closing picture theatres. Their business has been greatly affected because the people do not go out of doors as formerly, and business is stagnant. When the picture houses were open shopping was carried on extensively before and after theatre shows. Now everything is practically dead.

Manager Karsas tells me that in selecting his programs for the Woodlawn he makes "quality and variety" his motto and not "quantity." "Quality must always be there," says Mr. Karsas. "Only pictures of the highest class are shown on the Woodlawn screen. No sex pictures are allowed."

High grade dramas, comedies, educational and topical reels are shown at the Woodlawn, and the members are in close touch with him at all times. He is always ready to listen to their suggestions and to profit by them. Control over the Ward Auxiliary, already referred to in connection with the Drexel Theatre, are also ardent supporters of Manager Karsas in his management of the Woodlawn.

Mr. Karsas sees at least ten pictures a week from which he selects two, three or four—four being his limit for a program. The selections are made by himself alone. He observes a rule of only one week—a week on Mondays and Thursdays, as a rule, but occasionally on Sunday.

Music for the Pictures.

About three or four days before the showing of a program, Mr. Karsas and Director Leon Bloom view the pictures by themselves and select the music and arrange the cues. Orchestra rehearsals is called the morning afterward, and if certain scenes are not properly suited by the musical selections made the day before, the music is changed. This rehearsal takes from one and a half to two hours.

Arranging the Light Effects.

Director Bloom, Manager Karsas and the stage manager consult on the determination of the light effects for the daily overture and the pictures. The opening overtures are from ten to twelve or fifteen minutes, and special care is exercised so that the strong dramatic elements in the musical composition are emphasized by the light used. These lights are in the dome over the auditorium, around the four panel mural paintings on certain of the walls, and around the stage, to set the stage man in manipulating the lights from his station near the operating room. Red lights are found to be the best for heightening the strong dramatic points of the music, blue for the softer periods, and so on.

In concluding it is timely to state that the Karsas policy in general is to send patrons away always satisfied. This lacking, then all is wrong.

Carl Laemmle Announces

Finish of Eight-Reeler

CARL LAEMMLE, president of Universal, stopped over in Chicago a few hours last week on his return to New York from Universal City. He announced the production of a feature directed by Allen Holubar, in which Dorothy Phillips appears in the leading role. The title has not yet been decided, but Mr. Laemmle believes it will be a success.

The story shows the experiences of the American who enlists in a British regiment and also those of his wife in America during his absence.

Mr. Laemmle stated that the story has ample material for fifteen reels, but that Director Holubar is now hard at work editing and cutting the scenes taken, the overture has been reduced to its probable length when released.

No new pictures have been started at Universal City since the influenza epidemic, but other important work under way at the time have been completed.

Select's New Chicago Home.

According to an announcement making the second Star series of Select Pictures, with Clara Kimball Young, Norina and Constance Talmadge, Alice Brady and Marion Davies in the galaxy, there will be new official printed notice that Select's Chicago office will be in Paramount's former quarters, on the nineteenth floor of the old building, and will be vacated after Monday, October 28. All business patrons and friends of Select Pictures are invited to call sometime during the week of October 28 and meet President Lewis J. Selznick, who will come on from New York for the occasion.

Manager Fred C. Aiken, assisted by Ben Bedell and other members of his office, has been busy for over a week making the necessary preparations for moving into the new quarters. These have been thoroughly planned since Famous Players-Lasky Corporation vacated them, and they are, without doubt, the most attractive and serviceable in the city.

Rothacker's Laboratory Work Praised.

Watterson E. Rothacker, president of the organization bearing his name, is proud of the following testimonial from Samuel L. Rothapfel, recently received in a letter to the booklets editor:

"I happen to see the laboratory work on the film 'The Temple of Dusk,' and I cannot help telling you that it is probably the most beautiful I have seen in years. Surely such work should commend itself to anyone desirous of obtaining the very finest and most artistic effects that it is possible to obtain in these days."

By the way, the president and the working force of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company are particularly (and deservedly) proud of the organization's showing in the Fourth Liberty Loan. The total was $13,350, of which $4,600 were plus subscriptions.

Showing of First A. D. C. Release.

The Affiliated Booking Corporation of the Universal System, in charge of the distribution of the product of the Affiliated Distributors Corporation in the territory named, announce the exact date on which the first release of the last named organization at the Morrison Hotel, Tuesday, November 5. A luncheon will be served to the parent concern in banquet room No. 5 at 12:30 p.m., the day mentioned, after which the picture will be shown. Another showing of the feature will be given the same date in the private quarters of Universal in the Consumers' Building. The leading officials of the A. D. C. and the members of the A. B. C. will be present at the exhibition.

Final Returns for Fourth Loan.

The final returns show that amusement in general in the City of Chicago contributed $1,325,000 to the Fourth Liberty Loan, this being $125,000 over the allotment. Of this total the film division in the city contributed $168,000, and of that amount George Kleine and his office forces contributed $50,000. George K. Spoor gave his personal check for $10,000, and the American Company and its office force $4,500.

Mann Assigned to Signal Corps.

Luman C. Mann was assigned to the Signal Corps of Columbia University, New York, last week, and left for his new quarters Monday, October 28. Mr. Mann was formerly sergeant major in the Aviation Corps at Fort Sill, Okla., but was temporarily incapacitated by an accident in the field. He is well known in film circles in Chicago.

John Joseph Harvey

JOHN JOSEPH HARVEY is the man that is entitled to the credit for having "finished" the Kaiser. J. J. did the job without the aid of a fleet of aeroplanes, an army of a couple of million and did it in exactly four weeks. The battle front was the Biograph studio and the picture was made at the rate of two reels a week. This in itself is something of a record.

"The Kaiser's Finish" is being placed on the market by A. Warner, who is conducting a sales campaign on a State rights basis. The territories of Ohio, Maine, New York, Indiana, Massachusetts, Virginia, Rhode Island, Alabama, New Jersey, Florida, Michigan, Connecticut Pennsylvania, and North and South Carolina have already been sold. Mr. Harvey is at present about to close with a number of capitalists in Pittsburgh, who are financing a new picture producing corporation which is to start work in the vicinity of that city as soon as the influenza epidemic has been lifted.

HENDERSON VISITS OLD HOME.

Dell Henderson, having finished directing Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greetley in "Hit or Miss," has gone to his old home, St. Thomas, Ontario, to spend a few days visiting his folks before resuming work at the studio at Fort Lee. Mr. Henderson's next picture will be "The Praise Agent," which was written by Earle Mitchell, who is at present playing a prominent role in "A Stitch in Time," running at the Fulton.
WHETHER Uncle Sam discovered the movies, or the movies discovered Uncle Sam, depends upon one's point of view. One thing is certain, the Government has entered the motion picture business with vigor and success at its command, and its participation in the film industry on an ever-increasing scale is now an accomplished fact.

Despite this active participation, the United States official films are not to be considered as rivals of the purely commercial films. The legitimate purpose of the commercial film is to produce profitable pictures. The Government is giving an equivalent in entertainment to the public. The real purpose of the Government picture is to keep the Govern- ment in close touch with the French soil, to provide a visualization of facts. They are only commercial to the extent that even the Government cannot produce motion pictures without expense, and being commercial they might be expected to be free. In truth, for the same reason, the Government pictures would be impossible unless the cost were met by increased taxation.

The Government pictures have a distinct mission. They answer the inevitable question as to how the billions being raised in taxes and loans are being expended in the prosecution of the war; they show the necessity, whenever the opportunity occurs, to buy bonds until it hurts; they prompt generosity in contributing to the needs of the several war-aid organizations that have done so much in the way of providing supplies, equipment, and morale of the soldiers in the cantonments and on the "other side," and they neutralize the persistent and secretive prophecies of the Government's failure.

The President Calls on the Screen

"War pictures are now familiar to the American public. In their inception they were considered simply from the showman's standpoint. The story they told was often thrilling, but there was little of patriotic impulse in them. President Wilson was the first to call the motion picture to the aid of the Government. As chairman of the Committee on Public Information, he recognized great possibilities in the film. He saw that the motion picture could be made an admirable auxiliary of the Committee on Public Information. He anticipated the effect upon the American public of motion pictures showing the wonderful work of preparation in the United States, in the face of unavoidable delays and disheartening criticism; he sensed the thrill that would stir the "foks at home" when they saw American railroads and American factories, American ships and countless other American industries transplanted to France in order to speed up America's participation in the war. President Wilson called for the practical effect of motion pictures showing American soldiers in the trenches or "going over the top.""

The Division of Films, of which Charles S. Hart is director, was organized considerably less than a year ago, and on a very modest scale. It began, however, with one splendid asset. From the first it had the co-operation of General John J. Pershing in securing official consent and official participation. The official pictures of American army activity in France, Signal Corps photographers—men who were willing to risk their lives in the line of duty—were assigned to take pictures of army life out on the various battlefields, as well as in the busy areas behind the lines. The co-ordinated product of these initial activities was "Pershing's Crusade," which has since been shown. "America's Answer" was the second official war picture. Both have justified themselves. Their psychological effect, as analyzed, has expounded the situation as never before. The third feature picture, "Under Four Flags," is now in the making.

Uncle Sam Makes Short Subjects, Too.

Other interesting and timely pictures issued by the Division of Films include "Our Bridge of Ships," showing the remarkable progress being made in the shipyards of the United States in replacing the losses caused by the ruthless submarine campaign of the Huns; "Our Colored Fighters," visualizing the negro in the cantonments preparing to take his place in the American overseas forces, and several other pictures of an educational character. A new schedule of production calls for twelve two-reel pictures, each pictorializing an important activity of the war. They are to be issued semi-monthly. The Division of Films is also furnishing, through its scenario department, the stories for a large number of films, which will be issued from time to time, not by the Government, but under Government supervision. These are all based upon patriotic subjects, and are intended to create interest in the conduct of the war. The official War Review, now familiar to the public, is issued by the Division of Films, in cooperation with the British, French and Italian Governments.

This slight review of what the Division of Films has accomplished within a year, is in itself an indication of how the auxiliary of the Committee on Public Information has grown. The demand for the official pictures and the need of an organization to handle them successfully from a business standpoint, pointed the way to the development of the motion picture division, and the broadening of Uncle Sam's interests as a motion picture producer. The small offices that saw the origin of the Division of Films were soon vacated for larger and more adaptable quarters. In time these were outgrown, and three entire floors of one of New York's large office buildings are now utilized.

The employees have constantly multiplied. In order to produce pictures and at the same time to exploit them—for even before the war films were distributed to the public in order to attract a market—a splendid organization has been built up by Director Hart. The organization commands the services of many men who have been successful, not only in the motion picture, theatrical and publicity fields, but in other lines of business activity also, and they have resigned from more lucrative employments to serve the Government.

Who the Department Heads Are.

Charles S. Hart is the motor-power for the activities of the Division of Films. As director he is in close touch with its several bureaus and departments, and everything is carried forward under his personal supervision. His production and distribution center with valuable assistants, is in New York. Mr. Sullivan, manager of domestic distribution, and his assistant manager, George R. Meeker, are the responsible selling agencies for the organization. The practical co-ordination of the department of feature films, the bureau of community service and the Department of home service, has placed upon Mr. Sullivan's department the entire task of marketing the products of the Division of Films in the United States. The manager of the foreign films, under Mr. Sullivan, is C. B. Trowbridge. W. J. MacInnes is director of advertising and publicity. The press bureau, in charge of the official manager, is emblazoned in his department. This department also issues "The Official Film News." The production department, the sub-agency producing films and also for the extensive printing of still pictures and their distribution.

The film laboratory of the Division of Films is in charge of Robert E. Rinehart as manager of production; the photographic laboratory is directed by Captain G. W. Hance, of the Signal Corps Division, who is in charge of the Government school of photography at Columbia College; and William A. Grant is manager of the bureau of war photography, which is in charge of producing films and also for the extensive printing of still pictures and their distribution.

Rufus Steele Is Head Scenarioist.

The scenario department of the Division of Films, of which Rufus Steele is director, furnishes films stories for the official pictures as well as for war films produced by motion picture producers, in co-operation with the Government. Two activities that carry on a very important function are co-operation with the educational branch, managed by Clara De Lissa Berg, which seeks to interest educational and religious centers in the Government films, and a literary branch, directed by Mrs. Jane S. Johnson, which makes it possible for soldiers and sailor patients in the Government hospitals to see the official films without charge, and also enables organizations... with limited resources to get the Government pictures at a nominal cost.

Manager Sullivan also announces the following special representatives: H. J. Marshall, Chicago; M. F. Lasker, Buffalo; M. J. Sullivan, Chicago; J. G. Conner, Indianapolis; J. P. Taylor, Salt Lake City; Ned Thatcher, New York; and Sydney Spedon, New York City; Ellis A. Woolf, Minneapolis; J. F. McLoughlin, St. Louis; Frank Coffenberg, Seattle; Lee Cranfll, Washington, D. C.; and A. O. Needham, Cleveland. The Division of Films keeps in touch with newspapers, organizations and industries throughout the United States by means of a mailing bureau, of which Henry F. Atwater is superintendent.

The Paris representative of the Division of Films is H. C. Hoagland. The American manager of the foreign picture section is Marcus A. Beeman, and there are a number of co-ordinated branches of the foreign films service, all of which are associated with the Division of Films, which is carrying on an educational picture campaign abroad, as well as in the United States.

In New York, the Division has a Bureau of Expositions, of which Chester I. Campbell and William Ganson Rose are directors. W. J. Benedict is the booking manager. The bureau has successfully staged War Exhibitions in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Chicago and other cities, where all records for attendance at an outdoor exhibition were broken.

From all of which it will be seen that the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information is one of the most important factors in giving to the world the true story of the war, told in a universal language, through the motion picture.

Knights Show Pictures to American Soldiers

In its new soldiers' and sailors' club, Boulevard Malesherbes, Paris, the Knights of Columbus has arranged to entertain the men in uniform with motion picture exhibitions this fall and winter. The equipment has been installed in the club, and the films will be presented by Fitzgerald, an electrical engineer of Odensburg, N. Y., who is serving as Knights of Columbus secretary. The selection and management of the exhibitions are in charge of Charles "Sandy" Chapman, of Cambridge, Mass., for many years with Ward & Vokes.

The first entertainment was staged on a late September Sunday evening to a crowded house. A William Farnum and two comics constituted the program. Hereafter the soldiers and sailors will be permitted to see the best of American films dramas with American captions at the Knights of Columbus club every Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday night. The entertainments are proving popular among both officers and men of the American Expeditionary Force. No charge is made for the picture shows, it being the policy of the Knights of Columbus to make no charge for any service rendered American soldiers and sailors in any part of France and England.

Gordon With Screen Craft

HARRIS GORDON, who portrayed the leading juvenile role in Screen craft's initial offering, "The Prod ignal Wife," has been re-engaged by that organization for its second production. The story is as yet unnamed, but will be produced under the direction of Frank Reicher at the New Rochelle studio.

Mr. Gordon plays opposite Mollie King in this feature, in which the part assigned to him is that of a young detective. His work is well known to both exhibitors and fans who will remember him from the days of the Reliance and Thanhouser companies, since which time he has appeared in the support of several of the Paramount stars and under the Fox banner.

Among the recent releases in which he has been featured are "Why America Will Win," a Fox Standard Picture based on the life of General Pershing, in which Mr. Gordon played John J. Pershing in the earlier periods of his life, and the leading juvenile role in "Beyond the Law," a state rights feature recently released by the Southern Feature Film Company.

"America's Answer" for November 11

"America's Answer," the official war picture issued by the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, and distributed by the World Film Corporation, will have its first motion picture theatre showing in New York during the week of November 11, when it will be seen for three days at the Lincoln Square, Garey, Victory, Boulevard, National, American and Orpheum theatres.

Detroit Men Touring

M. A. Ruben, business manager for the Detroit Motion Picture Operators' Union, and C. A. Weddige, manager of the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Company, of Detroit, came overland by automobile to New York a week or more ago and spent several days looking around among the trade. Mr. Weddige's company handles the Simplex machine in his territory.

FIRE CAUSES DEATH OF OLD EXHIBITOR

Charles Marshall of Duluth and Family Drowned Fleeing from Forest Flames—Theatres Destroyed

Eight picture theatres and thousands of feet of film are known to have been destroyed in the greatest forest fire in Northern Minnesota's history, which raged all through the week and was still burning at the present writing.

One thousand lives have been lost, 15,000 persons made homeless, and at least fifteen towns wiped off the map. Other towns were badly damaged and reports are yet to meagre to estimate the extent of the blow to the moving picture business.

Charles Marshall, owner and manager of the Lyceum Theatre of Duluth for the past twenty-five years and pioneer showman of the Northwest, and his wife and two young boys, lost their lives in the great fire.

Mr. Marshall owned a beautiful cabin at Pike Lake, a popular summer resort in the woods nine miles from Duluth. He and his family were enjoying an outing at Pike Lake when the terrible forest fire broke out on the evening of Saturday, October 12. They successfully fled War Expositions in a small boat and going out on the lake. However the terrific gale raised enormous waves and capsized the little craft. The Marshall family was drowned.

Other families lost their lives in a similar way when they took to the lake in small boats, which were overturned.

Among the picture theatres reported destroyed are: Diamond Theatre, T. O. Fleishhein, proprietor, and the Grand, L. E. Blessner, proprietor, both at Cloquet; Majestic Theatre, C. Womack, proprietor, Moose Lake; Star Theatre, James Barlow, proprietor, Bevey; Savoy Theatre, Peter Charrur, proprietor, Proctor, and Family Theatre, N. W. Turner, proprietor, Pine City. One theatre at Carlton and another at Tamarack.

When final reports are received it is believed that other theatres will be found in the list of destroyed. Following the fire, many other picture houses in many of the cities of the northwest on account of the influenza epidemic, the forest fire has had a depressing effect in film circles.

Y. M. C. A. Film Coming Soon

The release date of the Y. M. C. A. subject, "The Red Triangle," has necessarily been postponed because of the destruction which took up all pictures for the week. Application has been made to the War Department, however, to get a special release date for this film in order that it may be exhibited as soon as the closing ban has been lifted. The original date for release by Mutual was Sept. 20. Announcement of the new date will be made as soon as the war department's answer is received.

SPOOR PERFECTS PROCESSING MACHINE

Essanay Head Has Installed Two at Chicago Plant—Each Has Million Feet a Week Capacity

A time when the film industry is feeling an external pressure due to the war, and when internal conditions are particularly unsettled, necessitating the greatest economy in all its various branches, George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Manufacturing Company, has perfected a processing machine which, it is stated, will save manufacturers millions of dollars annually.

Two of these machines, which are revolutionary in their method of processing film, are now installed and working smoothly at the Essanay plant in Chicago. They have been given a practical test under the most severe and exacting conditions, and have processed millions of feet for Essanay and other concerns with highly satisfactory results.

10,000,000 Feet a Week.

Ten machines, each 40 feet in length and weighing 50 tons, have been constructed and are now being installed. They will be in operation shortly, and the ten machines, with a generous allowance for delays of any nature whatever, are capable of processing a minimum of 10,000,000 feet a week.

Some years ago Mr. Spoor was convinced that the system of processing film in grates was antiquated, and had failed to keep pace with the advancement of the motion picture industry in other lines. He realized that there was a demand created for a process involved both in time and material in processing by the drum and by the tank, rack or frame systems, while the film itself was processed in a consistent or euable standard of work.

With a view to eliminating this waste and at the same time standardizing the work so as to obtain a uniform and high grade product, he engaged F. B. Thompson, an engineer of high qualifications, and an expert in chemistry, to construct a processing machine.

Will Eliminate Waste.

After a year of experimenting, Mr. Thompson completed this machine. Two years ago it was installed in the Essanay studio where it operated for three years, and was studied and thoroughly tested and corrections made until it was brought to the present high standard of efficiency and perfection.

The machine has been operated under every conceivable condition, and has proved even more highly satisfactory than anticipated. In the past two years these machines have processed all the product of the Essanay Company and considerable for other concerns, and accomplished their work with unflagging ability,rapidity and success.

Mr. Spoor claims for the new machine that it will quadruple the life of film by making it soft and flexible; that it reduces operating expense; that it saves loss by scratching or damaging in handling; effects great economy in chemicals, and simplifies the work of handling and shipping.

The Chicago plant has equipment almost completely installed that will allow the actual processing of ten million feet of positive film weekly, and a messenger service department will soon be in operation between Chicago and New York, which will make possible the delivery of positive prints throughout the United States in record time.

Will Use Liberty Specials for Fifth Loan Campaign

The motion picture films made for the Fourth Liberty Loan will be used for the fifth loan, according to plans now being made by the Treasury Department. Probably no new pictures will be made.

It is declared that the influenza epidemic set in so soon after the opening of the campaign that only one or two of the films were in circulation more than a few days, and that, by changing any references to the fourth loan to apply to the next, they can be used without any danger of their being exhibited twice in the same houses.

It was at first planned, when officials figured on using the same films next time, to bring East those that had been circulating in the West, and replacing them with pictures that it had been planned to show in this section of the country, but it is now believed that such action will be unnecessary.

Because of the epidemic, which resulted in the closing of theatres in many sections of the country during the great part of the loan period, the greater expenditures made by the motion picture industry and the valuable pictures turned out failed to achieve their full purpose. In Boston the houses were closed during practically the entire period, while in Washington and a number of other large cities in the East and Middle West no shows were permitted during more than half of the campaign.

At that, however, even with the large number of closed houses, the big sick and death lists, and the missions German propaganda which chose that time to launch a new peace offensive, the motion picture industry is credited with a big part in making the campaign the success it turned out to be.

Officials in Washington are duly appreciative of what the motion picture industry accomplished along this line, will be completing the plans for the next loan, for even if peace be declared, it will be necessary to have a fifth and probably a sixth loan to raise the money to be expended in the services of the motion picture star.

Jewel Carmen Enters Suit Against Fox Companies

JEWEI CARMEN, who recently entered into a five years' contract with the Frank A. Keeney Picture Corporation, has filed an action in the United States District Court against the Fox Film Corporation and the William Fox Vaudeville Company to recover $25,000 damages and secure an injunction restraining the defendants from circulating statements in the motion picture industry to the effect that the Fox companies have sole legal claim to the services of the motion picture star.

When Miss Carmen signed a contract with the Fox companies she was still a minor, and upon being advised that this contract was not binding she accepted a more favorable contract with the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation, but when she entered the employ of the latter company the actress alleges the Fox companies lodged a protest with the Keeney Company, claiming exclusive right to her services, with the result that she has no engagement at present.

Moreover, Miss Carmen alleges that the Fox companies have threatened to have her blacklisted by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry unless she carries out the terms of her contract with those companies, and threatened to start injunction suits against any motion picture company which attempted to exhibit photoplays in which Miss Carmen appeared.

Miss Carmen demands that the court adjudge her contract with the Fox companies null and void on the theory that a contract executed by a minor is not binding, and asks that the Fox companies be permanently enjoined from circulating statements to the effect that the Fox companies have sole claim to her services.

HODKINSON TO RELEASE THROUGH PATHE
Former Organization Will Continue to Serve Customers Through Personal Representatives

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that commencing Monday, November 25, and from that date on, it has arranged to make use of the exchange facilities of the exchange companies, and to give their services to the various productions now on its list. The brands which are to be transferred are the Jesse D. Hampton Productions, feature films, Misses Ida and Lilah Walker Pictures, Bessie Barriscale Productions, Louise Glaum Pictures, Douglas Natural Color Films, etc.

Speaking of the change, Mr. Hodkinson said the move was made as a result of much careful thought and deliberation, and was calculated to give the Hodkinson Service of selected photo plays the best and most efficient exchange service possible.

Mr. Hodkinson further stated it was his belief that, owing to the unique conditions prevailing today, this change, which is due to take place in about thirty days, can be accomplished without the usual confusion and difficulty.

Hodkinson representatives in each territory will have their offices with the individual Pathe exchanges, and will answer to their respective Hodkinson customer as heretofore. It is the desire of the Hodkinson organization—and all departments are working hard to gain this purpose—to have all arrangements completely settled so that the change will be effected before the great majority of the theatres are opened, and that not only present Hodkinson customers, but the many new customers who have signed up in the past few weeks who have been unable to secure films owing to the influenza ban may be served with expedition and dispatch.

C. E. Shurtleff, general sales manager of the Hodkinson Corporation, will leave this week for an extended trip through the west and Middle West territories, visiting each Hodkinson representative and giving complete instructions for the change. W. A. Bach, assistant general manager, who will make a flying trip through the Southwestern territory, returning by way of Kansas City, St. Louis and Pittsburgh, fulfilling the same mission in the sectional offices. Mr. Bach, also Western division manager, will handle the territory from Omaha west as heretofore. There are now twenty-four Hodkinson representatives in the field.

In connection with the future releasing plans of the Hodkinson Corporation, Mr. Hodkinson said his plans contemplate a continuance of the work already done, which, he feels, has provided consistent quality of releases could be secured.

Brunet Expresses Pleasure.

"The Pathe sales organization is today the best in the country," said Vice-President Brunet, "and we are proud of the new arrangement. I have developed it, selected it, and had it trained until I can truthfully make that statement with a justifiable pride. When we saw our exchange managers all gathered together at our 'save and serve' convention recently I was proud of them. I felt that it was very doubtful if ever in the history of the industry there had been gathered together a body of exchange managers who would average so high in ability, appearance, character and knowledge of the business. Knowing the value of our organization, I knew that we could be of great aid to Pathe. In them, we have great admiration and a high esteem. Our agreement cannot fail to be good business for us both and for the industry as a whole."

Curwood and Nell Shipman Form Producing Company

A COMBINATION of considerable moment and one which will undoubtedly become an important factor in the production field, because of the standing and ability in their particular field of each of the parties, has just been formed between Nell Shipman and Charles M. Curwood.

James Oliver Curwood, who is recognized as one of the most prolific and versatile writers of fiction, and as the author of many successful screen successes, has agreed to give Miss Shipman the exclusive rights to his original manuscripts and published works for screen interpretation.

Miss Shipman will also create new vehicles, written and composed with especial attention to Miss Shipman's peculiar and striking abilities—stories that will have for their locale the great Northwest, with its romance, color and swift moving action, and as a motif the lives, loves, hates, ambitions and sacrifices of the pioneer, but always red-blooded, human and appealing men and women of this romantic and entrancing land.

Referring to the combination, Mr. Curwood writes: "I have watched Nell Shipman's work closely in my stories. She is the only actress in America I would sever my present profitable associations with, for she is the only star who can do outdoor work and do it big."

Two of Mr. Curwood's stories, "God's Country," and "The Son of Kazan," each a signal success, have been made with Miss Shipman as the star.

Under the new arrangement, Curwood's screened stories, of which have averaged ten releases a year, will be reduced to four or five. The smaller number of stories will make it possible for both star and author to give greater time and effort to the artistic end of the productions, and thus arrive at a greater subsequent appeal.

The first of the Curwood stories for which production has been selected, and a further conference between the writer and the player will be held to determine whether the interesting screen relations of Curwood's widely read stories or a story written especially for the films. The new affiliation will be known as the Shipman-Curwood Producing Company.

New Organization in Southern Territory

The Criterion Film Service, Inc., is a new distributing organization in the Atlanta area, with headquarters in Atlanta. Its principals are experienced film men, well acquainted in the territory because of their previous activities in the South. "Grain of Dust," "The Judge's Children," and "Pioneers" and some sensational serials are now in process of exploitation by these officials: M. A. Lightman, president; R. S. Simms, vice-president and general manager; and A. S. Dickinson, secretary and treasurer.

Fox Announces Changes in Exchange Management

To fill vacancies caused by the calling of its men to the colors and in consequence of transfers in the home office and elsewhere, the Fox Film Corporation has made several changes recently in the personnel of its district and branch managers.

Chayton P. Sheehan, who has been a general manager of the Pacific Coast branch for the last few months at the Buffalo exchange, has been made district manager of the territory served by the Cleveland, Detroit, Pittsburgh and Buffalo exchanges.

Another district manager announced this week is Paul C. Mooney, who has been made manager of the Pacific Coast branch operations. He will be in charge of the territories served from the Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles offices.

C. B. Price, formerly of the Fox Washington office, has been put in charge of the Pittsburgh exchange, succeeding F. C. Burbans. B. P. Rogers has been appointed to succeed Mr. Price in Washington.

George W. Mann has been made manager of the Fox branch office in San Francisco, and G. E. McKeen has been appointed Fox St. Louis manager. F. G. Marchman has been named manager in Atlanta, Ga., and F. H. Vine is the new manager of the Boston exchange. Charles H. Powell has been appointed manager in Cleveland, succeeding Sidney Abel, who has been made head of the contract department in the Fox home office. Charles Muehlem has been named manager of the Fox exchange office in Denver, and D. Leo Dennison is the new manager of the Minneapolis office. M. S. Bailey is now manager of the Fox exchange office in Detroit, succeeding Field Carmichael, who was American representative of Fox in Europe.

SELECT PUTS UP BIG SIGN.

Select Pictures Corporation is the possession of the largest and most striking signs in New York. The sign is located on the south side of the Godfrey Building at 729 Seventh avenue, and announces that Select Pictures Corporation has been incorporated in the Godfrey Building, and names Select's five stars, Norma Talmadge, Clara Kimball Young, Constance Talmadge, Ada Moore and Alice Terry.

The sign is 68 by 100 feet, and extends down the south wall of the building for a distance of nine stories from the top. The largest letters on the sign are eight feet high and the letters are gold. Ten of the most striking and beautiful colors have been used in the painting.

Walter Morton Reaches France.

Walter Morton, the popular motion picture actor, who went abroad to serve as a field secretary for the Knights of Columbus, has safely arrived in France. "The ship on which I sailed has arrived safely overseas" was the official postcard notification that just came to hand.

Vitagraph's Serial Pictures Gaining in Popularity

THE Vitagraph Company reports a continuously increasing demand for the serial photoplay, "Bend on the Fighting Trail," in which William Duncan and Carol Holloway were featured, Vitagraph has set up records in mail and distribution. This fifteen-episode drama was released in September, 1917, and is still one of the most active units in Vitagraph service. It was followed by "Vengeance—and the Woman," in which the same stars were featured, and the newer production set a new record for the number of theatres booking a serial. This mark was, in turn, shattered in November, with "The Women in the Web," featuring Hilda Nova and J. Frank Glendine, followed by "From the Trenches," starring Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, shattering all previous records.

One of Vitagraph's latest serials, "The Iron Test," was released, with Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway co-starred, and the booklet of Vitagraph shows that the advance bookings on this production were greater than those for any of its predecessors.

This record shows that the serial business is progressing, and Vitagraph is authority for the claim that many houses of the better class beretofe known in the trade as "non-serial" houses are now booking, trap doors, etc., but the Vitagraph serial business has come to be one of the important branches of the company's program. The stories for all of the serials are written by Albert E. Smith, president of the company, and Cyrus Towne, the company's head office writer. A great many of the serials are available for swift action and ingenious plots. They do not depend for thrill on trick walls, trap doors, etc., but are simple melodramas, with plenty of fine riding and much outdoor photography, with mountains and desert as the stage upon which the action takes place.

The company not long ago adopted a fixed policy of producing Leah Baird with the chief spy, from which the stolen torpedo plans were recovered, takes flight. He fears that the Secret Service agents will soon be on his track, and is hurrieding in his automobile to a new base of operations, when the machine goes over a cliff and he is killed.

Film Market to Distribute Gathem's Novelty Subjects

The Film Market, Inc., has acquired for distribution throughout the world the Gathem Film Corporation's output of miniature novelty productions. These consist of two subjects, a patriotic and a classic, released as a one reel feature every four weeks.

The subjects now ready are, in the order of release, "The Star Spanned Banner," "Columbia," and "The Battle Cry of Freedom," each approximately five hundred feet, produced before the policy of two subjects on the same reel was adopted, and "Home Sweet Home" and "The Girl I Left Behind Me," made before the two subject reel plan went into effect.

Robert W. Priest, president of the Film Market, Inc., has placed the series for the first year with Sidney B. Lust of Super Film Productions, Inc., Chicago, Ill.; the second year, Lum and Sayre, Maryland and District of Columbia, and with Greenfield & Condel, of the Liberty Feature Film Co., of Shreveport, La., for Texas and Oklahoma.

Widespread interest in these novelty productions is said to have been manifested by exhibitors and independent distributors throughout the United States, and now a special drive is to be made to cover foreign territory.

"Ashes of Love" Points a Moral

"Ashes of Love," the latest picture written and produced by Ivan Abramson for the Graphic Film Corporation, interpreted by an excellent cast, including James K. Hackett, Effie Shannon, Isabel Moore, William B. Davidson, Hugh Thompson, Dora Mills Adams, Thea Talbot and William Deholt, is said to tell not only an interesting story, but to be filled with action, scenes, tense situations and splendid climaxes, but also to convey a moral in that it will open the eyes of many to the harmful effects of deceit and loveless marriages.

Love is the theme—love of a strong man for a wife who allows her infatuation for another man to lead her astray. She dies, leaving her husband in ignorance of her unfaithfulness, and he swells so constantly on the magnitude of his loss that his mind becomes affected, and he continues to see visions of her. Weighed down by an unceasing loneliness he contemplates suicide, and to save his life and reason the wife's mother tells him of a confession her daughter had made—that she had been untrue to their love. As he comes back from the shadows the bigness of his love allows him to find forgiveness in his heart for the woman he thought had shared it, and contentment comes to him in devoting his time to a philanthropy in which she had been greatly interested.

Two Kinds of Men in Warner Film

The marked superiority in clean, wholesome manliness and bearing of American Army officers serving under General Pershing over the commissioned apaties of Kultur in the German ranks, is shown with startling clarity in a number of comparative scenes that are a part of the actual military phases of the story of "The Kaiser's Finish," the new eight-part photoplay prophecy specially for the state rights market by L. Warner.

The searing, cynical, overbearing attitude of the Hun leaders in pictured in the scenes photographed on the German front two years ago, showing their disdain and intolerance of anything or anyone of lesser military degree than themselves. Their personalities are said to reflect this in the film to a point that shows them possessed of every mental and physical perversion requisite to the commission of the atrocities that have taken hundreds of thousands of innocent lives and destroyed millions of dollars in property in Belgium and Northern France.
First National to Handle "Cannibal" Film in New York

The First National Exhibitors' Exchange has secured for distribution in the State of New York, Martin Johnson's sensational "Cannibals of the South Seas." This deal has just been consummated with the Robertson-Cole Company, which controls the world's rights to this collection of motion pictures.

Robertson-Cole only recently announced that it had purchased the rights to Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" as the first big subject to be handled in America this fall. It is that company's only organized domestic department. The New York State transaction followed close upon this statement.

The First National Exhibitors' Exchange, of New York, considers the "Cannibal" lobby still strong, and the decision of the Robertson-Cole Company to release the film, will be for one more week.

Chaplin Film Holds Over at the New York Strand

Charlie Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms" has swept New York with a typical success, and the First National, with a special title, immediately preceding the main title of the production, Harold Ebel, manager of the Strand, while cruising through the Solomon and New Hebrides Islands, "Cannibals of the South Seas" is one of the unique achievements of the screen world. The Johnsons took all sorts of chances to photograph the natives, risking their lives time and again among the savages, particularly the Big Numbers tribe. Altogether, they exposed 50,000 feet of film, and while it is an interesting and picturesquely absorbing, they have selected nine thousand feet of the film to work with, which makes it of entertain value. The Robertson-Cole Company will release the feature in two parts of approximately four thousand and five hundred feet each.

Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms" is a comedy, and should be most entertaining to all classes of audiences. The Strand, which is being used as a special cinema, is already filled with people of all ages, and the response to this latest release from the famous silent comedian is a testimonial to the popularity of his work.

Install Powers in Big Y Hut

The largest Y. M. C. A. hut in the world is that at Hoboken, N. J., at Fourth and River streets. This hut exceeds the enormous Eagle of London, England. In it are installed two Power's Cameragraph machines.
Nichols Buys British Rights to "Kaiser’s Finish"

THE English rights to "The Kaiser’s Finish," the eight-part special state rights production made by S. L. Warne, have been sold to Venito Nichols of London, one of the most prominent foreign film operators, for a price said to be almost the equivalent of that which he paid for the same territorial rights to "My Four Years in Germany."

The territory for which Mr. Nichols has obtained foreign rights to "The Kaiser’s Finish" includes England, Wales, Ireland and Scotland.

By purchasing foreign rights to "My Four Years in Germany," Mr. Nichols accepted a financial arrangement which exceeded the sales price on any other special production he had ever obtained, according to A. Warner, who conducted the negotiations in behalf of both the Gerard picture and "The Kaiser’s Finish."

"That this price is closely approached by the sum just paid to us for "The Kaiser’s Finish" is a remarkable tribute to the value of this state rights feature," declared Mr. Nichols. "Mr. Nichols said that the public demand in Great Britain for war stories with a pronounced military strength is as strong as it has been. The market has grown in size until the British theatre-owners are finding it nearly impossible to secure of that type to satisfy their audiences. Conventional dramas are still popular, but they are not selling on the same block with a war picture."

Tourneur’s "Woman" on This Week at the Rivoli

For the second time within a few weeks Maurice Tourneur has had one of his productions made the feature attraction at the Rivoli Theatre. This is not surprising, for a number of reasons "Woman" is attracting more than average interest. It is said to mark a step in the development of an artist and the creator of "Sporting Life," "The Blue Bird," "Prunella," and other productions which disregard the usual scenario form to a degree in its climaxes, presenting Mr. Tourneur’s newest views upon the development of a screen story.

Yet "Woman" should not be considered as typical of Mr. Tourneur’s work. The producer is now at work upon a detective melodrama, "My Lady’s Garter," and in rapid succession during the past year, he has introduced to the screen upon fancy, symbolic whimsy, sex analysis, the code of morals and other phases of reality and imagination. With each production Mr. Tourneur has endeavored to delve into a new field of thought. He believes in the artist as an inventor. Mr. Tourneur, too, does not believe strongly in a player’s previous knowledge of screen technique. "Woman" is at least unusual in that it presents a cast of faces new to the screen, the principal players being Monta Bell, Gloria Goodwin, Diana Allen, Ethel Mall, Lyon Donaldson, Rose Rolanda and others essentially new to films.

"My Lady’s Garter," which Mr. Tourneur is now making, is adapted from the late Edward Geinings novel and has as its cast Sylvia Bremer, Wyndham Standish, H. E. Herbert, Paul Clergue, Charles Craig, Warner Richmond and Warren Cook.

Upon the completion of "My Lady’s Garter," Columbia will take his to W. Lee studios and take his company to California for the winter months. The distribution of "Woman," as well as "My Lady’s Garter" and forthcoming productions, is in the hands of Hiller & Wilk, Inc.

Edith Cavell Picture Now Showing at Strand

THE Strand Theatre, New York, one of the leading Broadway motion picture theatres, is this week presenting "The Woman, the German’s Shot," the Plunkett & Carroll production dealing with the story of the martyred British Red Cross nurse, and the producers announce that pending the conclusion of this picture showing no statement will be made regarding distribution arrangements.

The fact that Julia Arthur, the distinguished legitimate star, makes her first appearance in this production is quite a sales point, according to the mass of exhibitors. Miss Arthur has been known for some time as the greatest actresses on the stage, and her fame is just as widespread in outlying districts as in the larger cities, due to the fact that she has made many tours throughout the country.

This story also, which is based on the work of the most probable the most dramatic incident of the war, the shooting of the British Red Cross nurse, Edith Cavell, interest is spread all over the world, and it is doubtful if there is any story of the present war so familiar to all Americans as this one, and, as the name of Edith Cavell has been a household word for three years since the execution, the demand to see the heroine on the screen is said to be unprecedented.

State Rights Sales Reported This Week

J. W. BURKE has secured for his company the Midwest Greater Features Company, 1520 California Street, Denver, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and Nevada rights to "Arlette" and announces that this production will be exploited on an elaborate scale.

Arrow Film Corporation announces the following sales of territory: "The Woman’s Law" and "Huna Within Our Gates" to Major Film Company, Oklahoma City; California, Nevada and Arizona to Peerless Film Company, San Francisco.

The Arthur S. Hyman Attractions of Detroit, have purchased from Arrow Film Corporation, the Michigan Rights to the revised six-reel edition of the "Million Dollar Mystery" and the reissue of "My Husband’s Friend."
EXHIBITORS TO RAISE ADMISSION RATES
Increasing Expenses and Taxes Compel Philadelphia Managers to Ask Slight Advance in Prices
By F. V. Armatto, 144 North Salina Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

A CONCERTED action by a large majority of the leading motion picture theatre owners of Philadelphia will be made to secure a little higher rate of admission fees, to meet the heavy increase of expenses since the beginning of the war. This seems justified, as the prospects of still further obligations on the part of managers and manufacturers, due to the war taxes about to be imposed on films and on admission tickets as well as other taxes which are to be saddled on the picture houses, would induce undue hardships from which very few men in the industry would be able to recover. It is expected that the patrons of the silent drama can scarcely complain at this time of a slight advance in prices when they realize the high expense up to which the theatres are put while taking into consideration that the quality of the entertainments now provided is far superior to what it was a few years ago. The motion picture industry has progressed considerably during the last five years and the public has been scarcely any greater than in those days.

Tichner Succumbs to Pneumonia. "Bert" Tichner, for many years associated and identified as an important factor in the success of the Stanley Company, has been taken ill with pneumonia. Tichner will be long remembered for his genial personality and his wonderful knowledge of the industry, generally known as the "encyclopedia" of the above company. He was also a close personal friend of those who cared for the business and also one of Frank W. Buhler's close advisers.

Red-decorates Theatre During Ban Period. Albert E. Brown, a progressive exhibitor of West Philadelphia, reports that he has taken advantage of the closing ban by redecorating the entire interior of his theatre, the Overbrook, which has taken the entire three weeks to complete.

Katz Enlists in the Engineering Corps. William Katz, formerly manager of the Stanley Theatre, has enlisted in the United States engineering corps after having been repeatedly rejected on several previous occasions on account of his height. He is exquisitely happy over his present prospects of being accepted, and is looking forward to the time when he will be able to join his brothers in arms in France.

Film Men Exceed Loan Quota. Accumulated Liberty Loan subscriptions were turned in on Saturday, October 19, in such volume as to virtually swamp the clearing house organization of the Third Federal Reserve Bank of Indianapolis. E. Pusey Pessom announced that sufficient subscriptions had been totaled to exceed the quota of $252,188,800 by more than half a million dollars. Despite the fact that all the motion picture theatres were closed, Frank W. Buhler, chairman of the Motion Picture Liberty Loan Committee, reported an excess of over $180,000 over the quota allotted for the motion picture men. Exchanges and theatres in this district are credited with having secured over $250,000 worth of subscriptions. Those on the Motion Picture Committee were Jules E. Mastbaum, John McQuirk, lead, Bill Tichner, Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, Columbus E. Stamper, Abe Sablosky, D. Weitsof and "Bert" Tichner.

Wilkinson News Letter

By D. M. Bain, Wilkinson, U. C.

WASHINGTON CITY bookers obtained five charters in Richmond, Va., recently, to engage in motion picture business in the state of Virginia, the principal office of all the different corporations being given as Alexandria, Va., and it is understood that the theatres will be operated by Orange Cockade City, Covington, Emporia, Stauton, Va. In each of the five corporations R. W. Fryer is named as president and Winfield A. Wilson as secretary, both being from Washington, D. C.

The corporation is capitalized at $55,946 and will construct its own new theatre. Work to start immediately as the same being the case with Stauton, where the corporation is capitalized at $26,800. In the other cities the paid-in capital is estimated as $3,600 each, and it is presumed that in these cities the intention is to take over theatres already in operation.

All of the five towns are comparatively small, and it is understood that should the experiment of conducting theatre circuits in small towns prove profitable, the circuits will be expanded to embrace ten or twelve other smaller Virginia towns. There may be, however, if any, circuits in small towns throughout the country, the theatrical magnates usually going after the bigger cities when the extension bee gets in their honeys, and Mesara, Fryer and Wilson are pioneers in their experiment, at least in the South.

General Charter for Unusual Powers.

A charter was granted in Raleigh, N. C., recently by the Secretary of State to the Business Men's Real Estate and Investment Company of Winston-Salem, a negro concern, the charter naming as the unusual combination of powers that the company be allowed to manufacture coffins and conduct moving picture theatres. The corporation has an authorized capital of $100,000, paid in capital being subscribed by J. S. Potz and others.

Allen in France with the Tank Corps.

"Vitagraph Bill" Allen is in France now with the Tank Corps, but he is just the same Bill as he used to be when he was in these parts. One of the greatest joys of Bill's life was his trusty friend, "Fanny" as he called his diver. Now Bill writes that he is having the time of his life driving a tank. In a graphic letter he tells of "a little skirmish" and, among other things, says in his characteristic style that the machine "behaved splendidly" during the scrap.

PICK LEADER FOR CIRCLE'S ORCHESTRA

Ernesto Natiello Selected as Musical Conductor for Big Indianapolis Theatre—Succeeds Max Weil

By Indiana Trade News Service, 69 Layman Avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.

ERNESTO NATIELLO, widely known orchestra conductor, has been selected as leader of the orchestra at Indianapolis, Ind., to succeed Max Weil, who left recently for Los Angeles, Cal., to accept the leadership of the orchestra in the new Grauman Theatre there.

Signor Natiello was born in Italy, but soon came to America, where he studied in the schools and musical conservatories in New York, and when he became of age he returned to his native land to complete his studies at the Milan conservatory. Later, after his graduation he became basemaster of a Royal Italian military band. With his orchestra he toured the United States, and later formed a military band which toured the principal cities.

Music has been one of the striking and noteworthy features at the Circle since the theatre was opened, and the orchestra has come to be recognized as one of the best musical organizations in Indiana. A new and ambitious program at the Circle has been the musical interpretation of the picture, and it is in this new and daring field that Signor Natiello is a master. For several years he has devoted his time exclusively to the interpretation of pictures, and for several seasons has been on the staff of one of the largest producing companies, setting up and arranging musical scores for the big feature productions.

Ormsby to Manage Lincoln Theatre.

William Ormsby, formerly manager of the Jefferson Theatre in Elkhart, Ind., arrived in Goshen this week from Dallas, Texas, on his way to Owosso, Mich., to take the management of the Lincoln Theatre in that city. He spent several days calling on his old Gosen and Elkhart friends.
BIG THEATRE DEAL EFFECTED IN IOWA

Combs and Adams Buy Picture Houses in Charlton, Knoxville, Leon, Moulton, Clarinda and Creston

By J. L. Shipley, 615 Locust Street, Des Moines, Iowa.

ONE of the biggest deals in Iowa picture circles in the history of the business has been consummated by Combs and Adams of Charleston. Not only have they taken over the Lincoln at that point in addition to the Iris, formerly controlled by Combs, but they have also added the Olympic and Star at Knoxville, the Abe Lincoln and the New at Leon, the Com- mondore, also called the Leader, at Clarinda and the Temple-Grande at Creston to their string. Mr. Adams is a speculator in the theatre business who believes in the picture business in the smaller towns. Mr. Combs is one of Iowa's most progressive managers. The new combination are overhauling their houses and getting ready for renewed activity as soon as the lid is lifted.

Ulsta News Letter.

By Clifford A. Carroll, Ulsta Observer.

AFTER having been closed for more than a year, the Ulsta Theatre has been started in Ulsta. The Temple Theatre was the first to open, and on the following Sunday Ben Young opened the Ulsta Opera House and Big Ben Theatre. There are thousands of war workers in Ulsta whose only chance for recreation comes on Sunday, and these persons demand some sort of amusement on that day. Sunday shows were suspended in Ulsta following a vigorous protest by residents that day.

Ulsta Wants Sunday Shows.

Ulsta, too, is making a move for Sunday shows. A representative of the United States health evasion office conferred with leaders of the various unions here with a view to having the theatres open. It was formerly the home of the Savage Arms Corporation, the home of the famous Lewis machine gun. Coming again here, and continually coming here, are demanding some sort of entertainment on the United States health evasion office.

Asks for Details as to Next Winter's Coal Supply

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Winem Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

EPIDEMIC or no epidemic, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario has put the coal question in order to be safe with the Dominion Government about next season. A questionnaire has been sent out by Secretary Thomas Scott, of Toronto, to the four hundred exhibitors of the province asking what their percentage of anthracite coal during the coming winter must be eliminated if possible; that no theatre should be heated to more than 70 degrees; that all heating equipment should be examined and tested for maximum efficiency; and that the general efficiency, increased by the adoption and use of the Canadian National Features, at the beginning of the winter, be maintained and increased as work progresses. FRANKEL PURCHASES THE ALHAMBRA

Dieckman, Gruber and Weigel Sell Popular Cincinnati Theatre—Deal Said to Involve $150,000

By Kenneth C. Crain, 367 First

One of the most interesting deals which has taken place in Cincinnati moving picture circles in some time occurred recently when the complete transfer of ownership of the Alhambra, for some years a highly successful West End Theatre, was completed under the management of Charles Weigel. The lease on the property has twelve years to run, and the building, with its fine equipment, was involved in the deal, which, it is understood, involved a total consideration of about $100,000. The house was purchased by I. Frankel and allied interests of Cincinnati from Dieckman, R. W. Gruber and Charles Weigel, making another important addition to the already substantial moving picture interests of Mr. Frankel. Just who will have personal management of the theatre has not been announced, nor is it known what the plans of Mr. Weigel and others formerly interested in the house are. It is fairly certain, however, that Weigel himself will continue in his success as a manager, will be found actively engaged in that line, whether with the Alhambra property or other business interests.

Influenza Hits Saeger Company Hard.

The Saeger Amusement Company has suffered greatly by reason of the ravages of Spanish influenza, and some of the companies of the organization have been especially pitiful, not because of any lack of spirit on the part of the afflicted employees, but because of the dire necessity to afford victims of the disease every comfort and attention, but because of the lack of facilities of the company to provide accommodation to their needs. D. L. Cornelius, former managing director of the Strand Theatre, died of the disease just as the time solicitous friends were being assured that he was practically out of danger. He had recently joined the company, he had been rendering his best services in the Saenger organization. His home was at Pepin Gap, Texas, and his family believed he would recover, and took it for granted he would live to return to a former home for burial. Managing Director C. V. Richards, Jr., of the Saeger Amusement Company, has experienced an especially grievous passion with the disease. After a very close illness, Mr. Richards was able to leave his hospital to broadcast the report of his recovery, but his friends were informed that Mr. Richards was the inevitable result, and for days his life hung in the balance. He immediately returns to the hospital from which he has been removed, and Mr. Richards has been seriously ill with the disease, and Miss Kate Collins, former secretary to Managing Director Richards, is at the Naval Hospital at Algiers with a pronounced case of the malady. Leon Grandjean, publicity director of the Strand, has also been sick.

Manager of World Exchange Seriously Ill.

Mrs. Ada H. Ricker, wife of the Manager of the World Exchange, is dangerously ill. Mrs. Ricker was at San Francisco when she was seized with a severe case of influenza. Ernst Boehringer, the moving spirit in the projection and building of the magnificently equipped Liberty Theatre, has resigned as manager of the institution, and an endeavor is being made to fill his place among the most prominent of the directors of the Boehringer Amusement Company, which operates the theatre.

INFLUENZA DEFERS COLISEUM’S OPENING

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

The Colliseum Theatre, the latest of San Francisco’s great new palaces, is ready for opening, but this occasion has been postponed on account of the epidemic of influenza. This new house is located at Ninth avenue and Clement street, in an attractive part of the city. It was built especially as a home for the famous Moscone Amusement Company and added its residence district theatres for which this city is famous. It represents an investment of a quarter of a million dollars, and embodies the latest ideas in theatre construction. It is planned before the entry of this country into the war and work was not undertaken until Government authorities had been given of the essential character of the moving picture industry. The furnishings and decorations of the entire house are of the finest grade. The theatre, with its seating capacity of 2,200, surpasses many of the downtown houses, and the owner, is one of the pioneers in the moving picture business in this city, and the Colliseum Theatre represents the work of George Mann, already in the house of his brother, Al Levin, Paramount and Artistic pictures. In connection with the change the Rialto Theatre Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $100,000 by Louis R. Lurie, Charles E. Smith, and Mr. Mann, and will open an office in the Mills Building, planning to continue in the moving picture business.

Change to Be Made in Rialto Management.

George Mann, district manager for the Fox Film Corporation, has tendered his resignation, and interest in the company has been taken in the Rialto Theatre by Howard J. Sheehan, Louis Lurie has also tendered his resignation, and Mr. Mann and will open an office in the Mills Building, planning to continue in the moving picture business.

PREPARING FOR REOPENING OF HOUSES

Universal’s Minneapolis Exchange Rearranges Advertising Department and Takes Inventory of Business

By William Edward Mulligan, Minneapolis Journal, Minneapolis, Minn.

DURING the idle period occasioned by the closing of most of the theatres of the Northwest on account of the influenza epidemic, L. L. Coen, of the Minneapolis Universal Exchange, has had his poster and advertising department make a complete inventory of the business. The supplies and old subjects in sufficient number to meet their demands, for a call of orders which has been ordered by the exchange, and when business is resumed again the exchange will be able to do business better, with everything they may need than previously. During the dull spell several special effects showing the forthcoming releases for the benefit of visiting exhibitors. Other exchange managers are taking similar steps to get their offices in the best of working order in anticipation of a rush of business when the influenza situation has been lifted. They are urging country exhibitors to come to the city while the theatre facilities are at hand. There are businesses that have their winter booking, see new forthcoming releases and thereby save themselves time and trouble. It is true that the business is not booming again. It is anticipated that when theatres are reopened business will be better, but with the regular theatre patrons, denied their usual entertainment, will eagerly flock to the show houses under the banner of ‘Fire Filmed.’

Universal has obtained the first moving picture scenes of the great forest fires in northern Minnesota. Charles Bell, Universal representative here, was on the scene at Cloquet on the day the flames that have laid bare vast stretches of northern Minnesota, reached and destroyed the city. Mr. Bell secured several hundred feet of exceptional negatives, and the best scenes are to be inserted in Universal Current Events.

“America’s Answer” Postponed.

In response to many inquiries regarding “America’s Answer,” the exchange plan to have been shown at the Auditorium, the Civic and Commerce Association made an announcement, through their medium, that this picture had been abandoned along with all others in Minneapolis in which the Orange Loan and the health department. Many inquiries reached the association from persons who thought this picture would be shown because it was a Government film.

Donnellan Gets Chicago Post.

Dan Donnellan, manager of the Minneapolis Mutual exchange, has been transferred to the management of the Chicago office of Mutual as a reward for his conscientious service in the territory. He succeeds E. H. Duffy, who died recently of typhoid fever. Ira F. Manzke, who has been the Minneapolis Mutual exchange a year ago, has been appointed to take the vacancy left by Mr. Donnellan. He has been manager of the Minneapolis Mutual office. He is reported to be a winner in Minneapolis movement circles, having started with General in this city in 1910, and has been connected with Mutual three years ago.

He was transferred to the intelligence branch, serving both in this capacity and the United States Government, has had some very interesting experiences. Desiring to get into the active end of the game, he was recently transferred to another transfer. Later, he was sent to the Army Students’ Training Camp, from which he is expected to graduate, and will be assigned to the school as an instructor.

FLENABY A FIRST LIEUTENANT.

Washington exchange men were this last week pleased to greet Harry E. Flenabty, formerly a salesman for the World Film Corporation here, who comes to announce to him that he is wearing the silver bar of a first lieutenant, which, by the way, he secured for himself won for himself by his work in Texas.

Lieutenant Flenabty came to the Washington office of the World Film Corporation in New York in September, 1916. In March, 1917, when the company took over the Southern offices of Tandy & Lynch and established their own branches, he went to Texas to work under Tom Parker, manager of the Dallas office.

On August 8, 1917, he went over to San Antonio on business for the company. He finished his business, and returning from the 141st Infantry, described the life apparently agrees with him, for he soon became a sergeant, and later was recommended by his commanding officer, for an appointment, which he secured last June.

He was recently ordered to report to the headquarters of the Fifth Army Corps, at Washington, and came East, arriving at the end of his journey a promotion, that is, to first lieutenant.

Business Good in Oregon City.

CHARLES SCHRAMM, of Oregon City, a pioneer exhibitor, who was in town recently, says that since the strike in the paper mills located in his city has been settled, business has improved. There is no fear of influenza there and pneumonia. The air is still quite damp and the air filled with sulphur fumes from the mills may help to keep the place clean.

Theatre Shutdown Affecting Other Lines.

J. H. MacDougal, of the Rex Theatre, Eugene, visited Portland while his house is closed. He states that the merchants have asked him to do everything which the theatre means to them. Heretofore, Saturday saw a great influx of folk from the surrounding country, and the merchants profited by it. With the theatres closed they do not come in.

Theatre Houses are still very noticeable in the larger cities. The grills, the candy stores and restaurants are suffering from the drop of business. Some theatre people say that they learn how much they are indebted to the amusement enterprises. In suburban localities, such as Eugene and Portland, ice cream parlors are empty. It may bring about a better co-operation. In the meantime, a great number of theatre managers are having a needed vacation.
Detroit News Letter
By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

PAUL C. MOONEY, central division manager for Fox, was in Detroit on Monday, having been transferred from Los Angeles to that city, where he will be special representative of Los Angeles, San Francisco and Portland territories. He is succeeded at Detroit by Mr. Sheehan, brother of Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the latter city, who has leased his home furnished in Cleveland, and has taken his whole family to the city.

Famous to Abolish C. O. D. Shipments
The Detroit branch of the Famous Players-Lasky Company is preparing to issue a circular to exhibitors in this territory which will completely rule out C. O. D. shipments, with the way, is a minister. When Bob was a young man his parents wanted him to join the ministry, but he was so "burned up with religion," Bob decided to sell type-writers for Dick Gradwell, of the Oliver Typewriter Company, and when Mr. Gradwell went into the film business Bob followed suit.

New Theatre Openings in Michigan
Two of the finest theatres in Michigan which have been in course of construction for a year are scheduled to open on November 21. Detroit Brevities

Nat Lefkowitz, recently with Select as salesman, and formerly with Pathe and Palace, has been sold to the sales organization of the Fox Exchange.

Lieutenant G. F. Jefferson, recently transferred from Chicago, was a Detroit visitor October 12. He was formerly publicity man at the Detroit office of Pathe. The Sons’s Naval Band of 300 pieces stopped off in Detroit on October 15, and in the afternoon were guests at the Majestic Theatre.

Theatres Salesmen Still on the Road
The Pathe exchange in Kansas City is keeping its travelers on the road in spite of conditions of closed houses. Manager J. E. Storey reports the plan as working out very well and the travelers still writing business. "The theatres won’t stay closed right way Exchange, Kansas City, till we’re forever," said Mr. Storey, "and then I have to service." The Pathe, Paramount-Artists, Pathe, Pathe, and Fox are the only exchanges to retain their complete force in this city.

Dodge City, Kan.—E. S. Drake has resumed business and is now in the pocket under the new policy of feature productions.

Watson Bend, Kan.—W. S. Nelson, of the Elite Theatre, is redecorating his theatre during the influenza epidemic and will reopen about November 1.
"THE DARE DEVIL"

Mutual Star Production Presents Gail Kane in Story of German Intrigue.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A RATHER improbable story serves as a basis for the five-part Gail Kane production, "The Dare Devil," which the Mutual Film Corporation released October 13. But improbable as it is it might have made better entertainment if the director and the writers had not stumbled in subject with more care. Gail Kane has done better work when better opportunities have been accorded her. In this case, including Corinne Uzelli, Mildred Marsh, Henry Sedley, Roy Applelegate, Duncan McFay, Walter Bowers, and Norman Trevor acquitted itself well.

The picture opens with scenes on the battlefield of France, where Captain Car ruthers meets with injuries which cause his death. His daughter Roberta comes to a meeting, who is expecting a nephew and not a niece. Realizing that the country is in need of a hero, she dons male attire and applies for the position of translator and interpreter with the Government. At first the authorities refuse to allow her to play a double role, that of the niece who really existed and who was expected. The Governor falls in love with Miss Carruthers, and when, as Bob, the nephew of Robert Carruthers, she rounded up a couple of German spies and has fulfilled what she believes to have been his mission, he promises to give her the hand she consents to become the wife of the Governor.

It was intended to be the strong point of the story has not been brought out forcibly enough, that is, the desire of the American's part in the cause of democracy.

"WOMAN'S WEAPONS"

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

Two cute youngsters and many quickly recognized scenes from married life furnish the features of "Woman's Weapons," a Paramount picture starring Ethel Clayton. It was written by Deuel Marie Pick, and contains an important truth regarding husbands which most wives learn early in their married life: A man who does a plodding background against his wife's, if the vampire lady is a poor cook and friend wife knows how to appeal to his husband's cupidity.

The story is not at all tragic in spite of the fact that Nicholas Elliot, an author married man, neglects his wife for another woman and lies like a cad when he thinks he is going to be found out. Not being of the weak sort, Mrs. Nicholas wastes no time in tears or in making scenes. She just puts her wits to work and fights the soul mate for her husband's love, and defeats her.

The Ellots are wealthy, until Nicholas starts gambling in stocks and goes broke. The family then move to a modest cottage on the seashore, and learn to wait for themselves. Mrs. Nick had twice little fortune of her own, but a foolish uncle invests it badly for her, and she is unable to help her husband. Knowing that Nicholas has a habit of drinking, she decides to help him with a new story, the wife invites her rival to spend the summer with them. The latter accepts, and the secret comes out, the home-wrecker accepts, and Mrs. Nick gets rid of the one servant, pretends to him that her husband, Chauncey, is in a new position, that of a rich man, and that she wants her to become his wife.

The wicked woman is sent about her business. Nicholas acknowledges who he's been a fool, and winebélays an envelope when he learns that the bad investment of her own money.

There are no big scenes in the picture, and there is a dearth of quite commonplace incident. But there are also amusing bits by the two small Ellots, and the atmosphere of the story is appealing to the gentler sex. Robert G. Vignola has directed it with excellent artistic results, and the acting of Claire Windsor as the plank's favorite Ethel Clayton as Anne Elliot presents a type of graceful, true-hearted, old-fashioned innocent selection for the husband. The two children are cleverly played by Dorothy Rosher and Pat Moran, and Vera Doria is Esmee Hale, the soul mate.

"THE SHE-DEVIL"

William Fox Presents Theda Bara in Story of an Improper Spanish.

 Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

R. FOX, Miss Bara, Director J. Gordon Edwards, the who casts to a Theda Bara following, and the "fans" who simply dote upon the Spanish beauty, will all have good cause for great satisfaction in presentations of "The She-Devil!" for Miss Bara gets representation in the genuine six-reel "The She-Devil Super Feature." It naturally follows that those who admire Miss Bara's efforts will be delighted in seeing as much of her as possible in the characters she creates. The director of the character of a serial presentation in the shifting scenes, phenomenal escapes, sensational "chases," and ultimate conclusion at the point originally decided upon. There is no special reason for the feature to stop at six reels, for Miss Bara can be expected to continue with more escapes, more shifting locations and more evidences of Miss Bara's abilities, by grace of direction, to create excitement, overcome obstacles and keep on "vamping" ad lib.

Miss Bara is pictured as an improper lady, with the trimmings of a small Spanish village, which is discovered to be the source of the means of support. The Parisian artist who declines to marry after she has served him a portion of her most delicious pastry seems to have been the only man who had not "fallen" for her cooking. There is a mountain brigand who has read in the papers or had heard it gossiped about her. That Loffe (the character played by Miss Bara) was notorious, but not particularly desirable.

The Paris, the bandit, Paris and its salubrious environments, are the principal factors in the film's construction entitled "The She-Devil!" Miss Bara provides the means to a six-reel end, which is cleverly seen to be, "dame," "vamp," smoke clap, and a woman in an number of different gowns.

The story follows the stage-robbery figure largely in the situation, and through Loffe is never shown in the act of rape, but she never lacks the cash to negotiate everything of the heart of a vampire might crave.

For those who admire Theda Bara and her productions, "The She-Devil!" will deliver the goods. Make no mistake about that.

"Three X Gordon!" starts along the familiar track, and introduces the spectator to the rich young man who drinks and raises the duce generally with a crowd of young chaps of his own set until his father becomes angry and sets him a drift. In this case the hero's name is Harold Chester Winthrop Gordon, and his best girl is Dorrie Webster. Harold accepts the situation, bids Dorrie farewell, joins forces with his chum, and starts to walk in the direction of the setting sun.

"THE WOMAN"

Notable Production Tournour from Whitmack's Tribute to Modern Womanhood.

Reviewed by Louis Reese Harris.

REMARKABLE production is the key to the success of the motion picture production. "The Woman," is so entrancing to the mind's eye that it leaps into the midst of the subject's spector that it leaves him in a state of dreamy forgetfulness. The story is a little cozen, and the hero is being held. It can thus do without dramatic suspense, but that value is present, along with logical and illuminating construction, and, above all things, an atmosphere so convincing that events seem to take place instead of being presented in illustration of the final purpose. It thus becomes one of the finest products of the season.

There seems to be a cynical tendency at the beginning, wrongly called a "prologue," and the story starts with a line of action. A husband finds his young wife amusing because she is a woman, as though he were being stroked by a woman whom he likes and he is so uncertain about her mental and moral make-up that he consults an encyclopaedia of womanhood and finds she is an uncomely wearing. He finds her giving, and poor, dear Adam, innocent of any wrong intention, just as he is, according to Kipling. This story of Eve is beautifully pictured by Tournour and the lady herself, beautifully impersonating a mis-chievous Medea. Whether Adam fell!

The cynical modern husband puts the whole thing in perspective in history for more tempests, skipping such ladies as Mary, Rachel, Joan and others of this class, yet making investigations to those who caused the downfall of more innocent and unsuspecting women. The story of Eve, the infamous third wife of poor old Emperor Claudius, and the magnificence with which she is being portrayed in this Roman decadent is pictured in startlingly beautiful and sensuous. Although its appeal is independent of the emotional psychology of pictures, its story of history, of hate and revenge, of lust and murder, a moving pattern only, it is so rich, so exact, so subtle, so deep, and so keeping, that the effect is as deep as that of pure drama.

The other episodes follow, the historical one of Heloise and Abelard, Diana Allen the temptress, an imaginative picture of Cyrene and the young British fisher-

COMMENTS

General Film Company

THE ROSE OF WOLFWILLEY (Broadway Star Feature).—This is probably the best one of the two-reel Wolfville stories issued so far. There is a great deal of action and a lot of good riding. Patricia Palmer is splendidly cast in the title role.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

WOMEN'S WEAPONS (Paramount).—Excellent action picture in a five-part picture, which shows how a wife wins back her husband from a soul mate. In the role of Mrs. Crane's friend, Miss G. Vignola directed it. Elliott Dexter is a member of the cast. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

B. F. VOLNEY—A comedy, verging on farce at times, of a story of a half-starved little actress who leaves the village bank from being robbed, with Enid Bennett in the leading role, Ine supervision. Reviewed in last week's issue.

Her FIRST MISTAKE (Paramount).—A Bennett farce out of the ordinary in its remarkable revelations of character. Its dialogue is humorous, with some come expert comedians, though unconscious ones, in one of the brightest of Seneca's productions. A comedy. A one big laugh. Reviewed in last week's issue.

Fox Film Corporation

THE SPIDERDEVIL (Fox).—Announced as a "Theda Bara Super-Feture," this newest of the vampire's exploits is all that. Miss Bara is in evidence practically all of the time, enacting a role written expressly to exploit her screen personality to the fullest extent. Exhibitors who have a large following for Miss Bara may safely promise an entirely satisfying display of her peculiar gifts. There will be no Theda Bara; there will be "Devil."—FRANK K. REYNOLDS.

Greater Vitagraph Co.

THE BLADE OF HATE (Vitagraph).—Chapter three of the serial "The Iron Test," in which Antonio Moreno and Carol Hawley are the escaped from death of the two circus performers when the van goes over the side of the road into the river. The heroine is the overhangling limb of a tree. Back at work the ring once more, their mysterious enemy, the Red Mask, again tries to kill them, but this time in a most unusual manner that their trapeze rope will be cut through during their performance. Only the skill and strength of Berti saves them both.

BEARS AND BAD MEN (Vitagraph).—Lawrence Seaman is the author, producer and leading actor in this one part knockabout face. A comic feud in old Kentucky, a revengeful bear and an utter disregard of life, limbs and physical beauty on the part of the entire cast, supply the picture with plenty of rough-and-tumble humor.

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation

THREE X GORDON (Jessie D. Hampton).—In this five-part picture, written by Kenneth B. Clarke and released on the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, the story tells how a number of young blondes were captured by the liquor habit. It is well produced and acted.

Mutual Film Corporation

SCREEN TELEGRAM No. 67 (Mutual).—In "Charley," Charles Schwab is seen launching two merchant ships; Richard B. Trumbl is seen organizing the New York Shipbuilding Corporation.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE RIDE TO DEATH (Pathé).—Episode No. 4 of "Wolves of Kultur." Hartman's death occurs in this number, as he flies a dash over a cliff in an automobile. The feat is far from new, but well handled. Barcley's disguise and meeting with Death are a strong feature; also Bob's unavailing effort to settle scores with Zaremba. The serial grows in interest as it proceeds.

A STRANGER FROM THE SEA (Pathe).—In "The Brigade of Honor," the story opens with the rescue of Echo by Two-Gun Carter from the falling weight. In the course of various exciting events her father is shot by Sam Killman and dies before he has revealed the identity of the Phantom Rider. A stranger is cast up by the sea, having been thrown overboard by a ship's ressort, who says he brings a message from the Inca Indians of Peru for Echo. The messenger receives a message from the Inca, and the ship is cast up.

NAVAL AIR POWER (Pathé).—No. 9 of the "Adventures of Captain" series. This goes into the matter of instructing young aviators and is quite the best of the kind so far shown. It pictures Britain's young aviators practicing in building engines, studying angles of flight and making flights over cities and in the clouds. From the standpoint this could not be improved upon.

THE UNCONQUERABLE SPIRIT (Pathé).—Episode No. 18 of the Official War Review. This number deals with the story of the Allied troops in this present war, and does much to explain why Germany was unable to win from the genius of these fighting heroes and the number closes with views of General Pershing decorating American heroes.

Battling Jane (Artefact).
When Do We Eat? (Paramount).
Jane Doss (Republic).
The Kaiser's Finish (Warner).
The Craying (Hoffman).
The Romance of Tarzan (First National).

Advertising Angles: Pick up your advertising where you left off at "Tarzan of the Apes." Give special emphasis to the fact that this is a sequel to the other production and a reworking of the first film. It might even pay, if you have three-day runs, to rebook Tarzan for a day or two before showing the sequel and advertise for the pair. This should be done where you did not originally play "Tarzan of the Apes." If you do not rebook, advertise that those who did not see the first production will have no difficulty following the story, from the synopsis. Add that by itself "The Romance of Tarzan" is a complete play, and not merely a connecting link. Re-releasing Hammer these facts in, and you should sell to capacity.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, one three-sheet, one six-sheet, one twenty-four-sheet. BATTLING JANE

The Artefact Film Company Presents Dorothy Gish, Star of "Hearts of the World," in a Unique Story of a Woman from Nowhere Who Put a Maui Town on the Map.

Cast.
Jane ............ Dorothy Gish
Dr. Sheldon ............ Thomas Jefferson
Mrs. Sheldon ............ Colleen Gray
May Hall ......... Katherine MacDonald
Pollyett's Daughter ......... Bertha Grasley
The Crook .......... Adolphe Lestina
Chairman ............ Kate Toncray

Directed by Elmer Clifton.

The Story: Jane dawns upon a Maui village on a decrepit old bicycle. She comes from Nowhere, and is bound for a destination that chance makes her the guardian of the child of Doctor Sheldon. Jane goes to work as waitress in the village's one hotel, and she brings the kid up with a care that makes it the winner in a contest shown to her for the prize of winning, and returns to claim the prize, but Jane makes good her title and claim.

Feature Dorothy Gish as Jane and George Nichols as Dr. Sheldon.

Entire Story and the Artistic Blend in Sensational Photoplay.

Advertising Angles: Boom Miss Gish as one of the Griffith stars, and connect her with her clever work in "Hearts of the World." For the story angle give the plot in brief. You might hook up the baby show with a slide baby show along the old lines. You can also hook up with a thrift stamp drive, since this furnishes one of the chief angles of the play.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, one three-sheet, one six-sheet. Photos, eight 8x10, black-and-white, one 11x14 sepia, one 22x22 sepia, and 8x10 color photo of star. "OUR BOYS IN FRANCE TOBACCO FUND"

GENTLEMEN: I want to do my part to help the American soldier who is so very much in need. If tobacco will do it, I'm for tobacco. (Check below how you desire to contribute.)

I enclose $1.00. I will adopt a soldier and send you $1.00 each month to pay for "smokes" for the duration of the war.

I send you herewith:

...in my contribution towards the purchase of tobacco for American soldiers. This does not affect me to contribute more.

to join the German propagandists, but keeps in touch with the U. S. Secret Service, and finally avails himself of his startling resemblance to the Crown Prince to penetrate to the All-Highest and blow the high command into eternity.

Feature Earl Schenck in the dual role of Roert Hune and the Crown Prince, and Claire Whitney as Emily Buseh.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Paying the Master Fled Back In His Own Depreciable Coin.

Kaiser and Crown Prince finished off by Vengeful American Relative.

Exciting Sequence of Vengeful Events

That Crushes the Hun.

Sensational Feature: Exposing the Working of Hun Propaganda.

Death to the Kaiser and Crown Prince by One of Our Own Kind.

Hun Plans and Propaganda Laid Bare in Sensational Photoplay.

Advertising Angles: The title will suggest many advertising stunts, such as a hanged effigy, or one submitted to more ingenious torments. With red lamps, salmon colored chiffon and an electric fan be can be consigned to the flames. A good stunt would be to invite suggestions as to the preferred finish for the Kaiser.
Take the stunt stuff into the lobby, for this picture must be talkyhood.

Identification: Ten-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet and one twenty-four-sheet. Twenty-six publicity cards, four twenty-four sheet sizes.

Lobby display photos, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28.

Slides. Heralds. Press sheets and newspaper stories.

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

The Management of this Theatre desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good clean entertainment. We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures.

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystalize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

DURING this period of epidemic, and while your houses are closed up for the most part, are you using your time to advantage?

NOW is a good time to apply soap and water, the paint brush and varnish.

Within a week or two, partly through your cooperation and that of your neighbor, the epidemic will have been checked, and the ban lifted. New pictures will be made and released. Theatres across the country will open their doors again, and those of you who have cleaned house will be amply repaid for your work by the crowds eagerly seeking entertainment.

Pursuant to this unfortunate epidemic, gentlemen, cleanliness will more than ever continue as an asset. Give your house plenty of fresh air, sunlight, and soap and water.

"Last week I said POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH represented QUALITY; backing it up with the statement that there were over 1,000 CAMERAGRAPHs 'over there with the boys.'

"I'm still shouting QUALITY for this projector; and my proof this time is, that the Censorship Board of Australia, after competitive tests, selected the CAMERAGRAPH to test all films.

"This means that ALL FILMS USED IN AUSTRALIA MUST FIRST PASS THROUGH A POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH.

"QUALITY gets there. The CAMERAGRAPH was selected because:

S. Barret Mc Cormick wrote it to appeal to human people, who love, hate, fight, struggle, who want their entertainment to be human—

He took profitable advantage of the wonderful exhibitor-advertising material in

"The Romance of Tarzan"

He brought them in droves by describing—

Tarzan's fight with savages and wild beasts to maintain his supremacy as the white jungle king.

His meeting with the beautiful white flower of girlhood from civilization—the awakening of love—their parting.

Tarzan's yearning—that drove him to search for her in a new and strange world.

His thrilling quest—beset by multitudes of new and unsuspected dangers.

His super-human strength helpless before the duplicity and intrigue of the social conspirators who sought to keep him from her.

The slow dawn of realization—the wrath of a mighty jungle man unloosed in the heart of modern palatial grandeur.

The Circle found a tremendous range of appeal in this great sequel to "Tarzan of The Apes."

Its unprecedented exhibitor-advertising qualities recommended it to First National Exhibitors' Circuit as the one production on which to hold its national exhibitor-advertising contest with awards totalling $1,200, in Liberty Bonds to the winners.

"She is certainly as clever as the best of them"

I attended a pre-view of "The Girl of My Dreams," Billie Rhodes in the lead. I have never laughed more heartily at a screened comedy than I did when I witnessed this picture.  There are many great bits of comedy, not of the stereotyped order, but so natural and so amusing that they were a treat. There are also some big "punches."  Billie Rhodes is a "duck," not once did her work jar. She is certainly as clever as the best of them in this line of work. Her comedy was a "scream" and her pathetic scenes were delicately handled, showing a truly artistic temperament. Also she is very young and pretty; two indispensable assets.

Los Angeles liked her—so will every other city

BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT T. L. TALLY OF LOS ANGELES SHOWED BILLIE RHODES IN HER INITIAL BIG MOTION PICTURE EFFORT AT HIS THEATRE FOR THE FIRST TIME ON ANY PUBLIC SCREEN

"Delightful Vivid Original"
LOS ANGELES"TIMES"

A new and delicious film personality, delightful, vivid, original and combining the charm of the ingenuous with a deeper note of histronism—that's Billie Rhodes, in "The Girl of My Dreams," at Tally's Broadway this week. Where has this Billie person been keeping herself, anyway? Of course, we really know. She's been playing in some charming one and two-reel comedies, and we've liked her for a long while. But we had no idea, when she romped through those things, of what she really could do.

"Endears Her to Every Spectator"
LOS ANGELES"EXAMINER"

Motion picture historians will chronicle the debut of Billie Rhodes as a full-fledged film star at Tally's yesterday as a complete success, histronically, pictorially and financially. There have been greater premieres in this city, perhaps ("The Birth of a Nation" and "Hearts of the World," for instance) but none more enthusiastic from the audience's viewpoint, or more laudatory to a screen luminary—it is her initial five-reel starring vehicle. It won't be her last—if I am any prophet. Even if she couldn't act—which she can and does—her pretty face, clustered with cute little dimples, and fascinating personality would insure her of success. In this production she is the real girl of your dreams, a fascinating little creature, who is bound to soar to lofty heights in the film sky.

"A Full-Fledged Film Star"
LOS ANGELES"HERALD"

Little Billie Rhodes stepped out of the two-reel comedy into a feature yesterday with the same naiveté that made creditable her matutinal plunge in the mountain pool. She bears the stamp of innocence in every pretty feature, and looks out upon the world with a trusting faith and responsive affection that endears her to every spectator. The little actress registers joy and pathos with ingenious fidelity to nature. Her tears are genuine well springs of sorrowing youth and no mere glycerine drops appended where they will be the most becoming. She is apparently free from any endeavor to "look pretty," and climbs about on mountain sides, up and down eave spouts and through rugged walls with boyish abandon.

"Little Doubt of Her Success"
LOS ANGELES"EXPRESS"

The management of Tally's Broadway Theatre kept its promise yesterday, and put before the motion picture world a new star of personality and charm. Strictly speaking, however, Billie Rhodes is not a new star. She has a large following among those who like short-length comedy, and needs no praise for her ability to do sprightly and pleasing things in that métier. But now she appears in the realm of serious drama. The reception of the play yesterday left little doubt of her success. * * * As for Miss Rhodes, she is so arch, chic and spontaneous that she wins admiration at every step. There can be no doubt that if she is fortunate enough to find the plays to fit her dainty personality she will take a leading place at once among the popular stars of the day.

Here is a letter from the manager of the Rialto Theatre, New York—direction of S. L. Rothapfel. It should be of singular interest to every exhibitor in the country. The heads of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres were perhaps once in the same position as you are—without knowledge of the comprehensive, entertaining and instructive value of the FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

“A good word now and then, I know, is appreciated by everyone, and so this letter to you is just to tell you how much we look forward each week for the Ford Educational Weekly. We use this weekly most every issue and I want to tell you that I in my humble sphere believe that the Ford Educational Weekly, at the present time, is doing wonderful work.”

Epidemic of Influenza Is Breaking Away in Many Sections, Permitting Picture Theatres to Resume Active Operations—
Philadelphia and Chicago Important Centers of Renewed Activities

THE epidemic of influenza is abating. The reports that reach us are encouraging. In the east theatres are reopening. Chicago reports that moving picture theatres are resuming in that section under certain restrictions. Philadelphia, where the scourge has been particularly distressing, theatres are open and business is again becoming normal.

The epidemic holds many localities in its relentless grasp, but there is a general air of hopefulness in our reports from widely scattered territory as disclosed in the dispatches that follow. Exhibitors have suffered great loss in money, but there has been no weakening in the determination to face the emergency and make the best of a deplorable situation.

Death has taken toll of many prominent men and women in the motion picture fraternity, exhibitors, players and producers suffering greatly losses during the weeks that the scourge has ravaged all walks of life. In the death of Harold E. Eidel, managing director of the New York State, the exhibitors lose a leader who has devoted his youthful years to the upbuilding of the business. His example has been a fine incentive to all managers in bringing the business of motion picture exhibition into the forefront of theatrical activities.

While the skies are clearing the affairs of the motion picture industry are still struggling forward under heavy handicap in many sections of the country. The ban upon production and full activities at first declared by the N. A. M. P. I., for four weeks has been extended for still another week, November 17 being now set as the date when operations in production and distribution will be fully resumed.

The following reports will give a general idea of conditions throughout the country as we go to press, Monday, November 4.

THE arrangements outlined in our issue of November 9 regarding the reopening of theatres in Chicago were carried out to the letter, with the additional provision that all theatres should close at 10 o'clock p. m. On Friday, November 1, the closing time was extended to 10:30 p. m., as the latest reports showed a rapid decline in the daily death rate and in the number of new cases of influenza and pneumonia.

It is lamentable to state that quite a number of picture theatres were ordered closed, after being reopened, the requirements of the State Health Director not being observed by the owners. These requirements insist on the following:

1. The premises must be thoroughly cleaned, kept clean and well ventilated at all times.

2. Conditions of crowding must be strictly observed.

3. Extraordinary diligence must be exercised to exclude from the audience possible infection bearers, such as persons showing evidence of colds or those residing on premises on which a case of influenza or pneumonia exists.

On Friday, November 1, 370 picture theatres were in operation in the city. The attendance showed that the people were hungry for screen entertainment from the first day of reopening (Wednesday), when theatres on the north side, as far south as Divertree Boulevard were opened, until Friday, when the entire city was included, with the exception of South Chicago.

When this letter went to press on November 1, State Health Director Dr. St. Clair Drake expressed great satisfaction with the improved conditions of the epidemic in Illinois. He stated that despite the influenza of Winnetka, Lake Forest, Highland Park, Woodstock and Belvidere in the northern part of the State, as well as Chicago, had been authorized to enforce a modified quarantine during the latter part of the week ending Saturday, November 2.

Beginning Monday, November 4, he advised that it was altogether probable that restrictions would be raised in all northern Illinois communities, excepting a few in which the situation was not yet satisfactory.

From the middle of the week beginning Monday, November 4, restrictions will be modified in Central Illinois. Dr. Drake announced.

He also expressed the opinion on Friday, November 1, that, judging from indications then existing, southern Illinois will remain closed for at least two weeks longer.

Beginning Monday, November 4, as advised by Dr. Drake, the following North Shore communities, in addition to those in northern Illinois already mentioned, will operate under modified quarantine: Evanston, Wilmette, Kenilworth, Winnetka, Glencoo, Highland Park, North Chicago, Libertyville and Arion.

Dr. Drake was much pleased with the conditions in Chicago, which he described as "rapidly improving." He informed me that the decrease in the death rate and in the number of new cases was "over 60 per cent. within the last four days."

He urged the greatest caution in keeping all theatres, halls and other meeting places well ventilated, properly heated and thoroughly clean.

"A recurrence of the epidemic later on, in the winter (pneumonia) season, would be a terrible calamity. Compared with such a calamity, the results of the present outbreak would be mere child's play. Such a recurrence would lead to the closing of all theatres and meeting places for the entire winter," said Dr. Drake.

Epidemic in San Francisco Believed to Be Checked

FOR the first time in its history San Francisco has been without theatrical amusements or concerts for an entire week, and it is likely that least another week will elapse before public gatherings of any kind will be permitted. It is believed that the epidemic of influenza has been checked, through the drastic measures adopted by the local Board of Health, and that the number of new cases will show a rapid decline from now on. The wearing of gauze masks has been made compulsory, and business men and women are going about their duties with faces screened from view.

The Board of Supervisors recently sent a letter to the Board of Health commending it for its energetic action in seeking to check the spread of the epidemic, this letter, including the suggestion that Class A power, that Class A moving picture houses be reopened as early as possible in order to relieve the depression of spirits in the community. Chief Health Officer William C. Hassler has since advised that it is the plan to permit the best ventilated theatres to reopen at an early date, but he has suggested that it will be a week, at least, before such a step will be considered safe. The Allied Theatrical Managers of the city met this week and adopted resolutions supporting the stand of the Board of Health.

It was decided not to reopen houses until the boom ended and announced that it was safe to do so and that the plans were adapted to designate reopening day as "Theatre Day," the occasion to be marked by gala balls.

The resolution adopted a week ago by the California State Board of Health was not a specific order for the closing of theatres, as was the case in San Francisco, but the decision understood to be such. A few houses in the interior operated for several days after the resolution was passed, but at present in the state of California the houses are being served by local film exchanges, the recommendations of the State Board being observed to the letter. There are four hundred box offices still in the grip of the closing of these is expected at any time. Almost all film exchanges are open and a few traveling men are on the road, but little business is being done. There is a chance that the reopening of houses may be gradual, owing to different local conditions, and if this is the case, the problem of handling business on the part of the theatres will change greatly. Some offices have retained their full working staffs, while others have released workers who had already found positions in other lines.

Government Losing $40,000 a Week

Theatre owners are not alone in feeling the effects of the ban on amusements, Uncle Sam also suffering a financial loss. The motion picture manager's director, Justus S. Wardell estimates that the Government is losing $40,000 a week in the San Francisco district through the closing of the theatres. He says: "Within a few weeks we have the holidays, which with the exception of a week or so mean poor business. Then comes midwinter with its storms, traffic tieup, and other troubles; and then Lent. You can see that the best weeks of the year have passed and gone without any treasures of the theatre upon which to build future business."

Another well-known exhibitor said: "I look for the biggest season in years. The weather is worst in high winds and snow, and the grip and scare has reached the point where they must turn to amusement to relieve their minds of the stress. We have sold wholesale for the season in the way of giving gifts, and I look for a liberal expenditure for amusements. The new increased wage schedules have put more money in the pockets of the children, and I expect house business. They are going to spend this money, and the motion picture business is going to get stronger. Attractions is going to reap a harvest."

New England Almost Clear.

The epidemic has almost completely subsided in eastern New England. Houses in Portland and other leading Maine cities have been reopened. In Vermont the ban will not be lifted until November 4. In New Hampshire and Rhode Island the ban has been lifted in most of the houses.

In Massachusetts the theatres reopened to big business on Monday, October 27. In Springfield the schools remained closed, but the theatres were opened, and the results were gratifying, still raging in dangerous proportions. In other western Massachusetts cities the grip epidemic played havoc with business, but with the lifting of the ban of houses there was a good attendance.

Prospect for Early Opening Encouraging in Northwest

With a slow but encouraging decline in the number of cases reported daily, several of the smaller towns of the Northwest have reopened their theatres, with little fear of setting off epidemic places, although Minneapolis and Duluth and the larger cities of this territory are still closed by the epidemic. Minneapolis and Duluth have been pressed by snow and rain, is believed to have had a good effect upon the situation, settling the dust which has been responsible for the spread of the disease.

Preparing for Big Business.

Northwest distributors and exhibitors are feeling more optimistic at the present writing and are preparing for a record-breaking era of business as an aftermath of the epidemic. In the meantime, St. Paul, which is still an open town, continues to draw many theatre patrons from Minneapolis.

Although a slight epidemic has seen a slight but steady decline in the number of cases reported each day, Dr. H. M. Guilford, health commissioner of Minneapolis, declared that he was not so sure whether the epidemic had reached its crest in Minneapolis and would continue its decline. "I do not want to make any predictions as to the future, but it seems coming from the way the epidemic has run its course in other cities it is hard to tell just when it will let down materially. I am hoping, however, that the situation will soon permit of the opening of theatres."

Influenza Takes Its Toll.

Influenza has taken its toll among several moving picture men of the Northwest. A Buck, brother of W. L. Buck, proprietor of the Gem Theatre, of Wa- ter ville, Minn. who came to Minneapolis to join the army, contracted influenza and died two days later.

Charles D. Wells, manager of the Isis Theatre, St. Paul, one of the prominent moving picture men of the Northwest, succumbed to the dread disease after an illness of but a few days.

Mathew Gruber, proprietor of the Grand Opera House of Stanley, Wis., is mourning the loss of two sons, Floyd, one year old, who died October 14, and W. M., who passed away four days later. Both were victims of influenza.

Overhauled and Renovated, Atlanta Houses Reopen

All the theatres of Atlanta reopened Saturday, October 26, at the end of the third full week, during which they had been closed by action of city council as a precautionary measure against the spread of influenza. Several houses were expected to be raised at Chattanooga, Tenn.; Birmingham, Ala.; Jacksonville, Fla.; Savannah, Ga., and other cities in the South Atlantic territory within the next few days.

Power Shortage Threatened Hardship.

A shortage of electric power in North Georgia earlier in the week threatened to add further hardships to those visited upon local exhibitors by the "flu" epidemic, and many Moses for the health order a representative of the Federal War Industries Board, who is at present supervising the distribution of current among essential industries, feared that no power could be spared the theatres even if they were permitted to open.

On Friday, after the city board of health had refused to recommend the reopening of the theatres, the city was featured by much wrangling, city council was called into special session by Mayor Candler and voted to repeal the emergency order, which had been in effect for three weeks. Local exhibitors, therefore, were thus placed in the position whereby, although they possessed munitions, they still faced this obstacle presented by the mandatory power ruling prevented the resumption of operations.

May Use Power for Six Hours Daily.

Immediately after favorable action by council, a delegation of officials from the Atlanta Theatre Managers Association, headed by Hugh L. Cardoza, president, called upon Captain Miltenberger, representative of the War Industries Board, and, upon a vigorous presentation of their claims for consideration, succeeded in getting permission from him by which theatres were permitted the use of electric current for power and interior lights for a period of six hours daily.

The managerial association officials pointed out that the motion picture industry had been declared essential, that President Wilson had issued the same holding up the national morale, that the Southeastern fair here had recently been allowed power during an acute shortage, and that any saving in current effected by keeping the theatres idle would be more than offset by the losses burned in thousands of homes which would otherwise have been dark while the theatres were kept closed.

On Saturday the theatres accordingly opened up on the six-hour schedule and on Sunday all power restrictions were withdrawn, with the result that the prohibition on the shortage occasioned by plentiful rainfall through the territory. On Monday all Atlanta theatres resumed their customary basis of operations.

Attractions Shown as Billed.

All the first-run houses here opened with attractions billed at the time the "flu" scare caused the shutdown. The Rialto is offering Douglas Fairbanks in "He Comes Up Smiling," the Forsyth, Charles Ogle in "The Street of the Tudor," Dorothy Phillips in "The Risky Road"; the Strand, Mae Marsh in "Hidden Fires," and the Criterion, Clara Kimball Young in "The Marrow." The Vaudeville, a five-cent house since the first of the year, inaugurated a change in policy with its reopening and is presenting "The Three Marys," "Pars- mount and Artcraft features at a five and ten cent scale."

The Almo No. 2 announces the booking of the new features, the first of which to be presented is "The Eyes of Julia Deep," starring Mary Miles Minter. "Hobbs in a Hurry," the William Russell film, and "The War of the Book," with Schmidt to start the series, was due for presentation when the influenza epidemic arrived.

Practically every exhibitor in Atlanta completed extensive overhauling, renovating and redecorating work during the three weeks' suspension of business.

INFLUENZA ON THE WANE

WITH the wane of the Spanish influenza epidemic in the Southwest the business situation for motion picture exhibitors and film men in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas appears to be improving. It is reported that the first two weeks in November will see practically all the theatres in three states opened and catering to full capacity.

Openings are announced in all parts of the Southwestern district during the last week of October. From scores of cities and towns disease reports have apparently run its course and that hospitals, churches and schools are to be allowed to open again.

In Dallas motion picture exhibitors and managers went to the mayor and asked that the quarantine be taken off churches and theatres, commencing Sunday, October 25. Owing to apparently a minor health alert by health authorities did not grant their request. They told both clergymen and moving picture men that it would only be a matter of days before the quarantine would be lifted.

It is expected that Dallas shows will be open during the first week of November. City health officers told the committee petitioning against the quarantine that they did not want to open the theatres only to find that they could have to shut them again.

In all parts of Texas and New Mexico are commencing to lift the influenza quarantine. This is regarded as an encouraging sign.

The following cities report quarantine is lifted and all shows open:
Topeka, Hesston, Fort Worth, Waco, Athens, Huntsville, Mineral Wells, Hamilton, Ranger, Orange, Brenham, La Porte, Cameron, Denison, Electra, Mexia, Terrell, Sherman, Cleburne, Burk, Burnet, Wolfe City and Galveston.

Openings are coming in from the three states. The total amount of business a day and booking clerks are kept exceedingly busy.

INDIANAPOLIS HOUSES OPEN TO ENTHUSIASTIC CROWDS

ANLESS, but not quite "flueless," Indianapolis went back to normal conditions on Thursday, October 31. The bar against all public gatherings imposed by the health authorities on October 21 was lifted at midnight of October 30, and the next day motion picture theatres and soft drink places reopened their doors and business houses resumed their normal life.

The Circle Theatre reopened with "The Romance of Tarzan," which was scheduled at the Circle the week the order was first issued. The Fandorina resumed business with Charles Ray in "In the Law of the North." The Isis opened with William Russell in "Hobbs in a Hurry," the picture it was to have run when the ban arrived. The Colonial presented "Maude o' the Storm," the Regent had Mae Marsh in "Hidden Tires," D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" was scheduled for another run at English's beginning Sunday afternoon, November 30.

The reopening of the local motion picture theatres was marked by unusual demonstrations on the part of the audiences. Programs in practically all of the houses were greeted with more enthusiasm than had been demonstrated for several years. Although the crowds attending the reopening were not of extreme magnitude the local exhibitors are of the opinion that as soon as the danger is past all the past the crowds will become larger.

Two exceptions were made to the order, however. The theatres that have colds or coughs are not permitted to enter the theatres and all street car windows are to be kept open. Exhibitors are taking strict attention to enforcing the rule regarding sneezes and coughs, because they do not want to have to undergo another enforced vacation of three weeks if they can aid in any way to prevent a suddeninstallation.

The reopening of the theatres brought out an abundance of newspaper advertising. The Indianapolis Star on the morning of October 31, carried two whole pages of advertising matter regarding the reopening of the motion picture shows and the Indianapolis Times and the Indianapolis News, the two afternoon papers also included specially large advertising spaces regarding the theatres.

In the remainder of Indiana, the ban established by the state board of health remains effective until Saturday night, November 2. Action may be taken, it was said, at the board's headquarters, to lift the ban in some counties where influenza is not yet under control to keep the ban on, with some modifications, for possibly another week.

WASHINGTON THEATRES OPEN THEIR DOORS

AFTER having been closed for exactly one month, Washington theatres will reopen November 4, the majority of them attempting to secure especially attractive features to signalize the occasion. The states have less than one day's notice, Washington theatres were ordered to close on the night of October 3 for an indeterminate period, the local health department taking action as soon as it was possible to fight the epidemic of influenza. The short notice gave the exhibitors no opportunity to make arrangements for final programs, nor did it permit the exchanges to then take up with the theatres the question of arranging for the films to be seen but for the reopening.

During the closed period, however, the Washington Exchange Managers' Association, at a special meeting, decided to continue programs from where they were broken down, in the belief that this method of handling the situation, especially in view of the fact that the majority of large producing companies also declared a four-weeks' holddown, would not cause any disorganization or friction that might have been caused by the closing order.

From the public's point of view, the change is notable by the knowledge that, when the open season for theatres was again declared, they would be able to attend shows in redecorated and renovated houses, since a number of the exhibitors took advantage of the quiet period to put their theatres in good condition. It is declared that never before was Washington theatre management as prompt to close and paint theatres at one time, and some of the exhibitors asserted that they have long been waiting for such an opportunity to close their houses.

The reopening of the theatres will see another new house in the field, Loew's Palace Theatre, at Thirteenth and F streets northwest, having announced November 5th as its opening date, soon to be followed by the opening of Crandall's Metropolitan, further up on F Street.

Spokane Preparing for Reopening.

For the last 15 days, Spokane, in common with other cities and hamlets of the United States, has been worrying along bravely without the stimulating effects of moving pictures, vaudeville or road shows, due to the Spanish influenza epidemic.

Some managers and exhibitors have taken advantage of the lull to visit the coast and change ideas for the near future, hopeful that the closing edict is not to remain in force forever. Still others spend part of the time in golf courses. Only all of the managers have taken advantage of the closing edict to renovate their places and posters and calumets have been kept busy. When the door again swing open to the public bright, the auditoriums will welcome the patrons.

Approximately 20,000 persons attend the II theatres of the city each day during the 30 days of the week and Sundays and holidays the aggregate attendance probably runs close to 30,000, while on some days it may drop to 12,000 or 15,000, but a conservative average is about 20,000. Because of the running the 15 days practically 300,000 admissions have been kept out of the tills of Spokane theatre box offices. The average admission price of these people runs about 15 cents, summing up road shows, vaudeville houses and picture shows, meaning a loss of $3,000 daily, which is, of course, one of the payrolls and expense of film service.

Monthly admissions aggregate $90,000, or about $1,080,000 a year. This shows that Uncle Sam will feel the effect in no small degree, for he gets about 10 per cent of this, or at least about $10,000 a month. While admissions are not coming in, the rents, taxes, insurance and some other fixed charges continue and considerably more than 100 employees with a payroll of close to $12,000 a month are out of work.

Manager J. W. Allender, of the Majestic, a lyric theatre, estimated the program completed to January 1 for as soon as the house gets permission to open.

The Clemmer will reopen with Harry Gerard as musical director.

EPIDEMIC DECREASING IN ROCHESTER.

While some of the Rochester theatre managers had tentatively booked films for the following week, they have been advised by local authorities that the closing of the city would be extended to November 15, and it was not until that date that they were able to start advertising for the exhibition of their films. Some of the larger companies already have released their films, and the Rochester exhibitors can not show them until November 15. The long expected ‘rush’ of pictures has not materialized, and the theatre bookings for the next few weeks are likely to be smaller than normal until January 1st.
new cases reported still runs up into the hundreds every day and the death toll from influenza and pneumonia hovers around thirty.

Officials in charge frankly admit that conditions are improving rapidly, but caution that it is too soon to set the closer closing order until the situation shows a decidedly marked improvement for several days in succession. Should the number of new public health cases decrease considerably for two or three days in succession they could then hold out some hope of immediate opening, but as yet it appears that various dates, including November 11, have been suggested but Commissioner of Public Safety Hamilton says that this or any other date is merely guesswork.

Subsides in Baltimore.
The influenza epidemic, which for the past several weeks has been raging in Baltimore, has suddenly subsided and is now about over in this section. But Health Commissioner Blake of Baltimore City has not, at this writing, raised all the restrictions which were placed on the theatres and moving picture houses.

Just why such distinction should have been made between the churches, the schools, the theatres and other places of public resort is not clear, but this is the time when people could gather in each, appears to be a mystery that no one can solve.

The restriction was raised partly beginning Monday, October 28, and all the theatres were permitted to open from 7:30 P.M. to 11:30 P.M., but on Tuesday, October 29, the opening of the moving picture houses was changed, and they were told to open at 6:30 P.M. and close at 10:30 P.M., while other theatres were permitted to continue with the former regulations.

On Friday, October 25, however, the bans were lifted entirely on places of religious worship and also on retail stores, hardware and hardware.

On Friday, October 25, a delegation of moving picture theatre owners went to Dr. Blake, asking that the hours be changed from either 5 to 9 or 6 to 10, and that the aforementioned time was set. Some of the managers looked on at the idea as if they were ready to take what they could get, while others were restless under the restrictions.

Restrictions have been raised in the following cities throughout Maryland: Elkton, Federalsburg, Cambridge, Easton, Cumberland and Annapolis.

Business Slump in Boston.
There has been a sudden slump in the tremendous business which followed the reopening of the theatres in this section on November 20. The weather has been leading factor in this slump.

Following the reopening of the motos, business in Boston fell into a thaw and a state of closing because of the grip epidemic there was a record-breaking attendance. Every manager reported large audiences with a prospect of business being at new winter season's highs. Then the weather man stepped in with some of the warmest October days known in years, and after the depression of the epidemic, people flocked to the parks and public places in preference to attending the theatres.

While for the past ten days the slump in business following the reopening has been heart-breaking to the theatre owners and managers, a cold snap would probably bring the record attendance the former month is looking forward to.

There is a wide diversity of opinion as to the future of the business in New England this winter. One prominent exchange man said today:

"The hope is indeed that the theatres will probably recover from the losses they have sustained from the grip epidemic. My salesmen report a number of small houses which will not reopen, but of the 800 houses in New England at the beginning of the year are those following Labor Day. The grip ban came in the midst of this rushing business, and the loss can never be recovered.

Dayton Situation Develops Into a Muddle.
The main question in Dayton at the present time in reference to the opening of local theatres seems to be 'who knows when the opening takes place?'

The local officials were not in favor of closing in the first place, and it is said that when the Mayor made the statement that to close the theatres was folly when crowded ten-cent stores, department stores, street cars and such alike were not being closed under a similar ban. This was the case.

This was the end, however, for there are two government flying fields at Dayton, namely the Wilbur Wright field and the Dayton field. Both of these were under quarantine at the time the influenza was very heavy at both. The commanders of these made a statement to the effect that if the local authorities did not close the theatres they (the government officials) would. In order to save trouble Dr. Peters, local health officer, then decided that theatres would all be closed after October 9.

The local situation was serious, there being about 265 deaths caused by the influenza epidemic, and at least 18,000 cases of pneumonia. After the epidemic had abated somewhat the announcement was made that reopening would be permitted on October 6, and that those places could reopen to November 3 by authorities and on October 29 a further postponement until November 11 was made. The local managers held a meeting on October 25 and decided that the decision of the Exhibitors' League and decided to send a committee to call on Dr. Peters and see if an opening could not be arranged for the 3d with the consent of the state authorities, who also have a hand in the granting of the official permission. It was decided to see Dr. Peters on Wednesday, October 30, and try to change the mandate.

Seattle May Be Closed Two More Weeks.
It was felt by Seattle health authorities a few days ago that the influenza epidemic, which has kept motion picture houses closed for the last three weeks, had reached its crest, but on Thursday, October 24, there was a report of getting the hospitals open as soon as possible, since it was thought that the epidemic was on the decrease. A committee selected from the two organizations was appointed which was to make the health authorities and the mayor try to make arrangements for the immediate reopening of the theatres.

Statewide Quarantine Lifted in Iowa.
The Spanish influenza statewide quarantine was lifted on the last week of October 27, it being optional with each city and town as to when motion picture theatres might open and other public places be reopened. Des Moines took the lid off Monday, October 28. Film exchanges are still in a chaotic condition as regards business and no roadmen with巴士 was officially lifted at least another week, as exhibitors will not in a mood to buy new pictures until business has opened and the revenue of which they have been totally deprived for the last two weeks will be realized in.

Philadelphia Opened October 30.
Director Wilmer Krusen, of the State Department of Health and Charities, who, on Friday, October 25, in conjunction with the Pennsylvania Board of Health, sent a circular to all of the cities in the state that related to schools and churches, permitted theatres, as well as saloons and wholesale liquor stores, to resume business October 30. Most of the Philadelphia theatres reopened without a hitch. Nearly all of the managers, operators and ushers were on hand in their usual places to proceed with the show.

Epidemic in Richmond at Its Crest.
The question of allowing Richmond, Va., theatres and schools to reopen was brought up at a meeting of the city Health Board Friday, October 25, and it was the unanimous opinion of all members of the board that it was not wise to lift the ban until all danger of a recurrence of the epidemic had passed, with the city's health commissioner having resigned himself to a week or ten days more of inactivity. The epidemic here has just reached its crest and is expected to subside rapidly within the next week.

Grip Cases Receding in Buffalo.
As the number of cases of the Spanish influenza in Buffalo is steadily decreasing it is expected that Buffalo's moving picture theatres will reopen early in November. The City Health Committee, appointed by Health Commissioner Gram, adopted a resolution expressing the opinion that the ban could probably be lifted about the 15th of the month. According to word received the Buffalo film exchanges and picture houses, which were closed in the following places, have reopened: Oswego, Syracuse, Albany, Watertown, Binghamham, Schenectady, Saratoga, Schuylerville, Ilion, Rome, Oneida and various other points throughout this State.

Some Western New York Cities Open.
Theatres in several Western New York towns are now open. Seneca Falls, Solos, Batavia and a few other communities opened during the past week of the epidemic, and several theatres opening will take place on November 4, but it is probable that in a few place the opening will be deferred.

Cleveland Not Yet Ready for Opening.
Cleveland exhibitors had no idea, up to October 24, as to when they would be allowed to reopen their theatres. The health commissioner said it might be a week and it might be longer. How-

HAROLD EDEL SUCCEMBS TO INFLUENZA
Managing Director of New York Strand Dies Suddenly At His Home in This City Mourned by Hosts of Friends

A T seven o'clock Saturday evening, November 6, Harold E. Edel, managing director of the New York Strand, died at his home in this city, a victim of influenza. His wife and child, Harold E., Jr., survive him. The funeral services were held Monday afternoon, November 4, at Campbell's Funeral Church, and the remains were shipped to Cleveland, O., for burial.

Winston-Salem Opens November 4.

Picture theatres in Winston-Salem, N. C., will be allowed to reopen on Monday, November 4, according to ruling of the local health board. At the same time, Greensboro, Durham and Raleigh are allowed to reopen their doors to the public.

Nordoff Opened October 31.

Nordoff, Va.—Theatres were allowed to open Thursday night, October 31, in advance of the expected time, no managers having made arrangements for shows prior to Saturday, November 2. However, all theatres opened promptly at 7 p.m., and the theatrical section was thronged with amusement seekers, whose appetites have been whetted to a keen edge by almost four weeks of suspension of activities. All local theatres are inspected daily by health authorities for the purpose of seeing that proper ventilation is provided and that disinfection of the premises is properly done in accordance with orders issued when the ban was lifted.

Denver Opened November 10.

Denver, Colo., November 2. Moving picture houses here will not open before November 10. Newspapers forbidden to flash election returns on screen because of the ban on outdoor gatherings. Epidemic abating in the city but spreading throughout the State.

Michigan Will Lift Ban November 8.

Detroit, Mich., November 3. The ban on moving picture theatres throughout the entire State will be lifted positively by Friday, November 8, and possibly Thursday, according to a statement made by Governor Albert E. Sleeper for Detroit, November 1. The epidemic is on the wane, and in Detroit conditions are about normal.

Influenza Hits Vitagraph Forces.

Several prominent Vitagraphers were touched by the influenza last week, but in mild form, and all are now recovered. Edith Johnson, leading woman for William Quigley, and in the serial "The Iron Test," felt a sudden illness, so severe that she was ill for several days. Paul Hust, who has been directing Antonio Moreno and Carol Holmes in "The Iron Test," was able to continue his work.

The death of Harold Edel was a shock to the motion picture and theatrical profession. News had come that he was ill of Spanish influenza, but there was no inkling that his condition was serious. Hence the severity of the shock when thousands of his friends read in the Sunday morning papers that the managing director of the New York Strand had died the previous evening. Mr. Edel was born in Greenville, S. C., twenty-nine years ago. At the time of his death he was the youngest man on Broadway, and perhaps in the United States, holding a position of similar prominence and importance. Upon graduating from Georgia University Mr. Edel came north, finding his way into the amusement business at the age of seventeen, when he was given charge of the penny arcade in East Fourteenth street, New York, owned by his uncle, the late Mitchell H. Mark. Mr. Mark soon transferred young Edel to a more important position in Lawrence, Mass., where he was placed in charge of Mr. Mark's moving picture theatre. Six months later he was again promoted to a very important position of manager of the Globe and Colonial theatres in Cleveland, where he remained two years. When the Alhambra, Cleveland, was opened young Edel was placed in the position of manager thereof where he remained until he was selected as Canadian general manager for Kinamacolor.

Subsequently he returned to his uncle's employ, being made general manager of the Mark-Brock theatrical enterprises in Buffalo. There he remained until he came to the New York Strand. While open, he directed the Strand, Buffalo, while Mr. Edel had purchased an interest. His transfer to the New York Strand was made when Mr. Rothfapel resigned the position of managing director at that theatre to take a like position at the Kialto.

The progress Mr. Edel had made, thus early in life, was indicative of his capacity as a business man and a showman of keen instincts. Personally he was most affable and agreeable, these traits of character adding daily to the thousands of friends he had made during his twelve years in show business.

National Film Product

Under New Control

The Robertson-Cole Company further entrenched itself this week as a big factor in the motion picture industry by a special arrangement with the National Film Corporation of America, whereby it will handle for the entire world, including the United States, the National's de luxe Billie Rhode pictures and the "Might," Edith Smith's amusements. The Robertson-Cole film will be sold under license to the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation in relations to the United States for the next two years, and it will have authority to approve all contracts made through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for the release of the National's feature, "The Romance of Tarzan," the concluding chapters of "Tarzan of the Apes."

The National Film Corporation is planning to produce a new super-attractive picture for the coming holiday season, and it is expected that the title and subject have not yet been announced, but Robertson-Cole will control all distributing rights through the New York branch of the company.

Robertson-Cole Acquires Rights.

Within the past few weeks Robertson-Cole closed deals whereby all J. Warren Kerrigan pictures and Screencraft features are to be sold by them throughout the world, except the United States. The Robertson-Cole Company has also acquired for the entire world, including this country, the series of eight William Parson's pictures, to be directed by Jesse D. Hampton, and Martin John son's "Cannibals of the South Seas."

Publicity Manager on Vacation

Vivian M. Moses, Select's publicity manager, has left New York by motor for a two weeks' vacation in South Carolina. Sumter is Mr. Moses' home town, and after paying his respects to the proprietor of the general store and a few local celebrities, he will go on a week's automobile tour of the State. Mr. Moses spent Sunday and Monday in Washington, where he visited his wife, who is head of the personnel division of the Fuel Administration.

Meeting of the By-Laws

Committee at Hotel Astor

Peter J. Schaeffer announces that the by-laws and constitution committee of the Exhibitors Branch of the N. A. M. P. J. will meet at the Hotel Astor, New York, Friday, November 15. A full attendance of the membership of the committee will be on hand.
New York Exhibitors
Open New Headquarters

MEETING and luncheon of the Exhibitors' League, New York Local No. 1, was held on Thursday, November 1, at its rooms. About fifty called the meeting, which was called by John Manheimer presiding. The new headquarters of the New York local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League are temporarily established on Seventh avenue.

The league leased the entire floor and subleased the back part of it to a publication concern, which greatly lessened the rent. The space occupied by the league faces on Seventh avenue and extends about 60 feet, giving plenty of room for office space and a large meeting room, seating about one hundred. The furnishings are of rosewood with decorations of light gray. The building is equipped with an elevator and complete sets of local and national location at Forty-ninth street and Seventh avenue, right in the heart of the film district, makes it extremely accessible and convenient to those who are always doing business with exchanges.

After reading the minutes of the previous meeting the opening subject of discussion was the question of the local's finances. It was decided that all dues of delinquents should be paid by November 15 and a collector be secured to make collections where members were still in arrears. The league's present obligations in maintaining their new quarters made this action imperative. The question of continuous delivery and collections of films with the Prudential Transportation Company was put to a vote, and it was decided in favor of the Prudential at a cost of $7 for each film, to be charged on each member at the rate of $1,000 for losses and non-delivery by the Prudential Company.

Emargo Creates Discussion.

One member announced that he had just been informed that the producers' and distributors' branch of the National Association of the M. P. I. had decided to continue the embargo on new releases until November 18. This brought about a lively discussion of the N. A. M. P. I.'s action in the first instance without taking the exhibitors into its confidence. The question was asked: What is to hinder the producers and distributors continuing the embargo indefinitely? "Nothing," was the reply. Someone asked if the exhibitors didn't have a voice in this matter. In response to this question it was stated that as yet the exhibitors were not a branch of the M. P. I.

It was explained by Mr. Blumenthal that while it was decided in conventions at Chicago last September by the A. E. A. and the M. P. E. L. of America to amalgamate and become a branch of the N. A. M. P. I., the exhibitors had not been officially notified and would not be until President Schaefler had apprised them that they were a branch of the N. A. M. P. I. Mr. Blumenthal said he understood that Mr. Schaefler would be in New York on November II to confer with the directors of the N. A. M. P. I. on this matter. It was regularly moved, seconded and unanimously carried that Mr. Schaefler be requested by the president of Manhattan local to meet its members in special session, before his conference with the N. A. M. P. I. that the league might have an opportunity to change the attitude of the premises. On motion the meeting adjourned subject to the call of the chair.

Boston Picture Men Organize Trade Board

A CHANGE in the rules of membership and dues was approved at a meeting of Massachusetts Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, at a meeting held at the Boston headquarters this week. Motion was made to score of prominent motion picture exhibitors, exchange men and dealers in accessories attended the meeting.

Bert H. Cornell, secretary of the league, presided at the meeting to order and Frank J. Howard was made temporary chairman. Upon motion of Ernest H. Horstmann it was voted to authorize the by-laws committee to change the present name of the league to that of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island Exhibitors' Board of Trade.

The following changes to the by-laws were also voted:

Article III — To read: Membership. Any person engaged in the motion picture industry as exhibitor, manufacturer, exchange man, or dealer in accessories, shall be eligible to election to membership. Any application for membership shall be made in writing by the applicant upon such blanks, giving such information as to the applicant as the board of directors shall provide, and such application shall be signed by a member in good standing recommending the applicant. Such applications shall be referred to the membership committee, who shall investigate its applicant and report its recommendation thereon to the association. Such application shall be accepted by a vote of three-fourths of those present.

Article XII — Dues. Exhibitors:
Class A — Houses 1,500 seats or over, $25.
Class B — Houses 1,000 seats to 1,499, $20.
Class C — Houses 600 to 999, $15.
Class D — Houses less than 600, $10.

The dues for membership for exchange, manufacturer or dealer in accessories shall be $10 per annum. All dues shall be paid semi-annually, in advance, Jan. 1 and July 1 of each year.

Metro Closes Albany Exchange.

Metro Pictures Corporation announces that in the future all of its business that has been handled from Albany will be taken care of by the Bantam Company, and the Albany branch has been discontinued October 22. E. M. Saunders, special representative of Metro and a Clayheald, who has recently been on an extended tour of different cities in upper New York State, in the interest of his companies, concluded the arrangements. The change, Mr. Saunders declares, will work to the advantage of not only Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., but to the exhibitor as well, as the division of territory between these two big offices will bring the buyer in closer touch with the producing companies.

Al Nathan Managing Symphony.

Al, Nathan, who until recently was in charge of the Broadway Theatre, and was then sent to Montreal to assume a similar position at the Holman Theatre there, has temporarily transferred his activities to the Symphony Theatre of New York, where he is now in full charge of things. Mr. Nathan originally came from California, where he managed the Superba Theatre in Los Angeles and the Empire and Alhambra in San Francisco. During the last Liberty Loan drive Mr. Nathan was personally responsible for the sale of $101,000 worth of bonds at the Symphony Theatre.

Merrill Secures Another House.

The Merrill Theatre Company, of Milwaukee, operating the Merrill Theatre, has leased another downtown house, the Strand, with a seating capacity of 2,000. Both houses will be under the management of E. C. Bostwick, who for the past two years has managed the Merrill under the open booking plan. Under its new management the Strand will be known as the New Strand and run under the open booking plan.
OFFICIAL WAR PICTURES HELD TOO TAME

Carolyn Wilson, the Famous War Correspondent, Humorously Proves That the Contrary Is True

OUR people "over here" expect impossibilities in the way of taking moving pictures "over there" of our brave boys on the front. They want action and blooded action. No backline views are good enough, even though the shells be screaming overhead and the cameraman's life is at stake for every shot that is taken.

Of course I refer to Government war pictures released through the Film Division of the Bureau of Information, the scenes of which are taken at the front in France by members of the U. S. Signal Corps. The ordinary man and woman, boy and girl have been so often accustomed to seeing moving pictures, he says, that the lurid, die-quick type and the so innocently unconscious that all such scenes have been faked in safe places, where life and limb are never at stake, naturally enough disappointed with the seeming tameness of pictures which have actually been taken out on the battle front—not in the attacking ranks, of course, for that the exception of the front and not permitted.

A very timely and most interesting reference is made to the taking of these war pictures in an article contributed to the Chicago Sunday Tribune, by that able correspondent Carolyn Wilson, now at the front, in France. Our old friend Lucien Wheeler, formerly general manager for Wm. N. Selig, who is known as a personal protector of several U. S. presidents, receives humorous mention in the excerpt from Miss Wilson's article, which is given here:

"When you see the moving pictures of our men in action back there in America, does it seem to you that there isn't anything thrilling? Are you longing for flashes of them leaping across the parapet, charging down an invisible foe? You've seen those pictures before, but often they have been 'faked,' and the thing which the deciding—not to say firm—Scotchman who is in charge of the moving picture men will not allow.

"As long as a picture has the initials of the signal corps under it and a caption which shows it to be taken at the front, at the front where it is to be taken, and I'll break any man who fakes it," says Mr. Wilson.

"If the public wants to see sensational pictures of people, let them go to some of those heart sores. They'll get nothing but the truth from our department."

"Capt. Hardy is in charge of the laboratory out at Vincennes where all the film is turned in from no matter what section of the front it is taken. There is a corps of photographers working under him, some commissioned in the signal corps, like Weigle, but most of them government employees of the bureau of public information, civilians who only wear the uniform by courtesy and are obliged to affix the black P on the white band on their arm, just as the correspondents wear a red C on a green band.

"Some of the enlisted men down there at the laboratory have turned out to have really remarkable artistic viewpoints—they know what makes a good looking as well as an interesting picture. Although they were only working around the laboratory, Capt. Hardy discovered this from the choice of plates which they would lay aside to be developed, and many of them have been sent out since with cameras.

"Some of the men at the bureau of public information felt that the pictures lacked depth. They felt they were too much back line stuff and that what the people in America wanted was action. So the chief of the department said: 'Go ahead; go out there. You have at your own discretion you want to get anything you please. Go out and make your own conclusions.' So a party of them went out with cameras and high hopes—among them Lucien Wheeler of Chicago, who is attached to the London branch of the propaganda office, and Perry Arnold, old United Press man.

"And what did they get? Can Hardy asked me. 'Nothing but cooties.' Which is considerably too much."

William Duncan Vitagraph's Popular Serial Director

WILLIAM DUNCAN, Vitagraph's regular and widely known director of serial pictures, made a brief stopover here Thursday, October 31, on his return from New York to Los Angeles. When the influenza epidemic in Los Angeles caused them to work in the studios there, Mr. Duncan declared a vacation of two weeks for his company and himself, and decided to visit his wife and family at his home, on Long Island, the first opportunity he had to do so in two years. But with work which had to be finished in Los Angeles before he left and the time consumed in making the round trip, and in visiting the New York office, just four days were left for the home visit—rather short after an absence of two years, it must be said.

When seen for a few minutes at the Vitagraph office Mr. Duncan was all enthusiasm over his present work. He is now engaged in the "Man of Might," a serial in fifteen episodes, two reels to each. This will be finished early in January, and Mr. Duncan considers it fully equal to its predecessor, "A Fight for Millions," which has proved exceedingly popular. With John Mills playing the leading woman, opposite Mr. Duncan, who appears in the leading role.

Mr. Duncan is of the opinion that the thrilling scenes of any serial picture cannot be pre-arranged to the greatest advantage of the episode itself. He has found by experience that if pre-arranged they are always changed when the moment suggests other thrills which are better. The location in which the scenes are filmed is always a strong determining factor in such cases.

Mr. Duncan went to the east another visit sometime in January. He intends to spend a week in Chicago, during which he will visit various theatres daily, both at matinees and evenings, and make himself known to patrons by interesting talks on pictures.

This was not my first meeting with Mr. Duncan. That took place in 1912, when he was with Selig's Chicago forces. In the following year he took a Selig company to Colorado and Arizona, where western pictures were produced under his direction, with Myrtle Stedman as leading woman. He joined Vitagraph's forces in the fall of 1913 and directed pictures at the Santa Monica studios, being soon afterwards transferred to the New York office of that company, where he has remained since.

Orpheum Heroes Honored by Tablet.

Twenty-eight stars appear on the service flag of Jones, Linick & Schaefer's employees. In honor of these 28 men who have given service here, Uncle Sam's well-known firm has just had cast a handsome bronze honor roll which bears the inscription: "In honor of the Employees of Our Organization, who have Enlisted for Naval or Military Service in the World's War." The twenty-eight names are also engraved on the bronze roll, and the tablet was placed in a prominent position in the Orpheum Theatre, on State street, at the reopening of the house, Thursday, October 24, when quarantine was lifted from the houses in the Loop after the influenza epidemic.

Beneath the names is engraved the following excerpt from one of President Wilson's speeches:

"The right is more precious than peace; we shall fight for the things which we have always carried nearest our hearts. To such a task we dedicate our lives."

Select's New Offices Opened.

Fred C. Atken, manager of Chicago's Select Services, and Ben Bedford, assistant manager, were kept busy receiving the numerous callers last week at the new quarters, on the nineteenth floor of the Consumers' Building. Their cigars, the most approved brand were generously passed around and congratulations were heartily extended by every visitor.

FILM IMPORTS STILL SHOW DECREASE

Statistics Compiled by Department of Commerce Disclose Interesting Figures on Imports and Exports

I

PORTS of motion picture film, as reported by the Bureau of foreign and domestic commerce of the Department of Commerce, continue to fall off. Total imports for the first eight months of the current calendar year are slightly more than half of the imports reported for the corresponding period of 1917.

During the eight months ended with last August, our imports of sensitized but unexposed film amounted to but 19,303,323 linear feet, valued at $320,157, as compared with 46,339,432 feet, worth $807,294,976, in the same period of last year, and 19,802,296 feet, with a value of $379,735 in 1916.

Negatives also fell off considerably, but more in value than in footage, for the total for the eight months being 201,996 feet, worth $73,747, as against 476,609 feet, with a value of $287,202, in 1917, and 642,322 feet valued at $200,597, in 1916.

Imports of positive film have been falling off at the rate of a million feet a year since 1916. During the first eight months that year, the total reported was 27,467,523 feet, worth $775,836. The following year this fell to 2,292,993, with a value of $158,933, and this year the total again fell to 1,442,627 feet, worth $98,876.

Our exports of film and motion pictures also are falling off, but not at as great a rate as the imports. During the eight-month period, the shipment of unexposed film fell to $897,345 feet, valued at $943,605, against 467,810 feet, worth $901,193, in 1917, and 484,152 feet, with a value of $1,547,291, in 1916.

Shipments of exposed pictures which, during the first eight months of 1916 had amounted to 123,122,257 linear feet, valued at $5,155,936, last year dropped to 81,361,947 feet, valued at $4,363,120, and this year fell to 55,144,699 feet, worth $3,112,909.

The only country importing films this year is Australia, which, for several years, has been steadily increasing its consumption of American films. That country, during the eight months period of this year, imported 13,583 feet, with a value of $434,184, as compared with 6,219,299 feet, worth $412,813, last year, and 4,710,064 feet, valued at $354,191, in 1916.

Argentina and Brazil, new markets, are importing considerable film. During the eight months ended with August, Argentine took $103,154, worth $115,723, and Brazil 1,747,000 feet, worth $102,172.

Exports to Canada, although showing a falling off as compared with last year, still are quite considerable. This year, we shipped 2,297,889 feet, with a value of $619,741. Last year, Canadian imports increased to 9,887,102 feet, valued at $746,741, and this year fell to 8,897,517 feet, worth $651,408.

The greatest decrease reported by the bureau is in shipments to the United Kingdom. During the first eight months of 1916, we shipped 76,354,887 feet of exposed film, with a value of $3,047,781. Last year the total fell to 21,746,288 feet, worth $1,646,580, and this year again fell, reaching the low total of 11,753,870 feet, valued at $782,384.

After increasing from 7,698,938 feet, worth $193,316, in 1916, to 10,057,102 feet, valued at $254,066 last year, exports to Italy this year fell to 633,797 feet, with a value of $148,889, and at the present time no film at all is being exported to that country, indicating its elimination in the near future as a market for American film products.

Imports to France are also at a low stage, the eight-month total being 1,062,776 feet, with a value of $182,552, against 1,197,677 feet, worth 222,777, in 1917, and 14,574,519 feet, valued at $403,446 in 1916. Shipments to France during the month of August were valued at $25,000.

Exports to Newfoundland and Labrador fell off somewhat, the reduction being especially noticeable in the values, indicating that those provinces are calling for cheaper grades. The total for the first eight months of 1918 was 848,887 feet, valued at $28,567, against 1,149,600, worth $44,439 in 1917, and 1,240,000, worth $53,920 in 1916. Shipments to other, unspecified, countries also fell off somewhat, being 19,036,427 feet, worth $860,340, as compared with 22,472,788 feet, valued at $139,530 in 1917 and 12,398,840 feet, with a value of $470,867 in 1916.

C. D. Hill Serving in France.

Word has been received from a well-known exchange man who joined the American Expeditionary Forces as manager of the Indianapolis branch of General Film Company. He is now a private in the 153th Ambulance Company. Writing to W. F. Rodgers, sales manager of General, he reports, among other things, that he was lost for two days and nights in France. He was captured by a line with swollen feet. He spent one night in his shelter tent which he was carrying and another night in what he de- scribes as being able to converse with the natives with the aid of a French dictionary. Before locat- ing his company he picked up twenty other men who were probably right, which made his wanderings endurable. At the time of writing he was billeted with his company in an old chateau five stories high, containing 100 rooms.

Elliott to Help Fox in Drive.

William Fox, chairman of the Allied Theatrical, Motion Picture, and Television Committee of the United War Work Campaign, which starts its drive on November 11, has appointed Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, chairman of the Industrial Division of his committee.

Doubly Bereaved.

Henry Lubben, mailing clerk at the head office of the General Film Company in New York City, was doubly bereaved during the height of the influ- enza epidemic by the loss of his father and mother within six days. Both par- ents died in the last week of October.
THE Brentwood Film Corporation is a new organization that is planning to produce a series of feature pictures with all-star casts at the studio of the prominent Mena Lewis Corporation at 4811 Fountain Avenue.

The first picture is now well under way under the direction of King W. Vidor, and the cast includes Helen Jerome Eddy, formerly leading lady for George Beban; Pauline Curley, Winter Hall, George Nichols, Lloyd Hughes and Little Ben Alexander.

The story is "The Turn in the Road," and is concerned neither with the war, nor with sex problems, but is a vivid romance of everyday life.

Mae Marsh Arrives.

Mae Marsh, her sister Mildred and her sister-in-law, Maud Marsh, arrived in Los Angeles on October 23. They were met at the train by a number of friends, including Dorothy Gish and Constance Talmadge, with their respective mothers, and other former studio associates. Mae's trip was not altogether joyous, as production of the sister-in-law, Maud, developing a case of "flu," which caused much uneasiness and anxiety to the party, and then news reached them on the way that Mrs. Marsh had been taken to a hospital with a case of paralysis and would be unable to meet her daughters when they arrived.

Mae Marsh plans to start work on a new Goldwyn production at the Triangle studios early in November provided the closing regulations will permit.

Jennings Picture to Play Big Time.

Ernest Shipman, distributor of the Al and Frank Jennings Outlaw Films, has just completed a contract with Will T. Wyatt, manager of the Klaw & Erlanger Circuits, for a five weeks' showing of the first Jennings picture, "Pilgrim," at the Mason Opera House in Los Angeles. The picture will be presented on an elaborate scale with appropriate orchestra and choruses. Her big time contracts in large theaters all over the country are being arranged for the Jennings feature.

Missed His Party.

A dinner party given at Venice by Bert Sprotte in honor of Harold Bell Wright, author and film producer, and although all the members of the cast of "The Shepherds of the Hills" were there, Wright himself was ill and could not attend the dinner.

Actor and Wife Die of Pneumonia.

Arthur Morris Moon and his wife, Donna Drew Moon, former star in Bluebird photoplays, both died within a week of pneumonia at Helena, Montana, where they were filling a vaudeville engagement. Dr. Morris contracted the disease first and died on October 17. Just one week later Mrs. Moon passed away. She had not been told of the death of her husband. Mrs. Moon returned to her home in Los Angeles for the last three years, and had a large circle of friends among the film folk. They were each well known to both the screen and stage.

To Take Up Interrupted Business.

Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, who returned to Los Angeles because of the serious illness of Lottie Pickford, is making arrangements to take her daughter to the mountains, and as soon as Lottie is well on the way to recovery, Mrs. Pickford will return to New York to take up the arrangements of Little Mary's future activities. Lottie was operated on last Friday to relieve an abscess in one of her ears.

De Haven to Assist Chaplin.

Charles Chaplin has engaged Carter De Haven to assist him in directing a new comedy for the First National Exhibitors that was begun at the Chaplin studios the week of October 21. As is the custom with the Chaplin comedies, no announcement has been made as to the nature of the story or action of the comedy except that it will be far removed from battles and captures of the Kaiser and his retinue.

Sid Chaplin, who is making plans to produce comedies on his own account and in which he has as playboy parts, states that he will not begin production until the influenza epidemic is over.

Mary Pickford Gone Back to New York.

Mary Pickford, who hurried back to Los Angeles because of the illness of her sister Lottie, left on October 22 for the East, where she will stay and fight a suit that comes on trial on November 15, brought by Mrs. C. C. Wilkening for $103,750, which she says is due her for three years' service as Miss Pickford's adviser, manager and promoter. Miss Pickford claims that she has never had any other manager than her mother.

Keller Film to Be Surprise.

The Helen Keller film will be completed about the middle of November, it has been announced by Miss Keller's manager, and although many requests have been received as to the nature of the production, not the slightest hint has been given by producers or players as to what the story is all about. The film is intended to be a complete surprise to the public. Miss Keller's brother, Phillips Brooks Keller, in the U. S. Aviation service, is in Los Angeles on a visit to his sister, and will appear in the Keller film.

American Executive Here.

General Manager R. R. Nehls, of the American Film Company, of Chicago, arrived in Los Angeles on business affairs caused by the exigencies of this influenza epidemic, and called a meeting to be held in Los Angeles of all the West Coast officials of the American Film Company. Although Mr. Nehls has been one of the executives of the corporation for a number of years, this is... his first trip to the West Coast plant, which is located in Santa Barbara.

Series of Underworld Pictures.
William A. Sheer, who has not been seen in pictures since his work in "Regeneration," has returned to the screen. Sheer, who recently directed "Mr. Merton" has just finished playing the leading masculine role in the Bluebird feature, "Sealed Orders," opposite Fritz Brunetti. He will also be seen in a series of eight underworld stories as soon as the influenza epidemic allows work to go ahead.

L. A. Theatre Notes.
A new entrance is being planned for the Third street side of the building which houses Grauman's Theatre. The entrance will be an attractive design and will require the use of marble, tile and terra cotta.

B. C. Steele, manager of the Sym-phony Theatre, killed time during the last week by giving the workmen whom he engaged to renovate and decorate his theatre.

W. A. Bishop, one of the officials of the new California Theatre, has returned from the East.

L. S. Thuerkoff, Bluebird salesman to out-of-town exhibitors, spent his enforced vacation in Los Angeles, when he was not motoring out of Universal City.

Studio Shorts.
Mabel Van Buren was entertained at a party given in her honor by a friend in Glendale before her departure for New York. She will continue her English trip.

Belle Bennett took down the "flu" while she was in San Francisco with her husband, John Osger, who was playing an engagement with the Crane Wilbur stock company in that city. Latest report is that she is better.

Harry Carey has about a hundred tur-keys waiting for Thanksgiving on his ranch near Nevada City.

In support of Mme. Yoraks, in "The Infernal Net," will be seen W. Lawson Butler, Madame Demitri, Miss Milton Ross and Frank Whitson.

Besse Love is spending a short vac-a-tion in Rosedale Hot Springs.

Ralph Herz and Mrs. Herz have taken a house in Laurel Canyon and will spend the winter among the Hollywood film crowd.

Fatty Arbuckle has just finished the final interior scenes of "Camping" at the Lasky studios.

J. Barney Sherry, who remained with Triangle pictures in an executive capacity when produced from that organization, has gone back to the East Field and is cast to play a leading part in a forthcoming production.

Rhea Mitchell is with the Fulton Players in Oakland, Cal.

Miss Nadel, who is expected with her di-rector, Charles Marjoe, at the Lasky studio about November 17, has just finished her good work in "Old Wives for New," has been loaned by the Lasky Company to Pathé, and will appear in the support of Pannie Ward in a coming picture.

Gloria Swanson, formerly of Triangle, is playing a leader role in the new Cecil B. De Mille production "The Affairs of Anatole." She has been enjoined to do athletic stunts from aeroplanes in the ten-reel picture being made by Henry Lehrman for the Photo Company at the Clune studio.

The effect that Dorothy Dalton is going to be married is being emphatically denied by Miss Dalton. She is staying forevermore to her art, etc.

Mary Pickford has been away 1,560 photo-graphs to buyers or bonds in the recent Fourth Liberty Bond drive.

The new Horseshoe Club will play the opposite lead for Wm. Desmond in his first picture under Jesse Hampton's man-agement.

Maude Fealy, who came to Los Angeles to star in "The Little Teacher" company, decided to join the film players when her company was disbanded. The star had the "flu" close order.

A new comedy and song writer, has been added to the Fatty Arbuckle editorial staff.

Mrs. Earle has come from the East and is looking for a home in Hollywood for her bride, who could not come with him, as her mother was seriously ill.

W. E. Keefe, manager of productions at the Griffith studio, has just completed his fifth year with D. W. G. as his boss.

George Larkin is making a tour of southern California while the "flu" ban is on.

November 3 Attractions at New York Theatres

STRAND.—"Lafayette, We Come," the patriotic picture by Leonce Perrot, was the leading attraction at the Strand Theatre the week of November 3. E. J. M. and Dolores Cassinelli head the cast. The Topical Review, the Allied War Review and a new comedy were also on the program. The Venetian scene from Offenbach's " Tales of Hoffman" was given.

R IVOLI.—J. Stuart Blackton's new production, "Safe for Democracy," written by Paul Gallico, is to be the headliner at the Rivoli. Mitchell Lewis and Ruby de Remer are featured. A Van Scy comic scene called "Outdoors with Beauty" and Animated Pictorial, the Creel War Review and a Katzenjammer Kids cartoon completed the screen numbers. The Rialto Male Quartette and Gladys Rice furnished the vocal pro-gram.

RIALTO.—Mac Marsh in "Hidden Fires," a Goldwyn picture, written by J. Clarkson Miller and directed by George Irving, is to be the headliner at the Rialto. A comedy called "The Best of Enemies," the Animated Magazine and a Ford educational were also shown. W. C. Gordon and Martin Brefel were the soloists.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET.—Douglas Fairbanks in "He Comes Up Smiling," for the entire week.

Charles Simons Now at Albany.
Charles Simons, General Film Company branch manager at New Haven, Connecticut, has been transferred to a larger office of the company at Albany, N. Y., which he will manage. Mr. Si-mons had been in charge of the New Haven branch several months, and is a film man of much experience in and about New York City.

Sunday Pictures Help Drive.
The City Council of Evanston, Ill., has refused to permit the opening of motion picture theatres on Sundays, but broke the rule for "American Beauty," which was shown Sunday, October 13, as a stimulant for the local Liberty Loan drive. It proved very effective.

Vaunts An Unusually Friendly P. A.
I stuck around at the Brentwood place for quite a spell, as they say back in Missouri, because everybody was so friendly, including S. P. Trood, the press agent.

Of course, press agents are expected to be friendly, but this chap was especially so. He showed me "Jerry's pups," seven of them—all orphans. Jerry, the mother, had been poisoned just the day before. Surely there is a separate and extra hot hell for dog poisoners.

After Brentwood I dropped out to Gower and Sunset, where the Francis Ford Company was making a big scene for episode twelve of "The Silent Mystery" serial. The stage was all set for a cafe in Egypt, and "Frank" Ford himself and Rosemary Theby at one table, were doing away with real food, including an appetizing looking salad and coffee, and getting wised up to the machinations of a pair of villains, each wearing a look of running and a red fez on his head, who occupied another table near by.

Pete Gerald was helping Ford direct, and playing a part in the scene at the same time; and Valerio Olivio, Mary Garten, Jerry Ash and thirty-five or forty pieces of human atmosphere were at the tables, all helping to make the scene real. An Egyptian orchestra that looked as though it might have come in on the last boat from Cairo, was also part of that realistic scene.

There is no use talking, you've got to hand it to Francis Ford for knowing how to pull that oriental stuff.

Where the L-Ko Laughs From Come.
As soon as I could drag my feet away from the music I went across the street to the L-Ko plant, and found two companies at work.

Noel Smith was doping out a rib-tickler called "He Fiddled Into Fame" with Marvin "Fatty" Loback, who is not losing weight because of worrying over the Flu; Russ Powell, in a silk hat; Harry Griffith, Harry Mann, Phil Dunham, with a Chink mustache; Walter Stevens and Dick Smith as assistants.

Over on the other end of the lot Joe Le Brandt was staging a big scene inside of a barn, where a gang of sure-thing prize fight promoters had put up a fake fight on a community of Rubes. It was good stuff. Billy Armstrong and Eddie Boland were the pugs, and others in the comedy were Charles De Lea, Dan Crimmings, old-time circus clown, Jack Henderson, Eddie De Cols, who does a strong man act in vaudeville when he's not in the films; Owen Evans, Rube Miller, and Professor Chas. A. Millsfield (the Prof. stuff is genuine. He carries the papers to prove it). Otherwise known as Monsieur Pom-Pom, traveler, scientist, doctor of philosophy, teacher of modern and ancient language in his moments away from the studio, and owner of the only... set of educated and temperamental whiskers in the movies.

The professor, like Josh Billings’ mule, is “a most amusing cuss,” and I don’t think Joe Le Brandt would consider putting on any kind of comedy without him in the cast.

SWEET FILM DECLARED A "KNOCKOUT"
Harry Garson and Marshall Neilan Pronounce "The Unpardonable Sin" Biggest Production of the Year

Harry Garson and Marshall Neilan make no bones in declaring "The Unpardonable Sin," Major Rupert Hughes’ startling story of the Germans in Belgium, in which Blanche Sweet is starred, and which vehicle serves to bring this popular actress back to the screen after more than a year’s absence, as one of the biggest and most important productions of the year.

Mr. Garson wires: "The Unpardonable Sin' is the most wonderful picture I have ever seen. It is a great big special with a tremendous kick, a production that only comes once in a lifetime. Miss Sweet looks better than ever, and her double portrayal of the two sisters, Dimmy Parcot and Alice Parcot, will be an absolute knockout. There is no question but that the picture will have a long and successful run in New York.

And this from Marshall Neilan, who directed the picture in person: "The Unpardonable Sin' is by far the biggest and best production I have ever done. There is punch and situations one after the other from beginning to end, such as you have never seen in any other picture. 'The Unpardonable Sin' will, I am sure, create a furor.

Mr. Neilan, well known as one of the top-notch directors in the business, has certainly let down the bars of his usual conservatism, and it is predicted that he has pulled a surprise of some sort.

Negotiations are now under way with several first class legitimate houses to house "The Unpardonable Sin" for a long run, beginning about December 1. Just what theatre will be selected is not known, but will be decided upon in a few days.

The picture is in eight reels. A tremendous advertising campaign, national in its scope, is promised for this production.

Blanche Sweet plays two parts, Dimmy Parcot and sister. The sister writes from Belgium that she has become the victim of German "kultur," and is so heartbroken that she begs her sister not to look for her. Dimmy's trip from Los Angeles to Belgium is fraught with many adventures and great peril.

Wallace Beery portrays the part of Col. Klem, the German officer who has so ruthlessly mistreated the sister, and Dimmy manages to meet him and foil him later. The entire eight reels are declared to be full of power and action, with many thrills. It has the "happy ending."

Mr. Garson will show the production to the Government officials at Washington on his way from Los Angeles.

NEW EXCHANGE SYSTEM TO OPEN

Film Clearing House, Inc., Perfects Plans to Market Pictures for All Producers—Has Strong Financial Backing

TAKING advantage of the opportunity offered by the temporary closing of theatres and the consequent readjustment of the motion picture business, a new and distinct plan of distribution has been worked out by a number of New York companies. This plan, which is known as Film Clearing House, Inc., will come into operation immediately on a large scale and a permanent basis. The new exchanges will be known as film clearing houses, and will be owned and operated by Film Clearing House, Inc., a personnel and financial standing designed to insure the complete confidence of all producers and exhibitors.

Plans of Operation Complete.

Both the policy of the organization and its plan of operation were decided upon before its formation, so that it enters the field with a definite purpose and with clearly stated principles which will be rigidly adhered to from the very beginning. In each large city now recognized as a motion picture exchange, the model exchange will be opened at once. Each department of these exchanges will be carefully and expertly arranged to handle every production, whether it is an independent or a product of many large corporations. Mr. Fitch is president of Film Clearing House, Inc., and has been actively engaged for several weeks in arranging the exchange and the exchanges, and the rules governing the different offices have been worked out with this end in view.

Who the Organizers Are.

Among the men prominent in the new organization is Asahel P. Fitch, well known New York lawyer and director of many large corporations. Mr. Fitch is president of Film Clearing House, Inc., and has been actively engaged for several weeks in arranging the exchange and the exchanges, and the rules governing the different offices have been worked out with this end in view.

Col. Jacob Ruppert, whose name has become a household word in sports circles through the ownership of the Yankees of baseball fame as it is in big business through his great brewing company, is one of the board of directors; while another prominent figure on the board is that of William M. Seabury, one of the organizers and general counsel of the old Motion Picture Board of Trade, and, until recently, President of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Walter N. Seligmann, who has represented many leading film executives during his active association with the industry for many years, is one of the company's attorneys.

Although these men are probably as well known in film circles as they are in other fields of business, they decided to associate with the company the most active and efficient film men that they could find in the independent field. As a result, Frank G. Hall, supervising director of the new organization and is now starting the opening of the exchanges, which will be made ready for business at the earliest possible moment.

Producers to Have Down Town Sales Force.

The directors of the Film Clearing House, Inc., lay stress upon the following innovations in connection with the working out of their plans: The exchanges will take care of the pictures of any producer, whether a member of a group of producing companies for distribution in all parts of the country. The exchanges will only supply the services connected with the physical distribution of the pictures. No sales force will be maintained by the exchanges, the producers or groups of producers putting their bookings in charge of their own salesmen.

If all goes well with the operations of Film Clearing House, Inc., will have no producing companies of its own, neither will it have any interest in nor any affiliation with producing companies. It will maintain efficient business organizations in every territory for the handling of its transactions as to advertising matter, etc., and for the recordof bookings and making of collections for rentals, and it will supply producers and independent exchanges with the necessary data and a strict accounting of all bookings and all money is made to the owners every week.

Pathe Shows Atkins at Play.

A dramatically impressive idea of some of the effects of an air raid is given in No. 11 of the "Far Flung Battle Line," released by Pathe on November 10. It is called "British Troops in Italy," 80 Times Atkins at Right-hearted, heavy-handed play and in the grimmer work, which tries the souls of men—in the field, shot with gay flowers and Western lily pads in the front line, and after a desperate fight in the air, where shot down one of the enemy's machines, we see the destruction that this relatively small incident caused. The fighting machine is captured and brought to earth, and striking a house, the building aflame. And then the spectator wonders on seeing some of these daredevils of the skies, and they can put aside the grim shadow, which is ever at their elbows, and laugh and joke as though all the world and the war especially were a huge carnival.

Shutdown Extended One Week.

At a meeting of the producing and distributing companies of the motion picture industry held Thursday, October 31, at the offices of the National Association, 80 Times Atkins at right-hearted, heavy-handed play and in the grimmer work, which tries the souls of men—in the field, shot with gay flowers and Western lily pads in the front line, and after.S a desperate fight in the air, where shot down one of the enemy's machines, we see the destruction that this relatively small incident caused. The fighting machine is captured and brought to earth, and striking a house, the building aflame. And then the spectator wonders on seeing some of these daredevils of the skies, and they can put aside the grim shadow, which is ever at their elbows, and laugh and joke as though all the world and the war especially were a huge carnival.

Minus 100 Per Cent.

Gordon F. Fullerton, better known as "One Hundred Per Cent," Fullerton, has severed his long connection with the Jensen and Von Herberg houses to engage in foreign trade. He modestly explains that Seattle is second only to New York as a foreign trade centre, and that he is not yet going to grapple with things when commerce opens up. He sees the chance coming to do big things, and has taken his place in the line already forming on the right. Mr. Fullerton was one of the best hustlers in the motion picture field. The same energy put into commercial work should yield even better results. We are sorry to lose him, but we wish him all sorts of good luck.
FACTS AND COMMENTS

November 11 to 18 is the period selected for the United War Work Campaign. Something over $170,000,000 is required to extend and continue the great service the several War Work organizations are prosecuting along the several battle-fronts and at other points where American troops are quartered. We may safely assume that all our readers are familiar with this work in all its phases and do not have to be told what the impending campaign is for or how necessary is the money asked for. The only question before us is: how much can we raise for this great patriotic purpose? This is the time when the true measure of our patriotism is established. When we bought Liberty Bonds we simply invested our money in the surest thing on earth—American Victory. Now we are asked to give all that we can to comfort and sustain the brave boys who have made our bonds good. What is their sacrifice worth to you?

To carry on this campaign among the members of the motion picture and theatrical interests of New York William Fox has been appointed leader. What he did at the last Red Cross drive has not been forgotten, but what we will have to do this time is considerably larger in the way of a big job. That his efforts may be successful this time as it was before every bit of power and push that we can put back of him must be concentrated on the work to be done. Will you be in the ranks of the pushers?

In immediate charge of the motion picture end of the drive is Fred H. Elliott, secretary of the N. A. M. P. I., who has been appointed to handle that part of the campaign. Mr. Elliott made a good record during the Red Cross drive and should have the support of the trade. He has formulated a comprehensive plan of intensive action and has named an efficient corps of assistants covering the various motion picture activities in New York and vicinity. Details of organization for the drive in other cities have not reached us, but there will be no exception in the matter of efficiency and earnestness in this campaign. Don't forget that it BEGINS on Monday, November 11.

There is great reason for alarm in the proposal of the Senate Finance Committee to levy a tax of ten per cent. of the gross rentals of motion pictures. There are few commercial enterprises in existence that are able to carry a levy of such magnitude. Indeed, it is little short of confiscatory if, as the proposers claim, it is to be paid solely by the exchanges and not to be passed on the public. Of course we know, regardless of what the august Senators may claim, that it will have to be passed along and will be passed along to be paid ultimately in increased admission prices as all such imposts are paid. With a twenty per cent. admission tax upon all forms of amusements the Congressional tax layers should be satisfied.

The wide field of usefulness covered by the MOVING PICTURE WORLD is indicated in a letter we have lately received from Mrs. Clara Wood Derr, past president and now director of the Cleveland (O.) Cinema Club. Mrs. Wood Derr writes:

We find your magazine most helpful in our work in the Cleveland Cinema Club. It is very helpful to students of the art and industry of motion pictures. We know of no other magazine covering the ethical side of films as you do. We cannot do without it.

Four of Cleveland's Public Schools are open evenings as Community Centers, fully equipped with motion picture machines. As chairman of the Cinema Club's School Committee it is our duty to direct the choice of film-programs for motion picture performances given at these Centers.

This is but one instance of the confidence that is placed in the World by its subscribers. The day has passed when a "trade paper" may be looked upon solely as a reflection of the physical activities of the industry it serves. The educational side of moving pictures is becoming more widely recognized as the possibilities of this class of entertainment is realized by the men and women of broadening vision who are entrusted with the welfare of the masses.
Discussing the Situation

A reply to an editorial in the Moving Picture World of October 12, entitled "Conservation—But Not Stagnation," we have a letter from George Kleine which deserves printing, not merely because it adds testimony of value to the subject of the present status of the motion picture business, but because it gives our readers a sample of the careless language representative of the trade sometimes use when talking about business conditions and because it goes to prove a statement made by us at different times that our industry is frequently unfortunate in its representatives. But here's what Mr. Kleine says:

Chicago, Ill., October 26, 1918.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir,—A mild attack of the prevalent illness and pressure of urgent business made it necessary to postpone previously the editorial entitled "Conservation—But Not Stagnation," your issue, dated October 12, 1918, which is manifestly prompted by my letter to the Priorities Committee at Washington, and I assume that the reference to "A Chicago Distributor" is aimed at myself. Time is short and your space is valuable; I make this brief as possible. You say:

"We hear charges of waste and lack of economy—"Looking at the field carefully has brought us to the conclusion that the fortunes of these few are greater than the level-headed business men who are engaged in this industry—are conducting their affairs with a full knowledge of what they are doing, and doing it in a safe and sane manner, as a matter of successful business enterprises."

In answer, I will quote from the statement of Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph Company. This quotation is taken verbatim from the official report of hearings before the Joint Committee on Finance, United States Senate, page No. 594 and following; the italics are mine:

"Senator Jones.—How much has your inventory increased during last year?

"Mr. Irwin.—Our inventory has not increased, and our income is really followed. It was necessary for us, in order to show any profits at all upon which to borrow money, in some cases to pay our tax, to inventory our negatives upon their former value, the value when we were able to top our notes and carry them abroad. Our balance sheet shows our negatives put in at their former value.

"Senator Jones.—Do you mean to say that you have been making those great expenditures in piling up goods on the shelves, as you call it, when you feel that you are never going to get your money out of them?

"Mr. Irwin.—Yes, sir.

"Senator Jones.—As a business man, do you mean to tell me that you are putting your money into those things when you really believe the chances are you will never get your money out?

"Mr. Irwin.—Yes, sir.... The competition in this business is so keen that the company that does not continue its expenditures, and continue a product that is in advance of the public demand, soon have to the wayside."

I further quote from your article as follows:

"It may be safely said of every going concern in the motion picture business that its affairs are as conservatively administered as the dictates of good business demand."

In answer, I quote the following from Mr. Patrick A. Powers, of the Universal Film Company, taken from his statement before the Committee on Ways and Means at Washington in June of this year: from the official record, Record, Joint Committee on Finance, United States Senate, Ways and Means, House of Representatives, page No. 676:

"I venture to say that the production end of the business has lost money in the last year. I don't mean that every one in the business has lost money, but the production of pictures has lost money; there has been more money spent on the production of pictures than has been taken back from the public. That is due to overproduction, and money going in which did not come back through the theatres from the public."

I quote:

"The men who are guiding the affairs of the established and going concerns in this business of ours have conserved their energies and resources, protecting them from loss and injury."

In answer to this I again quote Mr. Irwin, page No. 599 of the Hearings Before the Senate Committee referred to above:

"A product, in order to hold those patrons, must be in advance of the public demand as to merit, as to artistry, as to acting, as to production, as to setting, as to stories, and, with the cost of everything increasing, the competition among ourselves is so great that no company can let up. One manufacturer was asked in a meeting with the exhibitors, "If you are losing money, why do you continue to busines?"

"Mr. Irwin.—"To have it appear in this record that you are contending that you are deliberately investing money in a thing which you deliberately believe you will never get out of, is beyond the comprehension of at least one member of the committee."

"Mr. Irwin.—Senator, we must do so or quit. May I point this out to you? If you will look at our balance sheet you will see that in many instances we have borrowed that money."

"Everyone who has as its all similar circumstances, knows that Messrs. Irwin and Powers have accurately analyzed this extraordinary business of production and distribution of moving picture films which invests money without any hope of recovery."

Recognizing this condition which was threatening the industry some time ago, I stopped continuous production. A business is presumably conducted for profit, and, while every business is subject to the same disadvantages, how a sane business man can continue pouring torrents into a well whose own or funds loaned by others, into a bottomless pit, is beyond understanding.

If the editorial ears are stuffed with cotton and the editorial eyes wear blinders, or the editorial pronounce[s] are not sincere.

Yours for the truth, wherever it hits.

GEORGE KLEINE.

Hodkinson Offers Remedy.

Another communication bearing upon the situation comes from Mr. W. W. Hodkinson, who has been heard from through these columns on other occasions. Mr. Hodkinson desires to express the following thoughts:

The motion picture industry, particularly the producing and distributing end, is suffering so much from the influenza epidemic as they are from the un-economic basis on which they are operating.

The epidemic is merely serving to bring about readjustments which the operation of economic laws would automatically bring about at a later date and probably in a more drastic and spectacular manner than any resulting from a continuation of the shut-down.

It is economically impossible for a dozen producer concerns to provide a ready occasion for production, and as a sideline to efficiently run a distributing organization that is supplied solely by their own account or such other product as is daring enough to place itself in the hands of a rival producer-distributor.

This un-economic condition results from two causes. First, pride of the producers who would prefer to fail trying to be "the whole industry" rather than succeed as a part of some really constructive organization; and, second, when necessity, such as the present conditions, proves the insufficiency of their methods, they do not trust each other enough to enable them to cooperate in any adequate manner.

It is useless to offer constructive advice and criticism to this class. They want none of it. All they want is quick profits, in many cases at the expense of the other fellow, instead of being helped and making a dollar in a constructive manner, to be divided later.

As a student of conditions in this business over a period of ten or eleven years, it is my opinion that the business only works to its advantage under pressure, and unless the present pressure is sufficient to force the distribution of the product of a half dozen or so producers into some responsible hands there is an absolute control as to methods under which the product is presented to exhibitors, rather than by the peculiar forcing tactics of the producers themselves, it is only a question of time until natural laws and the competition of larger and more powerful interests in the business will cause the disintegration and failure of some dozen and more concerns, or will cause a co-ordination of their interests according to some sane plan, so that they may exist.

Yours very truly,
W. W. Hodkinson Corporation
William W. Hodkinson, President.

We have always entertained a high regard for Mr. Hodkinson and know that he has a wide experience in the picture business, yet we fear that he will have to reform human nature to a considerable extent before he will be able to accomplish his desire. Businesses older than ours and infinitely better suited to the so-called best methods of merchandizing, have not yet brought themselves to that state of mutual confidence which Mr. Hodkinson's plan comprehends. Also, there are striking examples of the futility of attempting such mutualization in the motion picture business.

SENTIMENTAL STORIES

By Robert C. McLellan.

M ARK TWAIN hated sentiment." How often the above remark has been reiterated, frequently with a degree of solemnity which indicates that certain people must believe it to be true. Possibly at some time or other Mark Twain may have said he hated sentiment; indeed it is altogether probable that he did, for he often exercised the privilege accorded women and humorists of saying the opposite of what they mean. At any rate, every line he ever wrote was written by him as one who loved mankind, appreciated its tribulations and sought to alleviate them. He often hid his softness behind the most outrageous mirth. He delighted to shock his readers and often succeeded. "Be good and you'll be lonesome," is an example. He also painted the badness of a bad boy in sohuman a way that people were almost afraid to let their own boys read it. For instance, he had Huck Finn say, as he slipped under the flap of a circus tent: "I have no objection to paying money to get into a circus, but I don't see any use wasting it to get in."

There can be no doubting that Mark Twain was both a humorist and a sentimentalist of the right sort. He was not so obvious about it as some writers, for his public understood him and it was not necessary to be so. When he wanted the public to forget that he was or ever had been a humorist the public laughed, for he was continually handing it phrases that could only be accepted as humor and nothing else. But his account of the death of Susie, his life of Joan of Arc, his story of "The Prince and the Pauper," and almost every one of his personal letters, are full of personal feeling which almost runs riot at times.

The sentiment of Dickens is of course much more obvious. He so loved to picture the human side of life that he often yielded to the most pronounced sentimentality. He did not hesitate to be melodramatic when he chose and his deathbed scenes were not infrequent. Thackeray had a harder surface in his writings, but it is not difficult to discover frequent traces of real sentiment; "Henry Esmond" is full of them. All of the great writers had it in some measure. Mr. Howells, although he is generally accepted as a realist, is full of the milk of human kindness. His sentiment is usually found in his choice of subject matter; he gives up realism, it is true, but he reveals only sides of life that is agreeable and helpful to examine closely. Such tragedies as he pictures are the normal, acceptable tragedies of daily life, never tending to the merely sordid and depressing.

The apologists for commercialized fiction, or stories with a hard, smooth finish, in which there is no trace of genuine feeling, have little to support them. This is the ephemeral sort of thing that serves its little hour all too quickly, and then passes on, leaving no visible trace upon the public mind or heart.

Writers for the screen should never make the mistake of excluding sentiment from their creations. The success of moving pictures is largely due to the fact that they have revealed depth of feeling. They have frequently gone too far, but the impulse has been right from the beginning. They have held up human life in all its variations, they have pictured its joys and sorrows, its crumbling hopes and frustrating despair.

A revelation of sentiment in fiction and upon the screen is a direct answer to a public need. The average citizen of the world becomes schooled to the hard facts of life. He cannot wear his heart upon his sleeve, as the saying goes: he cannot tell other people his troubles, for he realizes they have enough of their own. Yet Mr. Average Citizen has plenty of imagination and sentiment in his heart and he is constantly wishing to get the other fellow's view of life. He wants to know what others would do under conditions similar to his own. He wants to know how others would bear up under his tribulations and how a man should act under given circumstances.

How is Mr. Average Citizen to find out all these things? Well, he sometimes picks up a novel, or attends willing to cooperate and drop in at a moving picture theatre. It is a grave mistake to think he is looking entirely for recreation. He is not seeking to escape from the realities of life so much as to get into closer contact with them. He expects a whole lot—he wants humor and pathos and all of the immediate states of feeling brought before him. In other words, he craves the sentimental side of life, revealed in impersonal but none the less helpful terms.

In which way does he get the most satisfaction, from the book or the play or the moving picture?

INFLUENZA EPIDEMIC WAXING

COMPREHENSIVE reports from MOVING PICTURE WORLD correspondents indicate a rapid subsidence of the epidemic feature of the plague of Spanish influenza. As a result the authorities are permitting theatres to open quite generally. Where the embargo has been lifted a great revival of business is reported. The public has shown an eagerness for entertainment that exceeds expectations, which is taken as a sign that a good season is before us. In some localities health officers are still keeping the doors closed until all danger of further epidemic shall have passed, but these conditions are not expected to last much longer. It has been a hard siege for picture men, but all have stood up well under the strain.
CANADIAN MANAGERS FAVOR STUNTS

Many Exhibitors Across the Line Fighting Shy of Lobby Displays—Believe Experience in Mechanical Stagecraft Necessary to Devise Balanced Settings

By W. M. Gladish

CANADIAN moving picture theatre managers have become wise to the value of "stunts" during recent months, generally speaking, and the better operators have been among those who have been interested, varied and full of meaning.

As a rule many of the exhibitors have been skeptical of lobby displays because the belief is held that once a theatre puts on a special stunt it becomes necessary to keep up the outside show or people will not come in to see what is on standard unless there is a lobby display to advertise it. A number of exhibitors also feel that an experience in mechanical stagecraft is necessary in order to devise properly-balanced settings or to secure a striking effect with a cheap outlay.

For these and other reasons, a number of exhibitors have been desirous to "stunt" in the literal sense of the term. There are some managers, however, who use special lobby displays regularly and who feel that there is no reason why displays cannot be used quite often. For the recent showing of "Tarzan of the Apes" at the Rialto Theatre, Toronto, Manager W. J. Stewart arranged with a nearby book store, Toronto, to make a display of cutouts of Tarzan along with a stuffed tiger. Mr. Britnell put on a sale of Tarzan books, with the result that this theatre has been filled in that connection quite often. Even more than a thousand copies of "The Jewels of Opar," the latest Tarzan story, were sold, it is stated.

Manager Sexton of the Family Theatre, a Toronto suburban theatre, started something when he arranged for the grand opening of a series of special children's pictures. The theatre was used Saturday afternoon throughout the fall and winter. He announced, through the medium of program cards, that special pictures had been booked for these performances. One of these was the serial, "The Railroad Raiders," and another is the series of Judge Brown stories, which are being shown only at the special Saturday matinees.

Laurie Puts On Guessing Competition

Manager Archie Laurie, of the Regent Theatre, Guelph, Ontario, recently conducted a stunt in connection with the showing of "The Flame of the Yukon." Before Laurie left his Guelph Theate, Montreal, he became famished for special lobby displays, and it was at the same Midway Theatre that the present manager of the Broadway Theatre, New York, was conducting a stunt. Laurie's stunts in Montreal was to fit up an automobile to resemble a large bullet to advertise the Universal serial, "The Bandit's Bride." One of the most spectacular stunts ever pulled off in Toronto was conducted by Roland Roberts for the showing of "Hell With the Kaiser" at the Regent Theatre. Using downtown housewives, Roberts became the editor and publisher of a four-page newspaper of standard size, which was all done up like a special war extra. The delivery trucks of The Daily News were used to distribute the "War Booklet," as it was called, throughout the city, a crew of men going with each truck to hand out the newspapers free of charge. On the other side they made a rush for the trucks, believing that something extraordinary had happened in Europe. The flaming headlines told, in various ways, of the showing of the feature at the theatre.

A little stunt, but one that counts, has lately been adopted by a number of exhibitors. There is a sign on the front of the theatre to announce that prospective patrons would be just in time to see the whole of the last performance of the day.

Get Results Out of a Scarp

When the manager of the Strand Theatre, Montreal, presented "My Four Years in Germany," a scrap was staged for the purpose of getting some free publicity for the newspapers, it is declared, and the trick worked. The fight was between the exchange and the theatre over admission prices, the exchange claiming that the theatre had made a job of it, and the manager declare that he was going to stand by his patrons and give them a real show for regular money. There was a threat that the matter would be taken to the courts.

Somewhat of a new departure in moving picture circles has been the arrangement for the playing of a 16-foot picture showing the processes in gold, silver and jewel manufacturing. The picture was taken for Henry Birks & Sons, jewellers of Montreal, and the company addressed a circular letter to its clients and others all over Canada regarding the picture. The offer was made that the letter could be used by admission to any theatre where the picture was being shown, and the amount to cover the one or more admissions would be paid by the company upon the receipt of an order from a patron of the theatre.

A next stunt was pulled off by the Dominion Theatre, Winnipeg, when an advertisement in local papers consisted of a statement of commendation for the Province Theatre, a rival house, which had just been reopened after being remodelled.

Children Shout for Cloakey

Manager Cloakey of the Allen Theatre, Toronto, has made a practice of putting on some stunt every six months. To-day special children's performances for rides in a sightseeing street car which he charters to carry advertising banners from one end of the city to the other was one of the trips of the theatre manage, of course, to make enough noise to attract all kinds of attention.

Long ago the Rose Theatre, Regina, Sask., distributed "Rose Theatre Book Covers" to children at a special children's performance. This was just before the reopening of the theatre and the book covers are now being used freely to protect school books. The covers advertise the theatre and contain coupons.

John Arthur, orchestra director of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, pulled off an inside stunt in connection with the playing of "The Rainbow." The house was darkened, and gradually across the front of the drop appeared a colored rainbow—just as the orchestra tooled up the stairs of the piece. Mr. Arthur also arranged for the playing of some martial air as a prelude to the news weeklies, the introductory piece leading right into the showing of the picture in which they believed him to be a godmother for them.

Manager James Cragg, of the Oakwood Theatre, Toronto, participated in a project for making and posting a placard which sold him a lot of tickets, created considerable new business and advertised his theatre throughout the city. The popularity issue preceded the making of the picture, which was "all action and no acting," and the popularity of the patron depended upon the number of tickets he or she sold for the theatre. The picture was unnamed when shown, and then followed another struggle for the choosing of the title, the prize for which was a "screen test," which the manager will give the theatre with the name of the winner.

Mr. Piton, manager of the Globe Theatre, Toronto, made use of an extra projection making and postcard which sold parts of a current attraction on a small transparent screen in the front window, so that people on the street could get an idea of what was going on inside. For this presentation the film was reversed so that it could be read properly on the opposite side.

PUTS ON SIX CHAPLINS IN A WEEK

Manager Herb Jennings of the Strand Theatre, Ottawa, was probably the first exhibitor to stage a special week's showing of pictures in which one star was featured. This was done when he was in charge of the Mary Pickford Theatre, Toronto, when he presented six different Chaplins during the one week. This was followed up later when the Carlton Theatre held a week of Chaplins. The feature consisted of six different Pickford pictures were presented.

The anniversary of the opening of a theatre always presents an opportunity for a special event, and such an occasion was arranged by Manager Mills, of the Loew Theatrical in Montreal, for the week of November 18, a special bill will be presented.

The first run of "The Still Alarm" at the Rialto Theatre, Toronto, Manager W. A. Balie, of the Cum-Bac Theatre, Toronto, made an unusual contract with the Toronto Railway Company when he secured an arrangement whereby all cars on the Dufferin route, which pass the theatre, carry signs on the tender advertising current attractions at the house.

The variety of these signs is wide. Some bear messages of a little old and others are brand new. Maybe they will give other exhibitors an idea or two for special advertising.

Theatre Business Show and the EXHIBITOR

Predigested Food For the Live Mailin List and Facilities for Printing One's Own House Organ

At the business show held at the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory in New York during the week of October 21 were exhibited several devices which would have interested the exhibitor proprietor of a mailing list if the manufacturers of said devices had them. Many mailers were drawn into their confidence and invited their presence to inspect the goods and become acquainted with the convenience of possessing them. The exhibit of the Adressograph Company at the 501 West Van Buren street, Chicago, showed two models of addressing machines known as H-2 and H-3. Both of these machines can be placed so that they expand at the speed of from one thousand to two thousand an hour, and may also be used to insert names and addresses in form letters. The difference between the two models lies in the ability of H-3 automatically to feed the stencil plates instead of relying upon the operator to shift them by hand.

The stencils, when filed the same as index cards, constitute a record list which may be consulted at any time.

To those who have taken the time to study the stenciling machine shown by the Rapid Addressing Machine Company, of 32 West Twenty-third street, New York, will appeal. This model, known as the "Sargent Four," and which may be placed upon any desk or table, operates at a speed of from twelve to eighteen hundred addresses an hour, and occupies a space of 17 by 24 inches. The stencil for use with this machine may be made by any stenographer with the ordinary office typewriter.

Our concern, Epes W. Sargent, has shown at the right time what the garden variety of printer will do to an exhibitor's cherished copy. Still, those awful examples actually came through in time to be edited, and it hasn't been able to reproduce them. But think of the poor exhibitor who wants to send out an alluring invitation for his patrons to come and inspect Charlie Chaplin's "The Immolator." Mary Pickford's smile or pretty nearly the entire scene of Annette Kellermann, and finds that the boss has gone fishing or the composition has enlisted. And the show coming off tomorrow night!

If anyone who had had one such experience had investigated the duplicating devices which blossomed at the business show he would have appreciated the theatre's building, 1254 West Forty-second street, New York, showed a duplicator with which a large batch of form letters could be produced from a typewritten stencil in a short order.

If one wishes to combine the ability to issue process letter announcements with that to turn out real printed matter illustrated with black and white on the fire job on his own premises—something which will appeal to the larger houses—the Multigraph, exhibited by the Multigraph Company, 2731 Market street, Cleveland, fills the bill. With the Multigraph Senior one may issue an illustrated house organ in colors without going near the print shop.

Changes in FOX OFFICE

Several changes are being made in the offices of the Film Fox Corporation in the midst of the building, 1254 West Forty-second street. Partitions are being torn out, departments are being shifted, and office space is being rearranged with a view to taking care of the growth of several additional departments.

The offices of the New York exchange have been extended to include most of the reception space on the seventh floor. The foreman of this department has been growing so rapidly that it has moved three times within a year, is now more conveniently and commodiously quartered in office 31b.

The exchange, "Salome" headquarters have been moved, and the auditing department has taken over the entire tenth floor.

During the last week all carpets and rugs through the Fox offices have been taken up and given a thorough cleaning as a precaution against the present fire prevention day, was observed by the overhauling of offices and desks, and the removal, from the premises of all waste material.

Changes in Atlanta Offices

A. C. Bamberg has resigned as manager of the Triangle office in Atlanta. He was replaced by Mr. Pratt, of Boston.

James V. Allan has resigned from the George Kleine System to accept a position with the First National in New York, and was succeeded at the Atlanta office by J. B. Wilbanks, who was former assistant manager of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, handling the Paramount—Artcraft pictures.

Mundusfilm Company Buys First National Subjects

WHAT is believed to be one of the largest single transactions in the recent foreign rights of American screen productions was consummated last week by Sidney Garrett, president of the J. Frank Brockliss Company, and Charles Schuepbach, head of the Mundusfilm Company of Paris. The transaction involves the purchase of the productions of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, excluding the Chaplin specials, for France, Switzerland, Holland, Italy, Greece, Egypt, the French Colonies and the Balkans.

Mr. Garrett, as the American executive of the Mundusfilm, made the purchase through David P. Howells, who controls the foreign rights of the First National. The acquisition of such large and foreign rights gives Mr. Garrett a strong position in the foreign market. In addition to the First National product Mr. Garrett has purchased several of the Chaplin specials, the Dollar Chaplin Comedies, for France and Switzerland; "The Whip," "The Barrier," "The Bar Sinister," "Today," "The Mad Lover," "Lest We Forget," "The Cold Deck" and others of like calibre.

Giegerich at Work in Hollywood

Charles C. Giegerich, well known in newspaper and motion picture circles, has been appointed as publicity representative for Vitagraph at the company's studio in Hollywood, and has already taken up his duties there.

This is Mr. Giegerich's second affiliation with Vitagraph, he having been the first publicity director of Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., at the time of its formation in 1915. Subsequently he was assistant manager of the motion picture department of the Morning Telegraph, and has been connected with the Pathe publicity department, the Motion Picture Story Magazine and Universal.

Mr. Giegerich acted as manager for Lee Keener, who took a lecture tour of Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, who subsequently appeared as the star in Vitagraph's special production of "Over There," and was foreign rights representative and road manager for Lieutenant Pat O'Brien, the aviator who escaped from Germany after leaving a train in transit.

Allied Metals Congress at Milwaukee

At the Allied Metals Congress held at the Auditorium, Milwaukee, September 7-12, sponsored by the Rohrer-Fohrer Film Mfg. Co. maintained a special operating booth, where industrial, educational and sales films were exhibited throughout the day. Frank Fowler, of this company, showed five films during the day.

The booth was in charge of Messrs. Calvert, Tobin, Anderson, and Mehnke, of the Rohrterhaker organization, who were generally patronized all through the week.

The American Institute of Mining Engineers, the American Foundrymen's Association and the American Casting Association were fully represented at the Congress, and exclusive moving picture privileges were granted the Rohrer-Fohrer plant.

Billings.

THERE are two picture theatres near where we sleep. One runs itself and the other is managed by a good business and the other, a better built house, does little better than pay expenses, apparently. One carries a daily program and the other gets a few out now and then. We pass both houses every morning between seven and eight o'clock. If it is in the middle of the week one house has a banner giving the week’s program. Two three sheet boards carry the paper for the preceding day stilllettered “today.” The banner often does not go up until Tuesday. Sometimes it is Wednesday. The other house has a three space banner with the three big attractions lettered. That banner goes up during the last show Saturday night and every night, before the house is closed, the paper for the next day pasted and when the grill is shut for the night the boards are so placed that they can be seen by the people hurrying to their trains, and the people know that “today” means the coming evening and not last night. We have a little thing to paste the paper promptly, but it helps to make a difference of several hundred dollars in the takings of the two houses each month. We’ve spoken to a number of our neighbors and they all agree that they do not care what they buy for the place not for the other because one is always live and the other is dead until just before the matine. All the chance to get the early business men, when they have come home, and to catch the matinee business of the women shoppers is lost by one house — lost to the other theatre. Keep your paper right up to the minute. Paste the paper for tomorrow so that the final night house can see it on the way out.

McCormick and the War.

It has been a long time since S. Barrett McCormick, of the Circle at Indianapolis, Ind., has sent anything in, but he shipped along a whole batch the other day, and all we ask is that it dates back some weeks, but it is interesting to note his handling of the war releases. Here are some of his displays for “Pershing’s Crusaders.” To use them all would take too much space, for he used everything from two to six. He had a five nines for “Pershing’s Crusaders.” Note the proportion of eight and six point type talk.

A five nines for “Pershing’s Crusaders.” Note the proportion of eight and six point type talk.

selling talk, and yet he used only three lines of eight point — to get them well started and then cut down to a six to get it all in. He knew that to run all six would probably keep many readers away, so he gets them with the eight point and when they are engrossed, he cuts down to the six and they finish it off, anyway. That is a little trick worth while remembering if you want to run a heavy bank of talk. Get them started on an easy face and they will keep on going where the chance reader might refuse to look over the text were it all in the smaller face. The problem in advertising is to see that it seems to have been a three nines and we reproduce two good examples of this style. That on the left is unusually good with its suggestion of news straight from the front. Here, as in all of the displays, there is no repeat to the text. Each bank is different from the others. The same suggestion may be carried in two places, but the wording in entirely different. In one display the film is hooked up with the idea that you may see one you know in the film, and the opening sentence reads “Just like a letter from somewhere in France,” which works in with the

A pair of three and a half inch double column spaces.

McCormick signature shows. We have yet to see a layout where that signature does not become a part of the display and yet seems to be a special design. Both of these texts make appeal to the patriotic pride we feel in the accomplishments of the Americans abroad and capitalizes the essence of the releases. He knows that it is the function of the Division of Films to arouse patriotism, and he knows that to do this will bring him the largest returns, as well, so he plays upon our honest pride. It will be noted that in all this advertising he carries also the title of a comedy and a special musical novelty. Some of his Saturday displays were five nines, giving him plenty of space for

A five fulls and a four fulls for the opening and the previous day.

This marks a difference in the thought, for the italic deals with the sentiment inspired by the film and the Roman tells just what the film is and what it shows. This is a nice distinction. The very type face suggests the change in emphasis and takes the reader from the idea to the practical. It is one of those little things which make the McCormick spaces worth studying, even if you cannot afford the same generous spaces. You can at least put into practice the ideas he originated, if on a smaller scale. The last display is for the more recent engagement of "Italy's Flaming Front." The latter is a three-fifteens in a ten and a five also shown. This was hooked up with a Fairbanks comedy, but the bulk of the display goes to the war picture since he knows that Fairbanks will look out for himself if his name and play are mentioned. In the larger display there is even more talk for the picture than for the Pershing film. More is needed, save in the Italian section. You do not have to talk much about the troops on the Western front, but in spite of the splendid work the Italians are doing, they get less space than and need more announcement when the Italian pictures are shown. This should not be so, but as long as the correspondents stay with the American troops the bulk of the stories coming over will deal with the engagements in France. We have a tendency to think, and he has been to unusual pains to make his copy snappy and to hook up the Italian pictures with the Devil Dogs and other things that affix the Hun's worse than cooties.

That German Text.
The German text warning to keep away from a certain theatre because of a propaganda film, the type which has already been given, has been very generally taken up by exhibitors. The warning is printed in German type on two of the three folds, with a cut for "The Prussian Cur" on the third section. It would be better to use merely the upper half of the front page text which reads:

Warning
By His Imperial Majesty Kaiser Wilhelm to his loyal subjects residing in and about the City of Detroit.
This should be sufficient to get them to read the main text, but the house adds the full facts with house name, play title and date. All this would be more deeply impressed if the reader had to puzzle through the German text inside. As it stands, many may not open the sheet, and so lose the full effect.

Paramount's Liberty Loan Advertisement.
Study it up. Personally it seems to us to be a lot of words and a little argument. It's all in the point of view.

Different.
Don't just say that you are a manager. Be one.

The Way to Get Help.
If your exchanges will not get advertising material to you, write the home office, and if the general press man cannot help you, get up to the Big Boss himself. Someone in each film company is interested in the sale of its films. Find him.

Simpler.
The Theatorum, Lewiston, Idaho, found a simpler way to advertise "Say Young Fellow." Instead of having a dummy newspaper, they merely lettered part of an ordinary sheet with the title and name, tucked on a coarse screen half fold, and got the same effect with less art work to pay for. And to make certain that it would be seen, they took four seventeens for the space. The idea does not work well in too small a space but they took more than they really needed. The selling talk was added in 18 point bold in a panel below the cut.

Might Try This.
The Picture Play News, Rochester, N. Y., is running a special department for "one dollar specials" from the merchants. If you run a program in a small town and want to make the most of it, read, print the dollar specials that give more than normal value, arrange to get the only publication, and the women will fight for your programs, and will have to read some of your talk if you run liners for the plays. Make the advertising rates attractive. It might even pay to run these specials free, insisting that unusual value must be given.

Seven-Eighths.
Sometimes you can get as much as a full page without buying the entire page. Levy's Orpheum, Seattle, took but seven-eighths of the space. This is not always the best way, but the effect is just as good and the cost is much less.
Manufacturers’ Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be reviewed unless the manufacturer has been given notice of the proposed review. This notice has been repeatedly given to all manufacturers of apparatus, and it is the policy of this department to regard such notice as a tacit consent for the unreserved criticism of the apparatus reviewed. Any manufacturer who desires to have his apparatus reviewed must write to the editor and make his apparatus available for the test. If the apparatus is not received, it will be assumed that the manufacturer has no objection to the publication of the results of the test.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on United States Stationery can be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are ready and printed in next booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet will contain approximately 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every question, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you; cannot answer without a lot of study.

A Far Better Name.

Might I, with all unkindness of spirit, suggest to our International a change of name, which would be better for the better, concerning the name or title of the organization? As it now is we have the spectacle of a title which is not only of such length as to be cumbersome, and perhaps even a wee bit absurd, also it is one with which there is an all and sundry that a goodly proportion of its membership has no standing or ambition of that of the more operation of a machine.

This department suggests that the adoption of a new title, the International Association of Projectionist-Specialists of the United States and Canada, which I think you will agree is quite lengthy. The proposed one is: "International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada," which I would add the qualification that "stage" improvement, would not in the least affect the stage employee end of things, but would make of men that of the mere operation. It gives the removing a portion of its present unwieldly length, at the same time suggesting something beyond mere machine operation for the "operator" contingent. Let us place the present title and the suggested one together for comparison.

The Old, Old Question.

Westley Trout, Arkansas. City, Arkansas, is engaged in an argument with his manager as to speed of projection. He says, in part:

Well, Brother Richardson, just a few lines with regard to speed of projection, concerning which my manager and I have indulged in a somewhat heated argument. He says his music rolls call for 16 to 18 minutes (per reel, preferably), and I say that the music rolls have nothing to do with speed of projection. The manager is at the top of his form and says that the music managers who make no claim to knowledge of practical projection, under the contract of telling their projectionist, who is presumed to know his business (else why is he employed?) and who is presumed to know the whole thing, that the music will be in place for each picture and to each scene thereof, at what speed a film should be inspected.

I propose to leave it to you, Brother Richardson, to settle the argument, but this is flat, viz: I will not overpaced my projection for any manager or exhibitor. If overspeeding is demanded there should be who will accommodate. I suppose, but I won't. This is not said merely for effect. It is a statement of fact. I have not given any regard for the property intrusted to my care, as well as for the work of the artists who is intrusted for a fair interpretation of the scene. I do not believe that any real projectionist will ruin his work, and the work of the producer and artist in order to accommodate the length of a music roll, or anything else.

Your manager, who doubtless means well, does not quite grasp the whole significance of his order to accommodate the film to the music roll, should carefully consider a few points. Let him ask himself which he pays the big money for, the firm service or the music roll. Gauged by that standard, which is of the greater importance, the correct interpretation of the music roll or the film story? We have gone over this matter so very many times that repetition becomes stale, still here it is once more: The artist is presumed to know precisely how to get the best effect into a scene. He is or she is supposed, at a death bed. Now people around a death bed do not move like animated jumping jacks. Except on these occasions when they are fitted out in their suits. The death bed scene we have under consideration, let us assume, played by one of our best artists, and being actually more in one month, because he or she knows his or her business, than friend theatre manager, managers. The scene may be acted by this artist and is "shot" by the cameraman at, we will assume, 65 feet per minute. So far so good. If the scene is projected on the screen at exactly 65 feet per minute we shall get an exact reproduction of the scene as it was enacted by our artist who performed in one month. But, ask how is the man to know how fast any given scene was taken? A very pertinent question, but as the artist varies widely. There is but one way, viz: the governing of speed so that naturalness of action of the picture is the increased. That is accomplished. The probability of doing this marks one vast difference between the "operator" and the projectionist. It is this on the one side of a theatre, and the "trade" class, and makes of it an art or a profession. Almost any fool can operate a machine, but at least, splice a film and trim a lamp, but it requires brains and real ability to interpret the art of high-class actors in such a way that the original scene will lose none of its value. But it is so surprising that your manager will consider the time of rendering in the film as being of greater importance than the time of rendering a reel of film when producers themselves have not produced the most astounding density and almost unbelievable apathy on this subject. They have almost sweat blood to protect a product away that the last minute detail, but have seemingly cared not one tinker's dam for its correct reproduction on the screen. I have witnessed Mary Pickford in the role of a story in a scene like a comet gone mad. I have seen ordinary stock automobiles make at least one hundred miles an hour; I have seen ordinary plug horses trot not less than sixty miles an hour; I have heard in won- der. I have seen the latest in one of the church and shot the coffin into the hearse like throwing a hore to a dog; I have seen Annette Kellermans swim at the very least twenty miles an hour. Yes, verily I have seen some marvelous things done to high-class actors, to dumb animals and to other things on the screen. And I have viewed these various things, knowing that a good manager also viewed them, without seemingly feeling a fraction of the effect it was making a monkey out of the whole thing, to say nothing of adding dollars per day to his overhead expense through physical damage to films and machinery.

I have at times wondered if producers were not getting their money's worth, supporting this department in its effort to obliterate this evil through knowledge of the fact that overspeeding, while it kills the artistic effect of their productions, does not make them film pieces with great speed, and you know the more films there are destroyed the more friend producer sells. Mind you, I am making no accusations, but in searching for reasons for lack of active support from the manager, I can see which are at all reasonable.

Overload Causes Trouble.

Wm. H. Webb, Jr., Bell Buckle, Tennes, ese, presents the following:

We have just purchased a new Powers 6-B motor, equipped with 220-volt motor. We find the motor will not pull the machine when it is run on 220 volts and when run on 240 volts and 220 volts. We can run the motors, but the motor pulls it at a fair speed, but with film in and arc burning it drops to 46 or 47 revolutions of the motor per minute. We have the motor geared to its maximum speed. Also we are on the lights in building because of this and we have the trouble with the current. We are at the end of a long line of wire (3-wire system), and are connected to the middle and right-hand wire. Would the troubles be corrected if the motor were connected in the middle wire and left-hand wire? Leaving house lights on other side? Street wires are not in good condition, insulation hanging in shreds from the wires, at many points. Any suggestions will be appreciated.

There are three possible reasons for your trouble, viz: an overloaded meter, overloaded generators or overloaded lines. Most likely it is due to the latter. To determine the matter, cut out the meter for a few moments by attaching short wires to cut around it, as per sketch. If your house lights burn out, and the motor holds up in speed when arc is on, that settles it. The meter is too small. If it is, and you continue running on that way, it will most likely eventually burn out, whereupon the power company may try to make you pay for the current used. Remove the connections immediately after test, as with them on the meter would not register. If you find the meter is good at fault, then it is resistance to overloaded lines, or else overloaded generators, which causes high voltage drop. You would find that instead of 220 volts you would have only 120 volts, which is serious pressure. The best way to answer your query as to connecting motor to other side is to test the correct wiring if you use both sides. Disconnect the motor wire connecting to OUTSIDE wire and connect it to the other OUTSIDE wire temporarily. That will indicate the correct wiring if you use both sides. However, it is necessary that you consult the power company before making any change. In any case the one side, and most likely the generators are both loaded to the limit, in which case it is quite possible that the current load would have serious results. Changing the motor itself to other side, however, will have no appreciable effect because the energy it consumes is negligible.

New Deal in Chicago.

Recently it was our privilege to meet Brother Richard Green, second vice-president of I. A. T. E. & M. P. M. O., at headquarters, New York City. Friend Green is also president Chicago Local Union 110, of which the editor is a member. We were much interested in learning the facts concerning Local 110, concerning which many rumors have been spread.

Brother Green enjoys the confidence of his colleagues at International headquarters, and his word we may, we feel, rely upon. He tells me that 110 is now in first-class shape, with the slate wiped clean and everything running smoothly. Past records are to be forgotten, and the local will live for the future. He gives to the editor the most cordial invitation to visit 110 at any time. Tommy Malloy is, he informs me, still business agent, and is making good; also favorable mention was made of Brother Fred Havili. You cannot imagine what a relief it was to receive this good report from 110, and from a source upon which we feel we may rely. May the good work go on.

The Evolution of Picture Music

Is the Result of Conscientious Effort

Part II.

At the time the exhibitors began putting in small orchestras, the famous song-slide made its debut. At first, a soloist would sing the words printed on a slide as the piece de résistance of the show. This proved novel and became a box office attraction; the singer's name, photograph, and song prominently placed all over the lobby. Remember that this novelty never exceeded three feet in depth and everything could be plainly seen from the street by passersby.

A better form of song-slide shortly came into vogue, which showed scenes from the big moments of the song, and these pictures were interspersed regularly with the words as sung. Better singers were employed and the interest in this added feature was universally popular. Every picture went to the picture shows, for the singer frequently went out and sang, accompanied, to draw the patrons. The "Ballyhoo" was still retained, and he went into the show, introducing the song to the crowd in the same fashion as at a circus when the bearded lady was presented.

The idea of a "Prophet not without honor save in his own country" was carried to extremes in the "barking" and yelling. A singer was introduced as "Professor Hoozis, the famous baritone from Salt Lake, the greatest singer of the decade," fancying himself to be their next-door neighbor, and lengthy explanations followed. This unsavory method of advertising was countenanced and upheld by the best showmen with the fallacious idea that it was the only means of procuring results. They could not see any other angle at the time, but in less than a year, they were loudly proclaiming the singer as "local talent." The song-slide faded—not for lack of merit—but because it was overdone, out by better and longer pictures. Two and three reels appeared in the film exchanges. These took up time and the singer was no longer needed to fill up the performances. The theatres were growing small and the films became longer. It was necessary to show a certain number of performances a day to pay the overhead. Thus, there was forced upon the exhibitor, the running of continuous performances. It worked well from an artistic and the circus aspect of the side-show slipped away. With it went the "Ballyhoo." The picture business was becoming legitimized, and more cultured people began to drift into a "movie," first, out of curiosity, and second, because there was a real form of entertainment, convenient as to hours, and cheap in price. There was also a noticable transition in the music, both in the quality and the quantity. The scenes were fitted in consecutive order, and more or less accurately did they portray the emotions depicted. Real musicians saw the possibilities of the new field for wider endeavor and greater remuneration.

In many cases, the trio gave place to a "Quad," essentially composed of five or six pieces, and the admission was raised five cents.

Things were going fine for the exhibitor. He saw a fortune in the business of presenting pictures and so did many who were not showmen. "Movie" shows sprang up like mushrooms. Every few weeks one could find a little screen the size of the palm of his hand with its line of pictures "now showing."

There was a call for "talking moving pictures," so the progressive exhibitor proceeded to give a talk. A company of would-be actors and actresses were engaged and placed behind the screen. They spoke a dialogue which was supposed to convey the thought behind the action in the photograph; and, as an added feature, by watching the lips of the screen stars, they made a commendable job of it. This was found too expensive for the small theatres, but, having begun it, they attempted to do it cheaper by engaging one with a gift of mimicry to take all the roles. This wasn't until the talker ran out of ideas. When he began to repeat the same dialogue for different pictures, and allowed the heroine to assume the deep growing voice of the villain, it was all wrong, and "talking moving pictures" forthwith died suddenly.

During this experiment in making pictures into plays, the music was kept silent, as it interfered with the clearness of enunciation, especially as the talker had to project his voice through a muslin or canvas screen. This delayed the progressive growth of picture music for a time, but in the end proved a blessing. Patrons were led to a deeper appreciation of picture music through its absence, and when it returned the welcome was given an enthusiastic reception.

Orchestras were enlarged everywhere and a few singers were brought in to sing without song-slides. Needless to say, the mushroom crop of exhibitors died a natural death under the hot sun of competition and the fittest only survived. These enlarged their theatres and began to pay close attention to the selection of a good musical tie-in for the music. In many cases, the orchestra leader was requested to allow the first show to proceed in silence, while he chose the next correct selection to play for the following performance.

This method, devised for musical efficiency, proved a boomerang upon the box office receipts. Nobody wanted to see the first show, and the loss was keenly felt when the exhibitor was forced to "turn out" the evening. He called upon the exchange for help, asking that his pictures for the day be delivered early enough in the morning to insure a pre-viewing by his musical director. The exchange could not comply with his request owing to the uncertainty of transportation facilities, and the exhibitor was compelled to do some of the planning of the early fitting of his pictures.

Believing that any kind of music would do for the first performance, he arranged with the orchestra leader to play something while he picked something else. Of course, this proved no improvement on the old plan and again he sought the exchange. Looking about for relief, the eyes of the exhibitor fell upon the church organ. He noted the ease with which the organist improvised; he saw the publicity value of an organ installation; and he believed it to be the solution of his difficulties in picture fitting.

Only a few could afford a church organ, and the cost of employing an organist nearly bankrupted many of these. It is unnecessary to point out the difficulties of picture playing had been swept away, but, because organists knew nothing of picture fitting, the trouble of the showman began anew. It was necessary to have some advance data regarding the picture, with some suggestions as to its musical requirements.

From all over the country, producers and exhibitors began to send their suggestions, which was a great help. The exchange would send a writer to get the music for the pictures, and the showman would get his turtles, and the music would be placed on the sheet.

This brought forth what was called a "dope sheet," being a list of the titles and the "dope" on the music. Later it became a cue sheet or a musical suggestion synopsis, which proved a real boon to the troubled musicians in the myriads of small towns and cities.

At first, the information gleaned from these cue sheets was meager in the extreme and frequently misled the leader in his choice of suitable musical material. There was nothing but a cue and its suggested number. If that piece was not in his library, the musician was as much a loss as ever. Nothing was said concerning the character of the picture, its atmosphere or direct cues, and in view of the fact that features had begun to appear in five reels, the plight of the orchestral leader was pitiable.

Gradually the cue sheets improved in their service, but even at this time (1918) there are film companies distributing cue sheets that are worthless for the practical purposes of the leader or organist.

"Yankee Doodle" Origin in Much Doubt.

Probably throughout the length and breadth of the nation there are no more deadly insane and meaningless words than those which have been given a libelous and baneful edification in the annals of music by the title "Yankee Doodle." The really amazing feature of the question with its undisputable fact that the air is still popular, although we are seldom tortured with the offensiveness of the refrain.

The tune has been claimed by several nations as belonging to them exclusively. One authority states that it is an old vintage song of Southern France, and in Holland, where "as much buttermilk as they could drink and a tenth of the grain" became a household word, they were accustomed to enliven the tedium of labor by singing this same tune to words and music.

The American Secretary of Legation in Madrid in 1855 writes: "Our national air certainly has its origin in the music of the Vicereign. The first strains are identical with those of brave old Bisseay." After the advent of Cromwell into the life of England, the melody was sung by the cavaliers and court hangmen in ridicule of Cromwell, who, it is claimed, rode around London on his horse with his white plume fastened into a sort of knot which someone dubbed a "Maeace." The tune first appeared in this country in 1755. General Braddock, of the British Army, was assembling the colonists near Albany, and an attack was made by the French and Indians at Forts Niagara and Frondena. The Continentals appeared in the fashions covering period of two hundred years, and their arms were quite as quaint. The martial band, to which they awkwardly tried to play, was played air familiar to the grandparent of the British soldiers. Our ancestors have become farmers, and have lost the music of war and the world's fashions.

The British regimental sergeant was somewhat of a wit and a musical genius. He is remembered today by the motley crowd of new recruits. As they marched into view and were contrasted with the handsomely uniformed and orderly soldiers, the picture called to the mind of the gentleman the similar distinction between Cromwell and the court dandies, and he planned a joke on the newcomers.

He hastily scribbled the notes of "Yankee Doodle," wrote below them the absurd words which were in vogue in Cromwell's day, and passed them on to the uncouth members of the Continental Army of England. The band quickly caught the simple tune, and soon it sounded through the camp, the great amusement of the Britshers, who were not slow to see the application of the satire.

Was the humor of the situation prophetic of the phrase that "He who laughs last, laughs best"? It would seem probable, for twenty-five years later Lord Cobham gave the流行的 "Yankee Doodle" to the same Continentals to surrender his sword and his army. And he marched to the strains of the "Yankee Doodle," and it is said that the custom to have the regimental bands of a surrendering army play any music chosen by the conquerors could not be observed, as the band of Hessians was to repay old scores was not to be overlooked nor neglected.

It resolved itself into a simple problem in the Revolutionary War, when the line of Charles, our ancestors were to the equally lawless oppressors of us, who go right through the Revolutionary Song, that autocracy had made to deride the upholders of political and social order. The British played while paving the way to greater victories built on the same principles.

Henry Clay and John Quincy Adams met the British representative at Ghent to arrange the final details and sign the treaty of peace. Theburghers of the town were proud that the event was to take place in their town, and they proposed a serenade to the two embassies. They knew the English Nation play a large part of America. They referred the matter to their representatives. Neither gentlemen could remember the tune. Mr. Clay said he knew the chief national melody was called "Yankee Doodle." At last, after vainly attempting to recall the name or find a copy of his colored body-servant and explained the situation to him. The boy at once whistled the music, it was cleared, harmonized, copied, and used for the purpose as desired.

That musically inclined colored boy furnished Europe with the first transcription of the music as an American National Song.

Published by Hunsingzer & Dilworth

New York

The lyrics of this song hit are by J. Will Callahan, author of the famous "Smiles." The appeal is irresistible and great was the promise of it being immensely popular.

Q. I have been a reader of the Moving Picture World for many years, and find your new department very interesting. I am not connected with the film industry, being only a fan. I wish to secure the incidental music for "Hearts of the World" and "Intolerance" (both musical). Can you give me the necessary information?

A. We are pleased that you have liked the music in our department. A piano score for either "Hearts of the World" or "Intolerance" is in your possession. If you are interested in other music, we advise you to write to Belwin, Inc., Columbia Theatre Building, New York City. They will send you a catalogue of such music and the prices of the same.

Q. Can you tell me where I may obtain a list of musical clubs and information about prominent musicians in this city?

A. There is a book published once a year which will give you the information you desire. It is called "The Musical Blue Book of America," and is obtainable at the publishers, Musical Blue Book Corporation, 102 West Fortieth street, New York City.

Q. I wish to attend a free school where educational methods and languages can be learned. Do you know of such a school in New York City?

A. E. D. Petri has charge of such a school in the Metropolitan Opera House. If you address the above gentleman at the Metropolitan, you will receive the necessary information. Enough French and Italian are taught to enable the pupils to use those languages in the world. Of course one must have a good voice to be considered as an applicant.

Q. I have written several songs which I believe have merit. Will you kindly tell me where I can dispose of them or where I can have them set to music and put on the market?

A. There is always a demand for excellent lyrics, doubtless because so little of the vast quantities written have any merit whatever. If you know or your friends are in a position to judge your verses, as the opinions are bound to be colored by the personal interest. Just now, the song publishers and great artists are deluged with poems; so much so in fact that many of them have given out they will not look over any more manuscripts. It is not intended to discourage any undiscovered genius, but to save you from a disillusionment that is practically certain. After all this, if you are sure you belong to the elect and rare, to send us what you consider your masterpiece, we shall be glad to help you in any way possible.

Revival of the Old-Time Chantey Song.

A hundred years ago, when American shipping was at its height, the seven seas, the sailors before the mast sang their chantey songs as they pulled on the ropes or turned the windlasses. Many of these chanties were regarded as an aid to man power. They might be sentimental or ribald—more often the words were as ungodly as the men that sang them—but they smacked of the salt sea, they promoted good fellowship among the men, and they were an organizing influence. Those days are coming back. Not only have the inspiration and the spirit of the old chantey songs been recognized by the War and Navy departments, but to further it on board ships of war, they have established the Chantey Board Recruiting Service, which has appointed an official chantey man for our merchant marines, to help service singing sailors.

"Mary, the Baby and Me" a Catchy Song.

This delightful little song by Paul Curtin, of New York, which has been published by M. Wittmack & Sons, is proving a hit wherever it is sung. "Mary, the Baby and Me, is a hit to everybody and its success is assured.

"NAVAL AIR POWER" (Pathe).

This is No. 9 of the Official British War Films. It shows how student aviators in Great Britain are trained for their intrepid work. Various types of machines are demonstrated and the actual flights above cities are pictured. This is a fine educational subject and covers the air program of the war from many angles.

"THE UNCONQUERABLE SPIRIT" (Pathe).

 Episode No. 18 of the Official War Review. This illustrates throughout the machine guns are demonstrated and the actual attacks of the Allied troops. Pictures of troops of various nations are shown, and not the least interesting feature is that of the prisoners taken in Lorraine, who have signified their willingness to join the Allies. They have carried guns and ammunition are turned upon their former owners is another good feature. This closes with a plea for co-operation of American heroes by General Pershing.

"BLACK FEET AND FLAT HEADS" (Mutual).

This is the first of an outdoor series which is being made by Rotherider to follow the Outing-Chesters on the Mutual program is entitled "Black Feet and Flat Heads." It was photographed among the Blackfeet Indians and shows them in a series of pictures in which they lived years ago. They have performed their various dances and played their games before the camera. Indian chins in their feathered headdress, dancing about the camp fire, accompanied by squaws and others of lesser degree, present an attractive sight.

A. PAUL KEITH VICTIM OF INFLUENZA.

AFTER an illness covering only four days, A. Paul Keith died at the home of one of his employees in this city, Wednesday evening, October 30, at 7:45, in the apartment of Mr. Keith's residence in San Francisco, California. A. Paul Keith Circuit late in the previous week and was suddenly stricken. Despite all that medical skill could do to prevent his death, he passed away in the prime of life and in the fullness of a career that had brought him the respect and the admiration of thousands of people who appreciated his acting qualities.

Mr. Keith was born in New York City, January 3, 1875. His father's home was in Boston, and there Paul attended school, his earlier education being supplemented by a short apprenticeship in his father's theatrical business. In 1896 Paul was graduated from Harvard and immediately entered into full participation in the B. F. Keith vaudeville and motion picture activities. The young man was taken under direct supervision of B. F. Keith, who was the associate of the Keith family, in business and private life, for many years as the name of B. F. Keith has figured in theatricals.

Paul Keith's mother died when he was a youth, and it was not until 1913 that his father, the late B. F. Keith, married a second time, making Ethel Chase, the daughter of a Washington theatrical manager, his wife under circumstances that surprised the profession and caused wide-spread discussion among theatrical people. Keith dropped dead of heart disease in a hotel at Palm Beach, Fla., where he had gone with the second Mrs. Keith, upon his own yacht, for a bridal tour.

The Keith Theatre circuit has experienced a vast fortune, representing theatrical properties in many cities, a controlling interest in the United Booking Office and extensive real estate holdings, together with bonds and stocks that represented a total of many millions. Under the term of B. F. Keith's will the Keith theatrical interests came under control of a corporation with whose management Mr. A. Paul Keith and Paul Keith each possessing a half interest. The personal property was willed to Paul as sole heir, the Keith Theatre circuit was separately provided for during the six months preceding his death while she was Mr. Keith's wife.

Apart from owning an extensive chain of vaudeville theatres the Keith & Albee theatrical interests comprise a chain of motion picture theatres extending through New England and into eastern Canada. In the Keith theatres production offices are maintained, the vaudeville being frequently "featurized" along with the regular headliners.

This is a separate department connected with the United Booking Office that handles the moving picture angle of the Keith & Albee properties.

A. Paul Keith was as rugged and manly in business as he was in life. He never lost his boyhood love of nature in his personal attributes. E. Albee had "brought him up right," made a big showman of him, and the young man met his death with his father's permission and his tutelage.

It may be said of A. Paul Keith that he was one of the rare examples in theatrical life where a young man grew to full estate with unbroken progress, and publicity. He was "a son of his father," and the show business lost a big man when he died.

The Roman Catholic priest who had been a constant companion of Keith, told of his last moments. Keith's life came on from Boston in time to administer the last sacrament and accompany the body back to the stage where the boyhood and interment was attended by hundreds of showmen Saturday, November 2.

OFFICIAL REVIEW REGISTERS VICTORY.

The Official War Review, No. 19, to be released by Pathé, November 4, is a Victory Film. On the Italian front, Italy calls for conscripts, aided by her Allies, press forward across the rugged mountains and into the war-swept plains. The great cable way, the teleferica, swings guns and munitions to the front, carrying shells, dynamite and rifle ammunition. Along the snows, sure-footed dogs carry ammunition to the fighters. On the Marne, French and Americans prepare to push forward against the retreated Huns, while long lines of prisoners keep streaming back. Longmont is retaken from the foe. In Palestine the British armies under General Allenby drive forward despite almost insurmountable natural obstacles. Tractors draw great howitzers across the sands, and city after city yields to the conquerors. On the American front is shown the "Forward push" of the Yanks and how the soldier boys from overseas are contributing to the downfall of German militarism, victory is in the air.
A new important announcement is made of the crystalization of the plans of Messrs. A. H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin in the launching of the first Ralph Ince film attraction, which is of great importance to exhibitors throughout the country.

Ralph Ince is now engaged in the production of this first big special which will be released under the banner of S-L Pictures. The combination of names associated with this venture assures the exhibitor that no precaution that human skill can devise will be omitted in the production of real film attractions.

Ralph Ince stands today as one of the foremost directors of motion pictures. Many screen successes have been identified with his name. During his connection with the Vitagraph, he achieved fame as an actor and director, having directed such well known box office attractions as "The Juggernaut," "A Million Bid," "The Wreck," "413," etc. Some of his more recent successes are "The Argyle Case," starring Robert Warwick; "Today," starring Florence Reed; "Tempered Steel," starring Mme Petrova, and "Our Mrs. McChesney," starring Ethel Barrymore.

Arthur H. Sawyer is one of the pioneers in the motion picture industry, having had a vast amount of experience relating to every branch of the business. He has been an exhibitor and was owner of one of the first chain of picture theatres in the United States. In the early days, Mr. Sawyer became interested in production and was general manager of the Kinemacolor Company as well as being responsible for the organization of that company in this country, which produced initial films in natural colors. He sponsored many of the first feature films to appear in Broadway theatres and was one of the first men to engage stars of the legitimate stage to play in pictures. He is also regarded as an expert in studio management and production matters and possesses a thorough knowledge of laboratory details and the innumerable other angles which enter into the production of pictures.

Mr. Lubin is considered one of the best exchange men and distributors of pictures, as well as being an organizer of big financial projects. He formerly controlled the Metro franchise in Canada and possesses a wide knowledge of the exhibitors’ problem and requirements, having made an extensive study of exhibitors needs which will prove of great value in bridging the gulf existing between the producer and exhibitor. He has also been responsible for many innovations in the distribution and marketing of films.

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin have introduced many new ideas in the marketing of pictures as was evidenced in their states right sales of "The Warrior" and "Mother," which they handled so successfully.

In a recent interview Mr. Lubin stated: "For many months we have been engaged in a careful study of the market conditions with particular reference to the growing tendency and insistent demand of the exhibitors and public for high class productions.

"The oft repeated expression that the surface of the motion picture industry has only been scratched is quite true. It is also quite true that it has been badly abused but, after all, it really has only been scratched. We realize that at present there is an over-production of films, but I do not think that there is an over production of good films.

"The insistent demand of the public today for better pictures is proven by the success with which good pictures have met. Our plan is most comprehen- sive in scope and we are going to strive to bring the much discussed angles of distribution into the closest kind of contact with the exhibitor and feel that an organization such as we have committed to no specific method of distribution or tied to any definite date of release, but committed our contribution to the art of motion pictures and the furtherance of the industry along constructive commercial lines.

"Ralph Ince is peculiarly the exhibitor’s director. The exhibitors in this country have an abiding faith in the value of his name, born of a long and satisfactory experience with the pictures which have carried the stamp of his workmanship and standardized excellence. We will have some very interesting announcements to make as to our stars and the caliber of other men identified with our organization. Our principal aim is to strive to produce features that will meet the demand of the public for bigger and better pictures."

Notes About Town.

Arthur S. Hyman, of Detroit, announces that in future the Arthur S. Hyman attractions will be distributed through the Dawn-Masterplay Company. He has purchased "Wives of Men," "The Million Dollar Mystery" and "My Husband's Friend" for Michigan. Mr. Hyman was years ago general manager of the General Film Company. He was in New York during the week of October 21 to arrange his New York office in the Longacre Building, where he is represented by George H. Callahan as general manager.

E. Mandelbaum, of Cleveland, was stopping at the Hotel Astor, October 25, where he expected to remain a week enjoying an enforced vacation on account of the closing of all the Ohio theatres during the epidemic.

Director Ralph Ince is busy organizing the Ince Film Company. He will produce six or eight special features a year, and expects to start work about December 1.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, of New York City, will hold a meeting and luncheon on Thursday, October 13, on the opening of its new rooms at 277 Seventh avenue.
"Under Four Flags" Third Official War Picture

UNDER FOUR FLAGS," the third U. S. official feature war picture issued by the Department of Commerce of the United States, will have its first official showings in New York at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, where it will be offered simultaneously with similar showings during the same period in various other cities. Showings at other important motion picture theatres will follow, and then the film will be released to smaller houses throughout the United States.

This variation in the method of releasing the U. S. official war pictures will have considerable interest for exhibitors.

J. C. F. Hart, director of the Division of Films, in discussing the exploitation of the new Government picture, says:

"The method employed in introducing 'Pershing's Crusaders' and 'America's Answer,' to the public, which involved a number of 'shows,' each with a complete organization, including a manager and agents, will not be duplicated with 'Under Four Flags,' although it was financially successful. It is believed that quicker results can be gained by first showing the picture at the largest motion picture centres and then distributing it in that way stirring up popular interest in the surrounding territory, and then releasing it to the exhibitors generally. This will concentrate all exploitation efforts on the part of the Division of Films, in co-operation with the exhibitors, to conduct a centralized, but effective, publicity campaign, that will rank the spots and weak in others, but comprehensively helpful to all concerned.

I am glad to say that this plan meets with universal approval, and that, even at this early stage, they are looking forward to a successful campaign for the new Government picture."

S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, where "Under Four Flags" will have its initial showing, says:

"In booking the new official war picture, I have not considered the financial side at all, but desire every possible help with the Government's Public Information and its Division of Films to give the public the greatest war picture that has ever been produced. I intend to contribute my time and the services of my staff, so far as they may be helpful, to assist the Division of Films and its producing department to prepare a pictorialization of America's participation in the war, in conjunction with the Allies, that will not only be splendidly effective from the standpoint of camera art, but which will also register events that were never before seen on the screen, and a picture of remarkable interest may be looked for with confidence."
Publicist Mentally Quick on the Draw.

B ACK in old Kentucky whence he hails, Fred Schaefer, of General Film, has many friends, one of whom was his guest in New York recently. It happens that this friend was from the mountain regions, his home being one of those hairtrigger places where the feud is not unknown, and where the dexter tail of the springer coat bulges suspiciously at the hip.

This friend brought news of the demise of a celebrated local character, with a record of many close encounters on the streets of the village.

"Ah!" said Schaefer expectantly. "And of whom did he die?"

"Ding bust that Charley Fuhr," said Charles Ulrich, as he opened a jock pot with only a little better than tens. "I hope he gets the 'flue and dies of it."

This unexpected outbreak of ferocity scared the others out, and Ulrich won his own ante.

While the Service Flag Flies

From Eighth to Ninth avenue the street was a blazing canyon of light and color, "God Bless Our Boys" was done in electric lights in a sign that stretched across the store fronts and the house stands. The "Harp of Tara" swung lazily in the breeze before the cameras.

From the front window of a "third floor front" hung the flag of Italy. Bunting and flags of foreign lands. There were Chinese lanterns, lights and improvised illuminations everywhere.

IT IS not often that a man leaving for overseas gets the sendoff that was accorded Lieut. N. W. Davidson last week. Davidson, before joining the Royal Air Forces, was connected with the Western offices of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., at Montreal. Two weeks ago he received his commission as Lieut. lieutenant, and getting a few days' leave before going overseas he accepted an invitation to come to Montreal and visit L. E. Ouimet. During the week Mr. Ouimet found it necessary to go to New York and took Davidson with him on a visit to the head office of Pathé.

While Davidson was in New York he met another R. A. F. man, who told him that he had just received notice to report back to Toronto, as there was a number of men called to go overseas at once. Davidson, desiring to get into this draft if possible, cut short his trip in New York and rushed back to Toronto. Several men that had been called failed to report on time and Davidson got the chance he wanted—to go overseas at once. He was permitted to proceed to Montreal twenty-four hours ahead of the troop train, which gave him a chance to spend Sunday with Mr. Ouimet.

On Sunday afternoon, October 20, he was invited to the head office of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., where Mr. Ouimet, on behalf of the company, presented him with a silver identification wristlet and a purse of money which had been subscribed by the head office and exchange employees from all over Canada as a mark of appreciation of his former services and as a token of their personal esteem. On Sunday night a reception was held for Lieut. Davidson, when both the staff and their families had the opportunity of personally conveying their best wishes to their departing fellow worker. Lieut. Davidson was deeply moved by this testimonial, and in a few words expressed his feeling, saying that though he would soon be widely separated from those present his heart would always be with them, and that his interest in Mr. Ouimet, the Specialty Film and every one of the employees would always continue as strong as if he were with them in body. Mr. Ouimet, in replying, said that he was proud to know that his company would be represented in the Royal Air Forces by one in whom he had the deepest respect, and that if Lieut. Davidson's conduct in the service of his country was equaled by that given to the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., he would gain high honors. Mr. Ouimet assured him that on his return, whether physically disabled or not, he would find a position for him with his company and that they would all give him a bigger reception when he came back than had been accorded him on his departure.

Lieutenant Davidson sailed from an Atlantic port for England.

Powell Signs With Goldwyn.

David Powell has signed a year's contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to go to the coast and play leading parts. Mr. Powell is one of the best known leading men on the screen. He has played with Mary Pickford, Elsie Ferguson, Billie Burke, Alice Brady and Clara Kimball Young.

Mr. Powell is a Welshman and acquired the foundations of his technical training in England. He first came to America with Ellen Terry, playing in "The Good Hope" and "Captain Brassbound's Conversion." In 1907 he worked at the old Biograph studio. Subsequently he toured America with Sir Johnstone Forbes Robertson, playing Christopher in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back.

Mr. Powell will begin his engagement at the new Goldwyn studio in California on November 10.

Fred G. Sliter Selected for Foreign Film Commissioner.

FRED G. SLITER, manager of the New York branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has been appointed foreign film commissioner by the Committee on Public Information, U. S. Government, and sails early in November for his new post abroad. Mr. Sliter's selection was made after a careful survey of the field of available film men for the important duties which the position involves. His record as an efficient and aggressive exchange manager and his thorough experience in the field of film distribution won him the post. His resignation as branch manager for the Mutual became effective Nov. 1.

Mr. Sliter came to New York August 1 of this year as manager of the Mutual Exchange from Albany, where he had been branch manager for two years. He has been in the Mutual organization since 1914, when he became a salesman in the Albany territory. In two years he became the branch manager.

He was virtually born in the show business. His father was one of the early and one of the best known theatrical managers in New York and the New England states, as well as the Canadian provinces. He was early in life associated with his father in various theatrical enterprises until the advent of the motion picture, when he joined his father in the management of several moving picture theatres throughout New England. Later he was connected with the Broadway Theatre at Schenectady, New York, his home town, until his entrance into the distribution branch of the industry with which he has been associated since.

Mrs. Sliter, a bride of a month, will accompany her husband abroad.

Film Men Talk Big Figures While at Luncheon

T WAS luncheon time. The place was the Hotel Astor Grill, and you’ve already read the rest, for the gathering was composed of film producers, film distributors, confidential advisers and confidential critics. Louis R. Mayer, of Boston, was the host, and advice was about the only thing that did not appear on his check.
I admit it was the one thing, provided the brand was right, that he would have most gladly paid for.

T. S. S. C. was Stewart, film star, whom Mayer coralled after one of the bitterest court fights in film history. Coupled with the obvious method by which this dainty and very expensive little lady should be exploited, and inexhaustible was Mayer’s patience as a listener.

"Honor bright, Louis," said one guest.

"What salary are you paying Stewart?"

"Miss Stewart will get a good-sized fortune for 'Virtuous Wives.'"

"You know, Louis," chimed in another, "good direction is always essential, but I believe as Jim does that Miss Stewart is alone sufficient to get the money without paying her a penny."

"Tucker," said Louis, "was a good salary every week. A $500 a week director would have served the purpose just as well."

"I’ll agree with you there," said the guest. "But the star is the thing. Nothing else matters. Fans look for the star, not the play. Then you’d have to pay her a salary that was no better than a good-sized fortune for ‘Virtuous Wives.”"

"Well boys," said Mayer, "I appreciate your suggestions, but there is nothing you’ve said that changes my opinion a particle. I not only believe I’m right, but I’ll wager that nine out of ten exhibitors in the top towns will say that I’m right. According to you fellows I should build a half million dollar mansion and furnish it with Rare Cran and top-of-the-line fur-ture. Wouldn’t be the height of folly? You’d have me set the Kolhoover diamond in brass instead of the most precious metal obtainable. Or you’d spend a fortune on a thoroughbred race horse and mount him with a fifty dollar wagon. No boys, you’re wrong."

"When I went looking for plays the price was the last thing I considered. I wanted something that not only was the goods, but I wanted something that suited Miss Stewart’s talent and personality. I think you failed to rate that in the price."

"Winna," When I settled the desirable and suitability of the price there was no argument. It was simply, ‘Well, how much?’ After Old Kentucky, I bought it and asked the price afterward.

"Now what’s the sense of buying beautiful furnishings if you don’t have them artificially arranged. That’s where my director comes in. That’s why George Loane is directing Miss Stewart’s productions. And with him my method was the same. I hired him first, then chose the star."

"Now comes the surrounding company. What would you think of a great mansion and, after all, boy, it’s the exhibitor’s job to make money."

The guest was silent for a moment. "I’ve no objection to expense on the supporting company."

"Of course I admit that my way may not be orthodox. But it is the difference between the machine-made suit of clothes in a sweatshop and a classy made-to-order tailoring establishment. I am not making machine goods. I am building for the exhibitor a made-to-order product. I don’t have to rush to get it out on a certain date. I take my time making it right, working it down to the ground, and exploring every eye."

"The exhibitor is mainly interested in two things: Satisfying his patrons and never again busting a store with his stars. If he can accomplish these things the exhibitor gets a thrill he knows it’s right. Certain the process is expensive, but so long as the money flows the exhibitors are satisfied."

If he can accomplish these things the exhibitor gets a thrill he knows it’s right. Certain the process is expensive, but so long as the money flows the exhibitors are satisfied."

"Virtuous Wives" was thought of as the war picture to come in. Louis Mayer had signed on another big titles. A story was to be written by Miss Stewart, and a $500,000 offer was made for the right. Although Louis Mayer was not in the room, he was present in spirit. It was his idea which made the picture possible. This was the story of the American woman in war, the life and death of the girl who has been the subject of much thought and much talk.

"Patrie "Winning the War" Series"

Arrangements were made some time ago by the distributors and Louis Mayer for Public Information, with Pathe for a production of a series of one-reel pictures under the title of Patrie "Winning the War." The Committee to be known as "Winning the War" series, showing the tremendous home work of the United States. The first of the series is scheduled for release of the week of November 16, and is called "The United States Boys" Working Reserve Solves the Great Farm Problem." The spirit that animates these youngsters is clearly apparent—they work with a will, with enthusiasm and with the plain determination not only merely to fill the job, but to do it in such a way as to accomplish the highest production.

picture, and that the original number of prints will have to be increased to meet the demand.

Big Salvation Army Film To Be Produced

NEGOTIATIONS were closed last week between representatives of the Salvation Army and an arm of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and Evangeline Booth, representing the Salvation Army, signed a letter of intent involving the making of a motion picture telling the story of the Salvation Army in both war and peace.

The story of the motion picture finds its basis in historical truth and in recently revealed facts, which reveal the Salvation Army as an organized, planned war-work organization of which American troops have some knowledge. It tells a story of men and women who served without selfish views or considerations.

In the production of this film the Famous Players-Lasky organization will have the full cooperation of the Salvation Army. Commander Booth herself will appear on the screen, as she discharged her regular daily duties, and the story will be filled with the due reverence and profound respect the subject calls for.

Work on the film will be commenced in the near future, upon the termination of the present period of inactivity agreed upon for practical purposes by both orders as a result of the influenza epidemic.

The picture will be started in New York and finished at the Globe, Hollywood, California, studios of the producers.

Goldwyn Releases Listed for Nov. 17 Opening

Goldwyn has found a way of tremendously stimulating the business of the box-office by calibre theatre owners upon the reopening of activities. Announcement of new releases by Goldwyn, beginning November 13, has resulted in two big productions of Geraldine Farrar and second Rex Beach production of tremendous importance and clinical interest scheduled for release only this week.

Two productions of such powerful box-office calibre are planned to prove effective in again restoring theatre patronage to high-tide proportions in all localities. The novel release dates and the productions and their stars are:

November 17: Tom Moore in "Thirty a Week," by Thompson Buchanan; directed by Henry King.

November 24: Mabel Normand in "A Perfect 36," by Tex Charwat; directed by Charles Giblyn.

December 1: Geraldine Farrar in "The Hell Cat," by Willard Mack; directed by Reginald Barker.

December 8: Madge Kennedy in "A Perfect Lady," by Channing Pollock and Harold Wolf; directed by Clarence B. Badger.

December 5: Rex Beach's great international comedy-drama, "Too Fat to Fight," directed by Hobart Henley.

"City Saints and Country Sinners."

World Pictures has purchased from Forest Halsey an original story which will have for its working title "City Saints and Country Sinners." The story is to be produced by the White Film Corporation at the World studio at Fort Lee when work is resumed at the termination of the war.

The story has been set in the deep south, but the author has insisted that the impression of the south is maintained throughout the picture. The author, an Englishman, was familiar with life in the south, having spent several years there.
Maurice Tourneur to Make Pictures in California

Maurice Tourneur has just announced plans to spend the winter in California for the production of his next three or four pictures. These will be made for the Famous Players Lasky Corporation, under the direction of Robert M. F. Thompson. The new pictures will be presented by the Enterprise Theatre. The films will be produced by the director himself, in conjunction with his cameraman, Mr. J. J. Bell, together with a staff of assistants. The production will be under the personal supervision of Mr. Tourneur, who is well known in the film industry for his work in France and for his previous films in America. He is expected to return to the United States about the middle of January, at which time he will be ready to start work on his new production.

Several Territories Sold on Latest Pioneer Film

Pioneer Film Corporation announces that its latest production, "Woman!" will be sold in all parts of the country. The film, which is a story of the life of a woman in the East, has been produced by Mr. Tourneur and is being distributed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The film has been received with great enthusiasm by the public, and is expected to be a great success.

Will Show "Cannibal" Film at Hotel Astor November 19

FOLLOWING the announcement that New York rights to the Martin Johnson picture, "Cannibal of the South Seas," have been sold to First National Exchange, the Robertson-Cole Company, which controls the world rights, has arranged for a showing of the film at the Astor Theatre on November 19. The film has been well received by the public, and is expected to be a great success.

New York Papers Praise Latest Tourneur Picture

Maurice Tourneur's latest picture, "Woman!" which has its premiere at the Strand Theatre, is highly praised by the metropolitan newspapers. The Sun remarked: "This picture is full of drama and poetry, and is a triumph of Tourneur's artistry. It is a beautiful picture, and is sure to be a great success."

"Twilight" Is Next Doris Kenyon Film

Doris Kenyon, who has just completed her last picture, "Wild Honey," is awaiting the lifting of the influenza ban to start work on another production. Miss Kenyon and her company will go to Hendersonville, N. C., to direct the picture, which is to be made on "Twilight," by the same authors as "Wild Honey." Vingie E. Rose wrote the story, which has been made in the Metropolitan Magazine under the title of "The Alchemy of Love." The screen adaptation is the work of Louis Joseph Vance, writer of many well known books, plays and motion picture features.

Olga Petrova to Return to Screen

Following the statement made some time ago by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, that Madame Olga Petrova would, after the presentation of her fifth picture, "The Panther Woman," return to the speaking stage, it is announced that during the early part of 1919 she will again appear in motion pictures.

Cleveland Trade Letter

By M. A. Malaney, 206 Sloan Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

Cleveland Theatres Net Big Block Sales. Cleveland picture theatres were instrument in selling a big batch of Fourth Liberty Bond by the apathy of the fact that they were closed last week after the loan campaign.

According to the reports of the committee, $30,900 worth of bonds were sold in the Metropolitan, Alhambra, Monarch, Rinderbeck, Mahoning, and all neighborhood houses, while $50,950 worth were sold in the Stillman and Strand theatres, downtown.

Manager Kuhn, of the Stillman, claims, however, that in his house alone $62,000 worth of bonds were sold in four nights.

Manager Grossman, of the Standard Theatre, conducted the sale of bonds to film exchanges and employees and reports that about $75,000 worth were sold.

The Mall and Alhambra theatres each have 6,000 worth of bonds, outside of the subscriptions of the owners and employees and in addition to the bonds sold to partnerships.

Mooney Goes to Fox's Los Angeles Office.

Paul C. Mooney, for several years district manager for the Fox Film Corporation, with headquarters and his headquarters, left, October 25, for Los Angeles, where he will be district manager for Fox, in charge of the entire office at Los Angeles headquarters.

Mr. Mooney was accompanied by his family and expects to make the West his home.

Clayton Sheehan, brother of General Manager W. R. Sheehan, has arrived in Cleveland to assume Mr. Mooney's duties. His district has been split up, so that Mr. Sheehan has Cleveland, Detroit, Buffalo and Pittsburgh under his supervision, while Cincinnati, Indianapolis and St. Louis will be under the direction of J. R. Grainger, whose headquarters will be in Chicago or St. Louis.

Mr. Mooney was presented with hand some remembrances from the Fox forces in Cleveland, and also by his friends among the exhibitors and exchanges of that city.

Exchanges to Ship Films via Erie Express.

As a result of alleged poor service over the messenger route between Cleveland, Niles, Warren, Struthers, Girard, Hubbard, Lowellville and Youngstown, Cleveland film exchange managers have decided to abandon it, rearrange their bookings, and ship all films through these towns via the Erie Railroad express.

A representative of the Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers of the Chamber of Commerce, in commenting on this action, said:

"Apparently no attention has been given to numerous complaints of the exchanges regarding return shipment of films and consequently aggregate losses of thousands of dollars per week sustained by the exchanges. This course has been forced upon the exchanges, since ample time has been given for bringing the service up to par."

Cleveland Exhibitors Make Comedies.

Cleveland exhibitors are spending their time now making a series of comedies, the stories of which would make film man laugh. For instance, Dave Adler, of the Strand, was the chief actor in "How I Won Some Liberty Bonds," and J. C. Deutsch, in a single reel, "By $1,500." Lou Gieger made one called "Keeping the Wolf Away from Charlie," and Mark Greenbaum has a fine little half-reel to tell about called "Row and Charm." Herman Garfield appeared in "American Gentlemen." Another clever comedy was Dave Schuman's "Too Many I, O, U's."

Buffalo News Letter

Franklin Issues Closing Order.

ARL B. FRANKLIN, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo's pantomim picture theatre, gave out an interesting closing order in Buffalo's Hippodrome, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo. Mr. Caruso appeared inperson. The guests present were loud in their praise, for this production promises to be one of the successes of the year.

Walter P. Cook, chairman of the Buffalo Liberty Loan Committee, was loud in his praise for Mr. Caruso.

Governor Whitman, who also honored the guests with his presence, spoke enthusiastically of Mr. Caruso as a true patriot.

R. C. Fox, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Buffalo, is to be congratulated for his untiring efforts. The appearance of Mr. Caruso was a huge success, the biggest of scoops in Buffalo's limelight.

It is said the Buffalo Liberty Loan Committee, in order to present Mr. Caruso with a handsome gold medallion in showing their appreciation.

Mr. Caruso sang "Victory, Victory," composed by his wife, also "Over There" in English and Italian.
Suggests Reduction in Theatre Rent

Manitoba Official Proposes That Owners Agree to a Fifty-fifty Rental Proposition During Ban Period

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Winema

Manitoba and Winnipeg officials were not long in offering their support to any organization of movie employees who might become distressed during the enforced lay-off in Winnipeg theatres, one of the three centres of Manitoba. Edward Brown, the provincial treasurer, also came to the assistance of various theatres that they agree to accept a fifty-fifty proposition for their rent during the period. He pointed out that a rather stiff rent is charged for theatres and that the owners should be willing to concede at this time. The heavy rent detail was one which would reduce the income to theatre operators.

Controller Grey, of the City of Winnipeg, who is a candidate for the mayoralty, made himself a champion of the theatre and exchange employees. After holding a conference of interested representatives, he announced that his sympathies were with those whose employment would not be delayed longer than necessary. It is estimated that five hundred people have been employed by a number of Canadian distributors that they had sufficient news stock on hand to supply all demands until new releases from the United States—regardless of whether any Canadian theatres were closed or not. Practically all the theatres were closed by the health officers, however, and the situation remained practically the same as before.

Exchange officials anticipated that Canadian theatres would be closed about two weeks longer and this would lead to losses during which considerable of the excess new prints could be cut to use before these periods would be arriving at the States.

Jack Holmes Lennon Killed

Jack Holmes Lennon, aged seven years, only child of R. H. Lennon, was killed on Saturday afternoon, October 26, at Elizabeth and Albert streets, Toronto, when he dashed in front of an automobile. Mr. Lennon is vice-president of the Exhibitor's Management Corporation, of Toronto, and was Ontario manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company for many years. The driver of the automobile was detained after the accident, and an inquest was held on Monday, October 28.

Universal's Service Flag Has 21 Stars

The honor roll of the Canadian Universal Film Company in Canada numbers twenty-one names of whom twelve were former employees of the head office at Toronto, seven being engaged from the exhibit circuit, and three enlisted from the Canadian Army, while three enlisted from the Royal Canadian Artillery. The Montreal office supplied the total of eight. One of the twenty-one former employees has been killed, this being Edward Morris, of the Toronto office.

Everything Ready for Reopening St. Denis

During the closing period for all the theatres in town, arrangements were completed for the reopening of the St. Denis Theatre, controlled by J. N. Mavor. Mr. Mavor has been dark since last May. The big theatre, the largest in Canada, presenting picture exclusively, will be ready, and the policy of the house will be to give a feature picture, two film comedies and one vaudeville. The vaudeville will be performed on the continuous schedule from one show every hour for nine hours. The theatre will be in operation twenty-four hours, ten p.m. to 11 p.m. daily, inclusive. The general admission price will be 25 cents.

The reopening of the theatre was brought about by Mr. Mavor, who was the first representative of the Canadian Film Company in Canada. He will be the manager of the St. Denis, but he intends to continue in the line of the management of a large circuit of theatres in Ontario and Quebec for U. B. O., booking. The reopening of the theatre is the first of a new vaudeville circuit in the Eastern part of the Dominion and it is the first of a new vaudeville circuit in the Eastern part of the Dominion and it is the first of a new vaudeville circuit in the Eastern part of the Dominion.

WORLD MAN PAYS CHILLICOTHE A VISIT

Finds the People of That City Anxious for Amusement—Prominent Exhibitors Entertain Him

Paul J. Gray, Dayton Theatre Building, Dayton, Ohio.

With the theatres and other forms of amusement, there was nothing of interest to take up one's time, and therefore the writer found himself one day last week at Chillicothe, Ohio.

Although the theatres were also closed in "out of reach," may arrival there was welcomed by Elmer Reddell and Martin G. Chandler, who saw to it that nothing was left undone to make the writer as comfortable as possible. The Sherman Theatre opened recently with the Fox film, "Salome," to very good business; the old "legitimate" attractions when possible, for Chillicothe is hungry for amusement, and local talents have known to pull the entertainments. The Majestic Theatre presents a very inviting appearance, after having the house open, we was very good. Charley has found the theatre for a thousand dollar limousine. Charley manages the Star and Queen theatres (side by each), and is reaping in the "kale" without reserve.

Hears Intricacies of Soldier Life

After having visited the city managers, Ole Brooks and Elmer Reddell, who runs the Liberty Theatre at Camp Sherman, entertaining the writer in a most friendly manner, and explained the intricacies of soldier life in such a way that it seemed a simple feat to anyone who had been on army service, Mr. Brooks—my mean business during the few days that the house was open was very good. Charley has found the theatre for a thousand dollar limousine. Charley manages the Star and Queen theatres (side by each), and is reaping in the "kale" without reserve.

Theatres Brighten Up During Closing Period.

URING the enforced closing of all theatres and public gathering places as a result of the influenza epidemic, the managers of the Majestic Theatre at Evansville, Ind., are extending a complete overhaul and rereading of this popular motion picture and vaudeville house. The new decorations are of the most attractive and artistic character and furnish a beautiful setting for the stage. The carpet and curtains have been cleaned and the woodwork on the inside freshly painted and varnished. The work is progressing rapidly.

As a result of the temporary closing of the order of the state board of health, the managers of all amusement enterprises, the management of the La Salle Theatre, at South Bend, Ind., have taken advantage of the slack season to improve the little theatre more attractive than ever. Not only have excellent production are being worked out, and in the near future handsome boxes and trellis effects with the current local news, the village will be installed on the sides walls.

Clyde Williams, manager of the Paranuence Theatre, Galveston, Texas, has taken advantage of the influenza closing order by having a number of improvements made, the most noticeable of which the theatre. The improvements will be completed before the closing order is rec- mended, he said.

Bourgeois Survives "Otranto" Disaster

OXFORD KNOX BOURGEOIS, familiarly known to the local film fraternity as "K.K.," one of the most popular young men in the game here previously to entering the military service, was taken as one of Uncle Sam's five survivors who escaped death when the transport "Otranto" sunk near the Scottish coast on October 20. Now he is on the steamship "Kashmir," according to an official announcement issued by the war department.

TEXANS ARE NOW PICTURE HUNGRY
Exhibitors Preparing for Great Influx of Show Patronage When Quarantine Rules Are Lifted

By Phil Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

The public of Texas is absolutely film-hungry, as evidenced by the three weeks of the influenza quarantine, and, with the lifting of the rules, which will probably be in a week or ten days, the show business will get into full swing. Film exchanges, daily papers and theatre managers are besieged with requests for new releases. Even the smallest operators are getting something, and as details of releases which can be expected when the theatres open, they have been put back at the position of fifteen years ago, when there were no moving pictures at all. It is with this thought that the closing of the motion picture theatres created a sort of void in their existence.

The exhibitions of the past several years have been so full of new releases that the exhibitors had much to do with the success of the drive.

KELLY TO HANDLE SHERRY AND PARIS SERVICE

Smiling Jimmy Kelly, of the General, has taken over the business of the W. L. Fleishbein Film Service and the Paris Film Corporation. He will handle all the Chicago territory. His first show will be held out early in November will be Anderson as Broncho Billy in "Red Blood and Yellow Bones."

HARRIS DIES OF SHELL SHOCK

Henry H. Harris, brother-in-law of James Kelley, of General, died late in October at Perth Ambulance, N. Y., following the munitions plant explosion there. Mrs. James Kelly was called to his bedside at Perth, where he had gone to get fresh air during training camp.

C. J. Caver, of the Majestic Theatre, Stephenville, Texas, has gone to the Officers' Training Camp at Leon Springs, Texas. Mayor C. H. Mitchell, from Brady, Texas, has taken over the management of the Stephenville Theatre.

MISS MAYBELLE PRINCE

Miss Maybel Prince, secretary to W. H. Hulse, who owns theatres all over Texas, recently demonstrated the capabilities of Dallas film row and its employees.

Miss Prince read in the Dallas newspapers an instruction of the four little children of Mr. and Mrs. J. Shultz, of Dallas, from Spanish influenza. She started this campaign to prevent the grief-stricken family. Within two hours she had raised $5000 to the First National offices, after visitation of two film exchanges, with $100 in cash. This woman, who was not in the business, was directly in need of such support.

Exhibitors Visiting Dallas

MINNEAPOLIS BOOKER KILLED AT FRONT

JOE KOHLER, booker at the Minneapolis Minneapolis Film Corporation, for several years, who enlisted in the army eight months ago, has been killed in action in France, according to the casualty lists. He was the first Minneapolis moving picture man to make the supreme sacrifice for his country and mankind.

BREILLEN SERIOUSLY ILL

H. J. Breilien, proprietor of the Victoria, Minneapolis, who was called sick, has been in a sanatorium at Jordan, Minn., recuperating from a relapse suffered following his opening of the opera house. W. A. Steffes and Edward Hinz, prominent Minneapolis exhibitors, are managing Breilien's theatres during his illness.

"COLD DECK" IN NORTHWEST

The Elliott Film Corporation, of Minneapolis, has secured the Bill Hart production, "The Cold Deck," for distribution in Minnesota and South Dakota. General Manager John Elliott announced.

LIFETIME'S SAVINGS LOST

R. O. Fleishbein, exhibitor of Cloquet, Minn., who was so badly damaged in the great forest fire that swept the northeastern part of the state this month, visited Minneapolis recently. He told the story of the disaster. Mr. Fleishbein stated that the fire destroyed the savings of a lifetime, but that he was thankful he and his family escaped with their lives. He will make his home here for the winter and expects to go to Illinois in the spring. Mr. Fleishbein was an accountant before entering the show business. He expects to return to his old profession. L. E. Blessner's Grand Theatre at Cloquet was also destroyed.

Movie Pictorial Gets Geneva Boost

Crockett Brown, proprietor of the Unique Theatre, Nashwauk, Minn., attributes much of his success to valuable tips and suggestions made by the various moving picture trade magazines. He is an enthusiastic reader of the Moving Picture World.

New Department Added

The Theatre Equipment Company, of Minneapolis, has added a new department to its rapidly growing establishment. This department handles patriotic novelities, and includes such items as busts of General Pershing, President Wilson, an assortment of patriotic doll figures, used by charities, including an American eagle and the statue of Liberty. The Theatre Equipment Company is now committed to provide new quarters in the Builders' Exchange Building.

KOERPEL INJURED WORKING IN SHIPYARD

J. A. Koerpel, manager of the World Film Exchange, while working on a ship during his regular afternoon shift last week, fell three decks and had to be taken to a hospital, where first aid remedies were applied. Koerpel was later seen in a service book which bore the legend at the top of the page, "Not all the wounds sustained in the shipyard are received in the field of battle." So, Mr. Koerpel is a much bandaged hero now who continues to conduct his film office in the morning, and will soon return to his duties at the shipyard.

Northwest Theatre Notes

Butte, Mont.—Frank Dallinger, manager of the American, contemplates the erection of a new 2,000-seat theatre in that city. Details are given of plans, although the project is practically assured.

Sunnyside, Wash.—W. P. Barnet, manager of the electric picture theatre here, is building a new house, which will soon be opened.

Elum, Wash.—A new theatre is being built here to take the place of the Rose, which was burned in the fire of last summer.

Cheney, Wash.—C. H. Chetford has bought the theatre here.

Sandpoint, Idaho.—Avenue Lane is building a new motion picture theatre here, which is to be known as "The Rose." Sutherland, Ore., has opened a motion picture theatre in this town.

Sullivans Island, Idaho.—P. A. Gaul has charge of Max Schofield's theatre in Volmer, the latter having gone into the army.

Bonneville, Mont.—The People's Hlop has added motion pictures to its regular vaudeville attractions.
Detroit News Letter

By Jacob Smith, 713 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

Dailies Carry Picture News.

Not only the Detroit newspapers, but most of the daily papers throughout Michigan have published practically no motion picture items since the closing of the theatres, because of no advertising. Isn't this a fine way for the newspapers to reciprocate to the hundreds of thousands of dollars which the theatres spend annually with them? And wouldn't you think they would be better off had they watched how the Chicago papers could go to the movies—the newspapers would try to get out a better movie place than ever before to keep up the interest?

Delft Takes Over Strand Theatre.

The Delft Theatres, Inc., already operating theatres in Marquette, United States and Munising, have taken over the Strand Theatre in Escanaba, which gives them two houses throughout Upper Peninsula. The change became effective October 20. This puts the Delft corporation in absolute control of the theatre situation in three towns of the Upper peninsula. L. J. Jacobs, who now manages the Delft in Escanaba, will also look after the company's other theatres.

H. S. Gallup, better known as "Doc," is general manager of the Delft corporation.

DavePrince Goes to War.

Dave Prince, Detroit manager for Tri- angle, has been called to a distant and very sudden. He enlisted in the ambulance corps of the American Red Cross several months ago and has been at work last week on two days' notice. He is stationed at Camp Scott, American Red Cross, Company A.

Dave has been三角manager for about a year, previously having managed the Detroit theatre for the Great Lakes, as well as the Dallas office of the General. A remark made to him on the long distance phone before he got word as to his manager of Triangle, is worth repetition: "I am mighty sorry to lose you, but I'm mighty glad you are on the public corporation in the world—Uncle Sam. You have done fine for us in Michigan, and when you come back we will have a position ready for you. Good luck and success."

Seliers General's Assistant Manager.

J. C. Seliers, who has been covering the road for the past two years as a booking agent and assistant manager to Frank Stuart, will also look after selling in Detroit.

Organizing Yellow Dog Club.

F. R. Cleaver, salesman for the Detroit Universal, is pulling a great stunt which is great propaganda for war programs, and at the same time a wonderful boost for "The Yellow Dog," which is one of the current feature releases. Mr. Cleaver is using a booth at Woodward and Gratiot avenues, organizing and enrolling the two and one Yellow Dog clubs. He has enrolled 2,000 members already. There is no membership fee. Every man or woman who signs an application becomes a yellow button. Cleaver is after 30,000 members.

General Takes Over Sherry Service.

The Parex Film Exchange in Detroit has dissolved. The pictures, however, under the brand of Sherry Service are now being distributed through the general exchange. Charles F. Stuart is Detroit manager. Stuart is now arranging to put on several salesmen who will devote their entire time to Sherry pictures.

Congratulations.

He's a proud papa—A. J. Reed, manager of the George Kleine Exchange. The reason—an eight-pound baby boy It arrived Wednesday, October 23, at 12:35 p.m. It has been christened Alfred James. Mr. Reed has been passing cigars ever since. Mother and babe are doing nicely, and A. J. is a happy man.

French Cameraman Visits City.

Le GRAND, from the Pathé studios in Paris, is accompanied by his wife and fifteen-year-old son, and plans to leave on the liner Shinyo the first of November to Japan, China and other countries of the Far East to secure scenes for Pathé. He says his experience with the French army and states that the general public has an erroneous idea of the conditions of the auxiliaries or volunteers in connection with the great war. He declared that frequently the cameraman in charge of the group was assigned in advance of the soldiers and took up their positions before the commencement of battle. On one occasion three of his assistants were buried alive by a great shell and he suffered from shell shock to such an extent that he was given his present assignment.

Film Men and Ducks and Bears and Deer.

The Filmy Men have given local film exchange managers and theatre men some splendid opportunities to get out into the open, and some marvelous tales are going the rounds of onslaughts on the ducks in the rice fields. E. H. Emmick, of the Detroit Film Service, recently took a party of film men to Colusa, where an attack was made upon the quackers. En route from Colusa, Mr. Emmick met E. B. Johnson, of the Turner & Danhawk Circuit; Ralph Quive, of Vitaphone and National Service, and George Chamberlain, of the Independent Film Exchange. "Candy" new-mothered ducklings are on the way, and at Colusa they enjoyed the hospitality of C. C. Kaufmann, the pioneer film man of the region. Duck hunters in our district were fired by the recital of doughty deeds on the part of exchange men, has also shouldered arms and marched off to California. While Van B Clement, of the Portola Theatre, has lied himself to the mountains in search of bears and other denizens of the forest.

Sam Y. Edwards Promoted.

Sam Y. Edwards has been made superintendant of the Western Feature Film, and some extensive changes are being planned to mark the reopening of this chain of houses. Mr. Edwards will work with this firm as publicity man at the Oakland house, and was later placed in charge of two other bodies by city. The week late he has been connected with the film exchange branch of the business of Turner & Danhawk as traveling sales representative, in which work he has met with much success.

Parex Exchange to Close.

The Parex Film Exchange will be closed at an early date owing to arrangements that have been made whereby the William L. Sherry productions will be released through the General Film Company. Charles I. Lantz, manager of the local Parex office, will remove his business over to the General as soon as possible.

Film Exchanges Move.

The Sunset Film Exchange and the Western Feature Film Company, which recently took over quarters at 54 Golden Gate avenue, have gradually taken taken possession of 58 Golden Gate avenue with the Consolidated Film Corporation.

Working on.

The Liberty Moving Picture Company, 376 Sutter street, has commenced work on a patriotic production, the camera work being done by A. J. Reed and A. Duham. This is the second picture to be made by this local concern.

Quapaw, Kan.—J. W. Carter has bought the old Gayety Theatre at West Quapaw, Okla., and is operating it under the name of the Star.
ALHAMBRA AND LUBIN MAY CONSOLIDATE
Frankel Principal Mover in Plan to Combine Two Big Cincinnati Picture Theatres

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The enforced idleness among Cincinnati exhibitors, as far as their regular run is concerned, caused the influenza epidemic has by no means caused them to let the grass grow under their feet. In fact, several projects, One conspicuous proof of this fact is the recent transfer of the Alhambra Theatre to the Frankel interests. Frankel, it is understood, has the plan for the consolidation of the Alhambra with the Lubin, which is separated from the Alhambra by an empty building. I. Frankel is the principal mover in the plan, which, it is understood, has excellent prospects of going through. He has held up only by the question of acquiring the store room referred to, including the front of a bonus of a bonus. It is also reported that the Colonial Theatre in the same block, east of the Alhambra and the Lubin, may come into the plans for one or more larger theatres in this block, but that more immediate plan is that first referred to, block in question, lying between Race and Elm streets. It has already been popular with exhibitors ever since moving pictures first came into prominence, and there is talk of turning it into a much larger house than any now in that block and meet with the same success which has been enjoyed by the smaller ones.

To Have Palace Theatre Ready in October

According to the estimate of the Long-acre Construction Company, the principal contractor for the Palace Theatre building, Cincinnati, all work should be finished and the building completed ready for occupancy in time. The Palace will be located to the east that it was originally hoped to have the building finished in time for the current fall season, but labor troubles, delays in furnishing with materials, and the influenza epidemic have caused delays from time to time.

Associated Film Exchanges Reorganized

The Associated Film Exchanges of the Chamber of Commerce have been reorganized, with Beecher E. Hess as manager, and with Frankel, one of the leading film distributors in this vicinity as members. The old organization had fallen into disrepute, and it is to be hoped that the new combination will be able to hold its ground and that the various subsidiary organizations of the Chamber of Commerce have adopted uniform rules for the time which will be propitious for the reorganization of the film men. The following exchanges are members: Photographer Corporation, Golby Pictures Corporation, Metro, Pathé, Vitagraph, First National, Triangle, Select, General, Jacob, Buekyee, Famous Players-Lasky, Jewel Productions, C. C. Hite Attractions, Standard Film Service, Masterpiece Attractions, World and General. The officers elected were A. C. Rich, president; George Willard, vice-president; William Stewart, secretary, and Beecher E. Hess, managing secretary. The organization will hold regular meetings, and it is to be hoped they will be sufficiently active to keep the members without difficulty.

Private Showing of United Theatres’ Film

A private showing of Dustin Farum in “The Light of Western Stars,” released simultaneously throughout the United States, was held October 24 at the Twelfth Street Theatre. The showing was attended by a number of local exhibitors and one or two from the surrounding territory. The consensus of opinion seemed to be that it is one of the best pictures on the market, the photography and acting being equal to, if not better, than anything shown for some time.

I T IS only fair to make the statement that "Too Many Millions" need not be taken seriously. Porter Emerson Brownie, the author of the story, gave it the title of "Someone and Somebody," and took a chance, in his words, that heart failure by starting him off as a penniless book agent, and then, without the slightest warning, endowing him with a fortune of forty millions.

Wallace Reid, who plays the part of Walshbanks, is the Paramount production directed by James Cruze, recovered from the shock of being showered with wealth quickly and completely and starts in to spend his income with a reckless abandon that delights the circle of friends and harpies that lose no time in attaching themselves to him. So pleasing does he find his new occupation he objects to passing long enough to sign business documents that are brought to him by his confidential manager and gives this obliging agent the work of playing his part. A few mornings later Van wakes up, after a jolly evening with his pals and finds a young Indian rancher sitting at the side of his bed, gazing sternly at him. She introduces herself and explains her presence to be in the house where Van Dorn is now living, which was once her home. It was taken away from her father by Van Dorn's uncle, two thirsty souls who pried up millions by trickery and died before they could enjoy anything of their new-found wealth.

Desiree demands the return of her money. Van is agreeable, but finds that it is impossible. The confidential manager has used his power of attorney to convert all of the family's property over to his own pocket. With this the story begins. Desiree and Tully Marshall as Wilkins come next to the star in prominence. Gardner Hunter made the scenario.

"THE SHERIFF"
Two-Part Paramount Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle to be Used as a Title with Laughs and Stunts.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ROSCOE may not be as handsome as Bill Hart nor as lithe and evite-like as Doug Fairbanks, but when it comes to doing stunts he is more than willing to take care of himself, and more than capable of taking care of them. In his latest picture, "The Sheriff," he shows that his confidence in himself is founded on a capital and substantial than conceit. Trick riding, steeple climbing, headlong dives out of windows, pistol play, horse riding, and any other love-making—nothing is too swift or too daring for the heavyweight comedian.

The story, written by Roscoe, is a frank admission of the yearning ambition that has been eating at his heart in secret. He has longed to emulate the deeds of the two Apollos of the screen and fill the feminine breast with admiration for his prowess in the art. His love scenes with a Mexican belle are models of fervent passion, and it is not his fault if any of the spectators choose to laugh at him. Later on he transfers his affections to a pretty school-ma'am and rescues her from a band of bandits with such robust bravery of his rivals, if not with all their grace. A little harkney, who supports the name of Snowball, and the only belligerent dog that answers to the name of Luke, do their best to fill Buster Keaton's place, and make a good showing for the efforts. Al St. John is as useful as ever.

"THE SQUAW MAN"
Cecil DeMille Reproduces Through Art Creative Use of Paramount, "Happy Go Lucky" Title.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THAT the methods of DeMille have improved seems to be clearly demonstrated by this reproduction of his first picture, but it is not shown to any advantage. The picture is a stiff one, well made, but nothing new of interest. The story is that of a squaw who is marked for destruction by the Indians and the rival suitors of her son. Girls are hated by Indians, who are only interested in the squaw's property. It is a story of courage and love, of the subconscience and the subconscious, of the pathological and the neurotic. The story, written by Roscoe, is an admirable performance of a character being concentrated in the humble little red mother.

"ILL SAY SO"
George Walsh Is Presented by William Fox in a Speedy Comedy-Drum.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

THE exhibitor who is favored with a large following for George Walsh subjects may safely promise their customers a show that will be satisfied beyond question with this latest production of the Fox-Walsh series. All that Walsh can do to the lips, Walsh does to the karate, acrobatics, stunts and showy displays of agility and agility has been crowded into five reels of dazzling comedy, cleverly moving and entertaining to a degree that is very little, very little, of drama or plot—it's all for the exploitation of a laugh.

Of course there is a German spy plot and its frustration involved. Films without a touch of German spying are not being released these days to any great extent. Walsh does the frustrating, and does it acrobatically and well. Things move so fast that the "love born" will not get much "heart interest" out of the woman in the case, and will miss a lot of the lovelocking that customarily are woven throughout films. But there is a girl involved, who turns in the last few feet Walsh catches up with her and has to have a "happy ending." Once more we must not look for a raise in salary for a Fox title writer. While not all of the titles are exceptional, there are some that are materially to the enjoyment, and all of them are of the "Last Night," "Next Morning" and "story at the start. Louise Parks, a young girl whose home is in Washington Square, New York, is shown as a student in Paris, and the possessor of more than her share.

"HIDDEN FIRES" Entertaining Comedy Conceived in Five-Part Goldwyn Picture Starring Mae Marsh.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

JUST why the title, "Hidden Fires," was selected for the latest Goldwyn picture, featuring Mae Marsh, is not explained by the story. J. Clarkson Miller, who has credited, without writing the scenario, has performed something very like a conjurer's trick in his manipulation of the plot, and neatly concealed an unsuspected comedy motive in the center of a story that starts off with almost tragic intensity. George Irving, the director of the picture, has taken advantage of every opening for developing the lighter moods of his material, and the picture ends in an atmosphere of heart-break and the joyous sight of three honeymoon couples settling sail on the same dayliner.

No time is wasted in plunging into the story, or in taking advantage of the settings. Here is a new type of comedy, a type that is not only the latest but the most entertaining.
of temper. She quarrels with her sweet-hearted, Stephen Underwood, and telegraphs her mother she is coming home. The ship men too. But Tom Griam, Dr. Parke’s physician, declares that the condition of his patient’s health will never enable him to stand. He also tells his daughter’s death. Peggy Murray, who is in the hotel, looks enough like Louise to be her twin sister, and is persuaded to interpose as the hotel is saved by having Louise still the land of the living and coming home to take her proper place in the Parke household. Peggy goes back to the newsstand, strolls out one noon to do some shopping, discovers that her young man’s father is the owner of the store and Landis Junior as much in love with her as her was. They decide on a hasty wedding. And so also does Louise and her George Walsh. Which explains the honeymoon trip.

"SAFE FOR DEMOCRACY"

J. Stuart Blackton Presents a Splendid Illustration of the "Work or Fight" doctrine.

Reviewed by Louise Reeses Harrison.

THERE is true Blackton genius shown in the treatment of this story, some of his old-time skill in creating atmosphere that is convincing, of presenting situations through contrast until the purging power is stirred, and more than one characterization is due to his delicate appreciation of what is essential to the mystery. There is interpreted by Ruby de Remer a true type of American working girl, not the stock figure of this type, but a most appealing and charming figure has been well grasped by Mr. Blackton. He places in the home of this little maid his brave girl to escape from the power of circumstances the figure of a pampered and spoilt girl, the wealth that she marries and quits when he becomes unendurable. This youth is the Junior Craig, his brother at the front has fandom in his shipbuilder of great power, his cuddling mother an idle woman of fashion. He spends much of his wages in the cabaret; not vicious, simply a useless, and therefore, a desolate member of society. He is fond of the little maid, but she is unable to maintain herself, loses heart and is at the point of suicide. Then she receives a letter from a friend who is engaged for herself by a confirmed hobo, played by Mitchell Lewis. This role, though it has been done to be interpreted to a hobo, is done with humor through his quaint philosophy and his association with a diminutive pal known as "Little Jim." The author has gathered together under difficult circumstances, many elements of the story, and brought them into skilled conversion by putting the pampered society girl to work, the homeless hobos and others at work in Craig’s shipyard. The purpose of the story is not only to show pitifully by both author and directing, producer, Blackton and "Little Jim," now work in a rhythm that is very effective, handling the numerous characters with such skill that they are nicely rounded up for a stirring finish. Now arrives the inevitable, the love affair which seems to fill the best screen writers and producers. There is a happy ending for all concerned, but it petered out weakly instead of finishing with snap and fire, or with some splendid symbol to set forth and clinch the splendiferous, timely and finely developed purpose. While "satisfactory," the conclusion lacks inspiration. A great subject, but the picture is a series of incidents of our lives in our times, adhering to the truth in convincing fashion. It has grabbed with readers, those who lend it higher value, it is all artistry and it will shine, but the flame may fail to light the path. Whatever may be the result, it is improved. This should be done, for the story is radiantly human and the noble theme it lives for beauty, intellectual charm and vital truth.

COMMENTS

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

T00 MANY MILLIONS (Paramount).—Porter Emerson Browne wrote the story from which this five-part picture was taken. The acting is distinctly effective, the weight-material, and is well played by Wallace Reid and the rest of the cast. A loud hoot is printed on another page of this issue.

UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE (Artcraft).—Part one of this long story is presented in a dull adaptation from an old English play. The SQUAW MAN (Artcraft).—A reproduction of a pioneer American life, is shown in one of its first pictures, Ann little in a powerful characterization as the suav, Elliott Dexter in the title role.

Fox Film Corporation.

I’LL SAY SO (Fox).—William Fox presents George Walsh in another typically George Walsh comedy without much plot or drama—as usual. "Stunts" there are and to an almost endless extreme. Walsh does a stunt very frequently when some of our little stunt artists would do the same thing naturally. Everything Walsh has is put on the screen. Walsh is not in extenso during "I’LL SAY So." Exhibitors who have a following for this young actor should take an interest in this film. He promises to his patrons. But don’t say much about drama or plot or heart interest. He goes heavy on Walsh and his acrobatics.

WOMAN (Maurice Tourneur).—A notable production of the year, a tribute to modern womanhood through contrast with those of other days, will be on view in the form of a picture of treatment, a contribution to the Screen Hall of Fame. Reviewed in last week’s issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

SCREEN TELEGRAM No. 70 (Mutual).—In this issue of the Screen Telegram are three stories. The first shows Mutual’s work with the troops near the battle line, also scenes in the tobacco fields of the Southern States. The second is a busy corner in Chicago, and scenes in New York showing the Salvation Army collecting money. The last is an item from the race track as the season comes to a close.

BLACK FEET AND FLAT HEADS (Rothacker).—In this picture which has been photographed in the native haunts of the Blackfeet Indians shows their customs, dances, religious ceremonies and contains various scenes of interest pertaining to this ancient tribe of red men.

Pathé Exchange, Inc.

THE SILVER BOOK (Pathé).—Episode No. 12 of "Hands Up." This is full of action and is full of action. It is a story of numerous incidents of importance to the story. One of the scenes of the discovery of a map of "Lost of Laws" in the cornerstone of the Inca temple leading to an attempt on an attempt of theft of this book and the sun message; also there is an interesting story of the American sheriff. The number carries the interest.

WITH THE POLISH ARMY IN FRANCE (French Pictorial-Pathé).—This is an informing subject, which will be of absorbing interest. It is an informing subject, which will be of absorbing interest. It has been aware of the efforts being made to restore the ancient land of Poland. This subject shows the headquarters of Polish troops in France, a presentation of flags by President Poincare and some interesting maneuvers of troops.

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW, No. 19 (Pathé).—Many scenes along the battlefronts of the Great War are shown in this installment. The Italian scenes lead, and glimpses are seen of the trained dogs of war in action. The ruined city of Trieste, the ruined city of Trieste, the ruined city of Trieste, the French port, and the Palestine views include some unusual and informing scenes.

TRAILS DIVIDED (Western).—The two-reel story of the West, featuring Helen Gibson as a girl, known as "The Kid," who is raised with a hanged outlaw. Her father, leader of the band, is shot and she reforms, afterward holding up a stage and saving some bags of gold from the bandits. The subject is not very strong dramatically, but contains some splendid and symmetrical effects. There is a love affair between the girl and the sheriff. The Kid's appeal is in the pleasing Western settings.

TITANIC (Vitagraph).—Episode No. 5 of "Wolves of Kultur," Leeh Baird, as heroine of the story, occurs in this installment. She makes a visit to the home of Zarembo, in a hall gown, and meets Zarembo in the house with the score code book. But she is pursued and after an automobile accident, escapes to a woods, still in the ball gown, which gives her a chance to play. She is later captured and is about to be burned in a house by Zarembo's insane wire as the installment closes.
The Pioneer Film Corporation Presents Florence Reed in a Strongly Dramatic Play of Her Powers.

Cast:
Mrs. James Randolph Emerson, Florence Reed, Frank Mills, Mrs. Wokoff, Mrs. Randolph Emerson, Sr., Mathilde Brudage, Jim Hawkins, Edgar P. Lewis, Charlie, Charles Jackson, Grace, Grace Davison, Mary Beatie, Marjorie Emerson, Paul Harrison, R. I. Keeling.

Directed by John M. Stahl.

The Story: On her wedding day, Mrs. Emerson discovers her husband looking at the picture of another woman, and finds that it is autographed, "With love to my husband, Grace." Too proud to demand an explanation, she lives in misery for many years. Then the break comes. She nurses a poor child, and overhears the story of his family, eventually gaining possession of a diary which reveals this story of her husband's past. In the end she finds happiness through her unhappiness.

Feature Photoplay: Mrs. James R. Emerson, Jr., and Frank Mills as James R. Emerson, Jr.

Advertising Angles: Play up the star, and tell that this play enjoyed a New York run and won praise from the critics. Hit the high lights; perhaps the best being the fact that the hero is a man she has sent for, and finds to her horror that her husband has entered instead. Use teasers such as, "What do you know about your husband?"

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, two six-sheets, one twenty-four sheet. Herald, window cards, press sheets, music cues, Two two-column, one one-column, one three-column and thumbnail electro. Slides, miniature photos, and 11x10, 11x14 and 22x28 photos.

"THE SUNSET PRINCESS"
The Great West Film Company Presents Marjorie Daw, Adapted from Wallace Coburn's Yellowstone Pete's Only Daughter.

Cast:
Beauty, Marjorie Daw, Buck Dawson, Wallace Coburn. The Story: The motherless daughter of Buck Dawson, has been raised from infancy by the cowboys, and at the age of twenty is the pride of the ranch, a boyish woman, and the sweet heart of "Buck" Dawson, the son of a neighboring ranchman.

One day a foreigner stops at Yellowstone's home, and meets Beauty. She soon worships his tales of travel, of the great cities and the wonderful women. He persuades her to elope with him, promising her marriage at the nearest city. They arrive at Butte, and he takes her to a hotel. That evening, in an intoxicated condition, he goes to Beauty's room and insults her.

In the meantime a note which Beauty had left had been discovered, and the faithful Chinese cook warns Buck and Pete of Beauty's danger. Buck and Pete rush to the city, and find Beauty a wreck, and, with threats of vengeance, Buck sets out on the villain's trail. He finally corners him in a deserted camp, and a fight to the finish takes place. The cabin is accidentally set alight, driving the frenzied men into the open. The posse arrive, but Buck insists that it is his fight, and the battle is allowed to proceed. Feature Marjorie Daw as Beauty and Wallace Coburn as Buck Dawson.

Advertising Angles: Advertise this as a stirring Western story, and play up the knife fight in the burning cabin. Use the herald line, "Filmed In the heart of the Rocky Mountains."

Advertising Aids: One, three and six sheets, 1x19 and 11x14 photos. Slides and heralds.

Released through the Arrow Film Corporation.

"THE WOMAN'S LAW"
The Arrow Film Corporation Presents the Stage and Screen Star Florence Reed, in a Reissuued Version of Murrow-Thompson's Famous Novel.

Cast:
George Orcutt, Duncan McIae, Mrs. Orcutt, Florence Reed, Marjorie Ellsworth.

The Story: George Orcutt, a dissolute young New York millionaire, has forfeited his wife's affections by his notorious indolences. Gail Orcutt, his wife, centres her attention on her young son, Vance, and withdraws from society with a sense of shame for her husband's misconduct. Orcutt, continuing his wild life, slays a friend in a quarrel over a young woman. With the fear of the law on him, he tells his wife all, and she, in an attempt to save him, stabs for the office of her friend, District Attorney John Kent. On the way she comes upon the living double of her husband, a stranger, sitting on a park bench, his mind stunned by a terrific shock. She takes the unconscious man to her home, and, telling her husband to flee, substitutes the stranger for her husband to the district attorney. The man is committed to an asylum, from which later he is released, and goes to live at the Orcutt home. He cannot remember who he is, and takes for granted he is George Orcutt. What he cannot understand is his "wife's" evident coldness toward him. Meanwhile, the real George Orcutt, returning home for money, is mis-

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor’s mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor’s audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

The Management of this Theatre desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good clean entertainment.

We want no “legalized” censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

The Silvertip used with the Columbia upper gives a light source that fills the bill in every particular. The Silvertip is heavily plated, making it capable of carrying the heavy currents used in projection without harmful heating.

We wish to call special attention to the new copper adapter which was designed for use with our Silvertip negative carbon. This new adapter, shown in the illustration below, has several outstanding features; it is made in one piece and cannot get out of adjustment while the jaws form a positive clamp, giving a better contact on a smaller portion of the carbon.

The illustration also shows the extent to which the Silvertip can be burned with the aid of this new adapter. The ruggedness of construction together with the quality of the material from which it is made gives the adapter a life equal to that of the rest of the projection apparatus.

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW

The war has reached into every home; it has affected every individual. Not alone because with the millions of men in khaki nearly every family has its representatives in the service, but because the food on the table, the clothing that is worn—every article that is bought or sold, has paid its tribute to War.

Thus there is a universal desire to be informed of the progress of that which has become the biggest part of our daily life. The newspapers and magazines can only tell a part. The motion picture supplements and makes clear. It shows things at the front as they really are!

Every exhibitor should show these official pictures, taken by the Governments of France, Great Britain, Italy and United States. Thus he may satisfy a universal demand!

"The LURE of the

So sure and so absolutely convinced are the Officials of the Universal over the tremendous pulling power and box office value of "THE LURE OF THE CIRCUS" to Exhibitors that we do not hesitate to say that we believe it will surpass ANY serial ever produced for results.

With the drawing power of EDDIE POLO, Hercules of the films, backed by the beauty of Molly Malone, who appears in the first episodes, and beautiful Eileen Sedgwick in the remainder, and a great big picked circus cast, you have tremendous advertising possibilities.

ADVERTISED as "THE GREATEST SERIAL FILM SHOW ON EARTH" it carries conviction and makes good with a vengeance. It IS the greatest serial circus film show ever screened, as your own eyes will prove to you when you gasp at the huge stunts pulled in the first episodes.

Scores of new ideas—new thrills such as you've never seen before, daring beyond belief, with a sensational punch at the end of every episode to carry your patrons eager and anxious to the next episode will make this a smashing success.

So written and so produced as to tie your patrons up for 18 straight solid weeks, giving them the super of all serial photoplay entertainment.

America is Roaring with Laughter at——the comedy scream of the season— "THE GEEZER OF BERLIN," that is more popular right this minute than the day it was released. Here's what one Exhibitor writes in about—"THE GEEZER":

"I opened at The Colonial Theatre, Beaver Falls, with 'THE GEEZER OF BERLIN.' The house broke all records for matinee and at night we did smashing business. Everybody delighted with this comedy."

Unconditional Surrender

Back of everything is the Idea from which it sprung.

Back of Fox success is the Fox Idea—the plan of producing only the kind of motion pictures that the most people want to see.

Back of Fox success is an IDEA so big and broad and sound that it couldn't do anything else but succeed.

Any man is bound to win out, who is clever enough to know what the public wants—and wise enough not to haggle about the cost of producing it—for the public is more generous in its pay than the most generous philanthropist with his gifts.

The public will not only PAY for what it wants, but will pay liberally to the point of extravagance.

William Fox has succeeded for the very reason that he gave the public what it wanted—succeeded far beyond his own ambitious dreams of only a few years ago.

The public has surrendered to the Fox Idea.

MOST PEOPLE KNOW WHAT THEY WANT—GIVE IT TO THEM to the William Fox Idea

Fox Films

There is no "kamerading" about it—it's a complete, wholehearted, unconditional surrender to Fox Pictures.

And the exhibitors of marked success have followed suit—made just as complete, wholehearted, unconditional surrender.

Now—since successful exhibitors are the ones that lean on Fox Pictures, isn't it a wise move for you to do what they are doing?

Wouldn't it be good business for YOU to follow in their footsteps?

For nothing succeeds like success, —and the Fox Idea is a success—a bigger success than you realize, or than we care to boast about.

If you, as an exhibitor, really want success—and we know you do—you can best succeed with Fox productions just as thousands of other exhibitors have.

Look over the list of current Fox releases—study them carefully—then book them quickly.

Is yours a neighborhood theatre?
Then make it a city theatre—a local institution that is as well known a mile—two miles—away as it is around the corner.
You'd like that, wouldn't you?—and it's so easy when you know how.
This is how—give the public the pictures it wants.
That's what William Fox has been doing—and you'll admit he is some success as a producer.
And since William Fox gives the public what it wants, your best bet is to give your public Fox pictures.
The Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York, has been drawing patronage from all sections of the metropolis with "Salome."
Many theatres in New York, Chicago, St. Louis and other cities are making the same tremendous appeal in the same way—with William Fox productions.
Fox pictures knock down neighborhood fences—go over the top of sectional boundaries—annex new territories and spread gradually over the whole municipal map.

William Fox pictures are made for campaigns of this sort. They are big pictures, based on big stories, done in a big way by big actors and the biggest directors in the business. They’re the sort of pictures father and mother take the children to see.

Their appeal is universal—as broad as human nature itself. Pictures, like men, have individuality—and Fox pictures have more individuality than any other pictures in the world—they stand out from the rest like dollar bills among nickels.

Fox pictures are made of the right materials—timeliness and human interest, and they are famous the world over for their heart appeal—for their power of getting and holding interest.

Test Fox pictures now—during the non-release period—and watch your house become as proud as an over-night millionaire.

Stories of the Heart and Home
NOW that the cry "Kamerad!" has come from the Kaiser—

Now that the world is asking what fate is in store for the arch-foe of mankind—

Film buyers are offered this big, gripping, up-to-the-minute drama that shows the Kaiser punished as the public wants to see him punished; that tries the Hohenzollern before the court of World Justice, pronounces and carries out his fate.

It is the picture of the hour, but it is also a picture of permanent value. The beauty of its scenes, stretching back into the dawn of history; its thrilling panorama of present events; its spectacle of humanity triumphant over its would-be crucifer, make it a drama that will live and earn money for the exhibitor long after ordinary screen dramas are forgotten.

The man who acts quickly will draw big profits from this picture.

GERALDINE FARRAR in a modern society and mystery melodrama was just what you and the public wanted. "The Turn of the Wheel" made good and will continue to be a profit-making attraction throughout the year. Booked at The Strand, New York.

MABEL NORMAND returning to broad comedy in "Peck's Bad Girl" caused the screen public to cry "Hurray!" Exactly what they wanted—and a big success in theatres everywhere.

TOM MOORE an instant hit as a Goldwyn star in "Just For Tonight." Fast, speedy, romantic comedy—the kind of story that made audiences forget about the war.

MADGE KENNEDY'S most liked picture—"The Kingdom of Youth." Exhibitors were so enthusiastic about it that they conducted big personal advertising campaigns—and business was heavy. Booked at The Strand, New York.

REX BEACH'S "Laughing Bill Hyde" with Will Rogers introduced a brand new star to the American public and such notices as the critics gave him have rarely ever been equalled in screen history. Booked at The Rivoli, New York.

MAE MARSH in "Hidden Fires" has what dozens of exhibitors rank as her best picture since "Polly of the Circus" and "The Cinderella Man." Booked at The Rialto, New York.

All of these productions are brand new hits since September 1. Two thousand additional theatres, including yours, should book and begin playing them before Christmas. Productions like these are the basis of Goldwyn's power. They are confidence-builders—and for you they are patronage builders.

Nov. 17. TOM MOORE in "Thirty A Week" from the stage success by Thompson Buchanan. Booked at The Rialto, New York.

Nov. 24. MABEL NORMAND in "A Perfect 36." By Tex Charwate. A big, broad comedy-drama. An even greater success than "Peek's Bad Girl."

Remarkable contribution to the aesthetic movement in motion picture production. "Woman" is an exercise in motion picture psychology, in the interpretation of the psychology of the spectator, and in the very art of creating an atmosphere which elicits the emotions of the spectator, whether or not he is aware of the psychological technique in the presentation. It is a psychological drama which is told as a story, and a story which is told as a drama.

The ability of Maurice Tourneur to create pictures which are not only beautiful but also moving, has never been more apparent than in "Woman," which has been playing at the Rivoli Theatre this week. The story is one of love and revenge, and the pictures are lovely, both in their design and their execution. The acting is splendid, and the whole production is a credit to the Twentieth Century-Fox studio.

AN EXHIBITOR should not be expected to hunt among a score of exchanges in each city to find a day's show. He could find it just as well among three or four exchanges. He could find it most easily at any General Film Company exchange, established since 1910.

Nor should manufacturers be expected to scatter their product among a score of exchanges to reach the same exhibitor in each city.

Furthermore, distributors should not be expected to build and maintain a separate exchange in each city. It multiplies their overhead expense and reduces service efficiency. It makes film cost more to the exhibitor.

However, the old situation is improving. The government has taken the nonsense out of railroad routing. An General Film Company is taking the nonsense out of motion picture distribution.

General Film Company long has advocated conservation and warred upon extravagance. It leads in practical conservation by presenting itself as a ready-to-use medium between any manufacturer or distributor and the exhibitor.

Why do thirty, and more, individual producers route their product through General Film Company exchanges? Because its exchange system, the oldest established and most splendidly equipped, was unreservedly open to them. No wonder that they adopted General Film in its completeness rather than the casual exchange here and there.

Why do the most experienced distributors, like George Kleine and Wm. L. Sherry, discard their own circuit of exchanges and adopt those of General Film Company? They have told you. Looked at calmly, an exchange is a plain, unadorned utility which can serve many interests at a saving. General Film exchanges can do it particularly well. And these men, standing on their own platform of conservation, have shown the strength of their convictions by applying them.

Progressive people see the absurdity of film distribution in the extravagant way, when it can be done better at a minimum of outlay. They naturally turn to such a smoothly-running, permanent service concern as General Film Company, which circulates their film while they retain full control of it.

For over a year General Film Company has been inviting progressive people to employ its facilities.

The invitation still holds good!

4,000 "SHOWN"!

When the St. Joseph (Mo.) Civic Festival Association featured "America's Answer" at the Auditorium, not long ago, they had 1,000 people at the matinee and 3,000 at the evening performance!

This is typical.

From all over the country come reports of packed houses, thrilled audiences and storms of applause bestowed on this marvelous war picture, which was filmed in France by the U. S. Signal Corps and sent to this country under the direction of General Pershing.

When you book "America's Answer," you do two things:

1. You sell out the house, automatically, for each showing of the film.

2. You render the Government a distinctly patriotic service by giving the people of your city an opportunity to visualize this nation's glorious part in the great war, through the medium of the People's Films.

If you have not yet booked "America's Answer," you had better do so right away. The rental has been figured on a basis that will permit of showing at regular admission prices.

AFFILIATED TAKES OVER MUTUAL FILM

Brink, Clark and Cornelius Acquire, on Behalf of Themselves and Associates, 51 Per Cent. of the Stock of the Latter Corporation—Sheldon Remains

A NNOUNCEMENT has been made by the Mutual Film Corporation that H. A. Brink, W. J. Clark and H. C. Cornelius, president, vice-president and secretary-treasurer respectively of the Affiliated Distributors Corporation, acquired on behalf of themselves and a number of exhibitors of this country the financial and managing control of the Mutual Film Corporation on Wednesday, November 6, the papers being signed in Chicago on that date. Affiliated holds 51 per cent. of the stock of Mutual.

This new move means that certain exhibitors throughout the United States and Canada will be the dominating and controlling factor of the Mutual distributing organization.

Mutual has branch offices in twenty-nine of the principal cities of the United States and Canada.

Messrs. Clark, Brink and Cornelius are prominent exhibitors and capitalists of Grand Rapids, Mich., which is the headquarters of the Affiliated Distributors Corporation, and they have taken a commanding position in the industry since the formation of that organization last June.

The Affiliated Distributors Corporation is organized and operated upon a direct, from-producer-to-exhibitor cooperative booking plan which expressly provides for the elimination of waste, speculation and unnecessary expenses in connection with the manufacturing, booking and distributing of motion pictures.

The booking of all pictures is handled by five unit corporations, exclusively owned and controlled by exhibitors, which corporations are organized to cover five sections of the United States, each section being subdivided into nineteen zones, which correspond almost identically with the branch offices of the Mutual Film Corporation.

By this new affiliation, the branch offices of the Mutual Film Corporation will co-operate with the Exhibitors' Booking Corporation in every section, and in all, it is expected eventually to be operated as exhibitors' units.

This movement does not affect in any way the releasing of productions through Affiliated and in no wise changes its plans, but it guarantees an exhibitors controlled distribution through a corporation which is thoroughly equipped and which can render efficient distribution.

The Affiliated Distributors' Corporation by this move will benefit very materially under the new coalitional co-operation of James M. Sheldon, the former president of Mutual, who now holds the position of chairman of the board of directors of the Mutual Film Corporation.

A. S. Kirkpatrick, assistant general manager of Mutual, will retain that position after the new coalition, and will maintain control and supervision over all the exchange branches of Mutual.

The present efficient organization of Mutual will be maintained throughout and will be used as the nucleus around which the contemplated larger organization will be built.

The officers of the new organization are: President, William J. Clark; vice-president and general manager, H. A. Brink; chairman of the board of directors, J. M. Sheldon; secretary, H. C. Cornelius; treasurer, Paul H. Davis; assistant general manager, A. S. Kirkpatrick; auditor, Hugh Davis, and C. C. Pettjohn, general counsel.

In addition to these officers, an advisory board of prominent exhibitors, representing every section and branch of the Mutual Film Corporation in the United States and Canada, will be appointed. Each member of this board will be a substantial stockholder in the Mutual Film Corporation.

JAMES S. MCGAUGE.

Officially Indorse the Affiliated.

Officially incurring the action of Messrs. Clark and Brink, the following telegram was received by C. S. Pettjohn in New York from Frank Rembusch and others, exhibitors who urge exhibitors to join the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation:

The Affiliated Distributors' Corporation recently organized by Messrs. H. A. Brink and William J. Clark of Grand Rapids, to establish a plan of producer-to-exhibitor direct, have to-day secured control of the Mutual Film Corporation. Under this plan the combined product of Affiliated and Mutual producers will be sold to exhibitors through branch offices established throughout the United States and Canada. This plan guarantees an exhibitors controlled distribution through the Mutual Film Corporation.

We urge all exhibitors to join the Affiliated organization because it will give them absolute control of their product and eliminate speculation and juggling in the film market and bring about a great saving in film rental through the Mutual Film Exchange on the part of exhibitors on a co-operative plan.

The Passing of the Mutual.

In all probability the passing of the control of the Mutual Film Corporation to the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation means the closing of its career as a factor in the motion picture business. Prior to the time the papers in the transfer were signed at Chicago, Mutual, which is a distributing company, had no product for the cooperators except the Screen Telegram, which is a news reel, and which was sold to Hearst's International Film Service. This situation, and in fact that the corporation was losing money at an alarming rate, induced the men who controlled its destinies to accept the proposition of Messrs. Clark and Brink.

It is too soon to state just what will be the policy of the new control of the Mutual Film Corporation, with regard to their acquisition of C. S. Pettjohn, general counsel for the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, has not seen Messrs. Clark and Brink since the purchase was made, and there is no opportunity to discuss plans with them. It is intimated that some radical changes will be made.

Mutual Had Spectacular Career.

The Mutual Film Corporation was organized by Harry Aitken in 1912. It marked Mr. Aitken's first venture in big film business, he having prior to that time operated J. C. Kahn and Co., a wholesale jobber in film exchange at St. Louis. Its organization also marked the first considerable entry into the film business of Wall Street interests. Crawford L. Leob was its first president, and Otto Kahn, representing Kuhn, Loeb & Co., was a director. The offices of the corporation were at 50 West Street. Others in the directorate were John R. Freuler, the late C. J. Hite, S. S. Hutchinson and L. B. Ritchie. Subsequently the firm of Baumann & Kessel joined the board.

In 1913 the Mutual took offices in the Masonic Building at the corner of Sixth Avenue and 2nd Street, where two floors were occupied by the general offices and the New York exchange. Some of the best known men in the film business were employed and the Mutual

THERE several rumors, denials and re-rumors that have issued from Los Angeles concerning the private affairs of Mildred L. Harris and Charles Chaplin came to a definite termination late last week when admission was made by all concerned that Miss Harris and Mr. Chaplin had been man and wife since October 23.

Robertson-Cole to Issue New Billie Rhodes Features

THE Robertson-Cole Company, which lately has acquired a number of important features for world-wide distribution, is planning an exploitation campaign covering two hemispheres for Billie Rhodes, the new star of the National Film Corporation.

Robertson-Cole has immediately started outlining a big campaign across country and through other lands which bids fair to make Miss Rhodes one of the best known screen celebrities. One of the first steps will be a special New York presentation for the trade. At this de luxe premiere, Miss Rhodes will be officially introduced to the film world as a feature star.

The first Billie Rhodes picture is “The Girl of My Dreams,” to be followed by a picturesque circus girl story. Miss Rhodes has completed the second production, and is now visiting in New York.

One city of the country, Los Angeles, has already seen “The Girl of My Dreams” at a pre-release showing. T. L. Tally, by special arrangement, presented Miss Rhodes’ first big effort at his Los Angeles Theatre. Mr. Tally, as a result of that pre-view, has christened her “the screen’s daintiest star. All of the Los Angeles motion picture critics are enthusiastic over Miss Rhodes’ debut into the realm of feature stars.
GRIP OF INFLUENZA IS LOOSENING

Nearly All Sections of Country Open Doors of Theatres to Good Business—Northwest and San Francisco Still Closed—Crowds Acclaim Resumption in the Southwest

With few exceptions health authorities in the United States have lifted the ban imposed on motion picture theatres by reason of the irruptions of influenza. San Francisco is to remain closed until December 1. Seattle and the northwest generally have refused to permit public gatherings in theatres. In North Carolina Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Raleigh were closed at the latest writing, although the remainder of the State is open to picturegoers. Dayton has opened its theatre doors to all but the children. The situation in Illinois shows marked improvement.

Houses in the Southwest have resumed business to the hearty satisfaction of throngs of picture patrons. Towns situated near cantonments especially have felt the boom. Pennsylvania, where the epidemic was very heavy, has thrown open its doors. The national capital, too, has permitted theatre men to entertain their patrons. The coming of peace, together with the opening of the winter season marks a dramatic shift in the business situation facing motion picture men a month ago. There is every indication of a big winter for motion picture theatres.

November 11 Tentative Date for Minneapolis Opening

Picture men of Minneapolis considered as a joke the proposal of Dr. H. M. Guilford, city health commissioner, to reopen all theatres if proprietors would compel patrons and attendants to wear influenza masks. Dr. Guilford declared that Minneapolis theatres could open at once if this precaution was taken, but none of the houses took advantage of the opportunity. November 11 has been fixed by the health authorities as the tentative date for the reopening of theatres should conditions permit.

"I'd just as soon hang out a smallpox sign," said L. R. Finklestein, chain of ten Minneapolis and six St. Paul theatres, commenting on the chance to resume business. "Kindly take the audience and orchestra. The idea is too absurd to give it serious consideration."

Mr. Ruben declared that his Minneapolis houses were losing $20,000 weekly from business losses.

"The only thing the exhibitors can do now is to wait until the all clear signal is given publicly and driven home by the health authorities and the press," he said. "The public is thoroughly alarmed, and it would be folly to reopen before that time. The idea to require patrons to wear influenza masks is a joke."

St. Paul Gets a Scare.

While Minneapolis was preparing for the reopening of theatres, exhibitors of St. Paul wereraisoning the graft in the face of the influenza epidemic, were given a scare last week, when an attempt was made to close the town.

A citizens' committee was appointed in St. Paul by the City Council to cope with the epidemic situation. Following the report that the hospital facilities in St. Paul were not sufficient to check a possible epidemic, Dr. B. F. Simon, health commissioner of that city, added that at least 100 St. Paul persons suffering from influenza would probably be removed to hospitals if space was available.

A resolution asking the city health authorities to close up the city was introduced at a meeting of the emergency committee, but the health authorities decided that there was yet no cause for issuing closing orders.

Fever deaths from influenza occurred in St. Paul, where theatres, schools and churches remained open, than in Minneapolis, where they were closed, for the week ending October 26.

This information was contained in a bulletin received at the health offices in Minneapolis from the Federal Bureau of Vital Statistics. For the week ending October 26 there were 64 deaths in St. Paul and 89 in Minneapolis. For the week ending October 26 there were 147 deaths in St. Paul and 128 in Minneapolis. Dr. Simon, health commissioner of St. Paul, said the comparisons are unfair, as the epidemic has not attained the proportions in St. Paul that it has in Minneapolis.

Many Towns Open.

The influenza situation in Minneapolis continues to show a steady improvement, and many small towns in this territory have reopened during the past few days, after having been closed for a short time.

Some of the towns which have reopened are as follows: Minnesota—Canby, Bemidji, Cold Spring, Willmar, Glenwood, St. Charles, Winthrop, Bemidji, Slavon, Clara City, Delano, Mabel, St. Peter, Raymond, Fairmont, Trout Lake, apple River, Pine Hill, Mora, Chisholm, and Virginia. South Dakota—Sioux Falls, Mount Vernon, Redfield. Wisconsin—Green Bay and Spencer. Montana—Plentywood.

All of Michigan Is Now Free of Influenza Ban

The moving picture theatres in Detroit were formally reopened on Wednesday, November 6, by consent of Governor Albert E. Sleeper, and through the efforts of Dr. James W. Inches, Detroit health officer. When the governor was in Detroit on Saturday, November 2, he told the local representative of the Moving Picture World that he was in favor of the ban being lifted before Friday, November 8, possibly the 7th. He said he had talked with Dr. Olin, of the State Board of Health, who assured him that it would be a serious mistake to open before the epidemic had been completely abated. Furthermore, he was acting upon the advice of members of state boards in other sections. After all it did put the governor in a rather peculiar and sensitive position.

Ban Not a Political Move.

The governor to the World correspondent absolutely denied that the ban on theatres and public gatherings was a political move, declaring that it was done entirely in the interests of the health of Michigan. "I wish I could lift the ban—I wish conditions justified doing so," said the governor. "But see the position I am placed in. I have had a dozen protests against reopening by people of prominence in almost every section, while on the other hand the protests were comparative few against closing, among them being some of the theatre owners. Personally, I would rather see no ban at all, and only acted in accordance with the recommendations of the State Board of Health, who have the function it is to safeguard public health."

Governor Consents to Opening.

Dr. Inches notified theatres they could open starting Wednesday, as a result of a conversation he had with the governor at his home on November 4. The governor denied this, saying that he had given Detroit special permission to hold a Christian Science meeting on Wednesday night, and refusing to lift the ban. Dr. Inches again got the governor on the telephone, and, after assuring him that Doit was in favor of lifting the ban, the governor's consent was concerned, succeeded in finally persuading the governor to say, "Well, as long as you misunderstood me and the theatres are ready to open, I won't stand in their way."

However, the ban on the rest of Michigan was not lifted until Friday, November 8.

Louisville Opened November 10.

The State Board of Health of Kentucky, at a meeting in Louisville, November 6, partially lifted the ban, with the result that picture theatres in Louisville will continue operations starting Sunday, November 10. The ban was also lifted at Mayfield and Bowling Green. The State Board of Health refused to lift the ban in other cities and counties, leaving it to the local boards of such counties to investigate and report their findings to the state board before any lifting is done. It was reported at the meeting that there had been 175,000 influenza cases in the state, and 3,636 deaths, irrespective of deaths at Camp Taylor. The ban on racing at Latonia was left to the authorities of Kenton County to report to the state board.

Buffalo Lifts Influenza Ban.

By proclamation of Mayor Buck, of Buffalo, the quarantine laid on this city on account of the Spanish influenza has the feeling is tentative that gatherings in cities not to be denied will be permissible. The rush promises to continue right through the fall and winter.

All Theatres in South Carolina Open.

Carolina, opened simultaneously on Monday, November 4, the closing order having been lifted by order of the State Board of Health. In the cities where canteenmoons are located in the state, business is reported at capacity since opening, but in other towns the theatre feeling is that it will require three to six weeks to overcome the effects of the closed period. Theatre in Columbia were prepared for the opening with tentative bookings, and opened with exceptional attractions, which drew capacity crowds.

Charlotte Still Closed Tight.

While almost the entire State of North Carolina has now reopened, the manager of this city is keeping the ban effective November 4. Charlotte is still closed tight, with likelihood of reopening not earlier than the middle of November. Conditions here have not improved as rapidly as the health authorities had hoped, and much opposition has developed to reopening until all danger of a recurrence has passed.

Winston-Salem Keeps Ban on Theatres.

The ban on church gatherings in Winston-Salem, N. C., was lifted, effective November 3. Soda fountains were reopened on Friday, but there has been said regarding a tentative opening date for the theatres. Much opposition to a reopening thus early even of the churches has developed, and it is doubtful whether they will remain open. The theatres had expected to reopen on November 4, coincident with the lifting of the ban on soda fountains, but much surprise was exhibited when the Board of Health failed to name theatres in their opening order. Managers had been throwing out ideas of a tentative arrangement, which were hurriedly canceled Saturday night.

Conditions Still Bad in Raleigh.

Epidemic conditions in Raleigh, N. C., have not improved sufficiently to warrant a reopening of the theatres and other places of assembly, according to Dr. Charles W. Stiles, in charge of the entire epidemic situation in North Carolina. While other cities in the vicinity, including Greensboro and Durham, opened on November 4, Raleigh will likely have two additional weeks of inactivity, according to board's opinion is not changed materially.

Business Poor in Wilmington.

Wilmington, N. C.---Picture theatres are finding conditions materially changed since the theatres were allowed to reopen. It is reported that the business is at a dull season at least for the next two or three months. Attendance at the local picture houses has been away below par since their opening, even keeping up to the hot weather records for attendance. The epidemic is entirely wiped out here, and the only cause to which poor business is ascribed is not expected that many have found that they can enjoy their own fireside of evenings, and have become more or less detached from their habit of attending the movies by the closed period, which extended over four weeks' time.

Heavy newspaper advertising failed to bring the crowds upon the reopening, and a posteriori reports by business men indicate that the managers are looking around for a solution to the problem. Pictures of higher than ordinary quality have been offered, but the stay-at-homes will be back again with but poor results.

Kansas and Missouri Resume Full Operations

The Kansas State ban on gatherings was raised, effective midnight, November 2; put into force at that time in order that church services might be held Sunday. In some cities there are Sunday moving picture exhibitions, and these were consequently relieved of the state interdiction. However, each locality continued to operate independently with reference to influenza restrictions, and in more than half the cities and towns exhibitions were not permitted, and in most cases other gatherings also, were kept closed another week.

The lifting of the ban in Kansas was anticipated and the previous week scores of exhibitors sent tentative instructions on resuming service to the Kansas City exchanges. In many instances, the local boards were not finally lifted and the exhibitors had to send word to exchanges that they could not start yet.

Wires canceling shipping orders came into Kansas City thick and fast on Saturday, November 2. Usually the "paper" had been forwarded, but the films had been returned. The lifting of the ban on the reopening of theatres was established.

In Missouri there has been no general state restriction on gatherings, though nearly every community has followed suit of large cities with respect to prohibition of gatherings. Very few Missouri towns are reopening the week of November 4.

Exhibitors and Exchanges Co-operate.

"Exhibitors and exchanges seem to be entirely on an even keel, and there is a feeling that the epidemic will be gradually overcome by the exchanges and exhibitors working together to protect "the trade. The exhibitors are said to have received offers of cooperation from advertisers. There are few places where the business has been better than usual during the epidemic. In many places the exchanges, in an effort to build up business, have been offering exclusive run pictures to a city with the understanding that the exhibitors would be there to exhibit the pictures to the best advantage."

Recent developments in the situation of the business are not such as to encourage confidence. The ban on motion pictures and other community events is still in effect. The epidemic is not over, although there is a decided decline in the number of new cases, which can be seen in the reports from various cities.

Restrictions Extended in Northwestern Section

Beginning Saturday, November 2, the theatres of Seattle will not be allowed to reopen, in accordance with the orders of the state health authorities.

Influenza Receding in Ohio.

Reports from all over Ohio, and especially from the health authorities of Cincinnati, indicate that the influenza epidemic is noticeably on the wane, and that, with due care, it is probably due to disappear in a short time. Most of the cases are small in number and the number of new cases are much smaller than at any time during the past month, giving reason to believe that the epidemic is at its most serious.

The harmony existing between the exhibitors and exchanges at the present stage of the situation is noteworthy. From reports of the exhibitors with each other—reports have reached Kansas City of lack of co-operrespect in local authorities, and within a few days it is believed the Cincinnati Board of Health will relax the closing orders now in force.

Butte Opened November 9.

Theatres will be reopened Saturday, November 9, according to health officials.

Louisiana Expects to Open Again About November 17.

It is claimed that the city of New Orleans and Louisiana territory have suffered more from the restrictions laid upon the theatres because of the prevalence of Spanish influenza than any other city or district. The officials were somewhat tardy in closing places of amusement and the disease had a good start before drastic measures were adopted. The theatres readily acquired in all restrictions placed upon them and closed their doors willingly. The malady ran its course and the people returned to their normal habits of life, but were denied the motion picture shows and other forms of amusement. Some of the exhibitors believed that they would be forced to close if the order were continued.

The health authorities would give no intimation of when affairs should be allowed to resume their usual business until they have canvassed the situation. There were three heads of departments concerned in the determination of the date upon which places of amusement would be allowed to resume operations.

On Sunday, November 3, the churches were allowed to open, and the clamor for the opening of the picture shows became more the insistence. But, unfortunately, some of the exhibitors set up a howl for immediate opening, with the result that the newspapers took up the discussion and other exhibitors were powerless to make their silence effective. However, a meeting was held, and at the expiration of 48 hours the relaxation was in operation, and the opening of the theatres as such was allowed. Meanwhile the people have come into a full appreciation of the pleasure they derive from the daily attendance at the picture shows.

Big Influx of Business in Opened Southwest District.

A MOST as suddenly as it appeared the influenza has vanished from the major portion of the southern states. A temperature of 90 has been raised in almost every city of importance in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. Exhibitors are doing a business which has never been equaled in the past, and film exchanges are again working full staffs amidst bustling activity. Managers are finding that complete rehearsals of the plays are necessary to keep the business up. The demand for admission was so great that the general closing was no mean task. Most of them are taking occasion to correct and improve their forums, and with the opening of the theatres, the most efficient service possible to exhibitors who are clamoring for film.

From all parts of Texas come reports that the business of the exhibition shows is deferring. It was at first feared the public would be slow to patronize the play-houses. Instead of this, an amusement-hungry Texas waited in line to get seats at the theatres in most of the large cities.

Soldier Patronage Heavy.

In Fort Worth the theatres were closed on account of the influenza, November 2, theatre managers were astonished by a sudden rush of khaki. Soldiers swarmed to the picture shows. Theatre managers called up all former officials and were informed that the quarantine was off at Camp Bowie, the great cantonment just outside Fort Worth, and the next month had the privilege of seeking their own amusement in the town. The exhibitors had to turn hundreds away during the opening season and evening, and similar conditions prevailed over Saturday, November 3.

The lid came off in Dallas Saturday, November 2. It was at first proposed not to open the theatres until November 9 or 10, but the city health authorities, finding a sudden drop in influenza cases to zero or death, advanced the opening a week.

Dallas Theatres Played to Capacity.

Every theatre from the big downtown shows to the little suburban playhouses were jammed to the aisles during Saturday. Managers brushed the dust from their employees' hats. Only signs and brought them into play. Dallas exhibitors are more than optimistic. They declare the public has been brought to realize that the amusement afforded by their theatres plays a very real part in the lives of Dallas folks. They are confident that losses sustained during the depression will be more than made up during the coming winter season.

Epidemic in Illinois Shows Improved Condition.

At the time of writing, Saturday, November 9, epidemic conditions in Chicago have greatly improved. New cases of influenza and pneumonia in Chicago showed a steady and continued decline for the week. The new cases of influenza for Fridays was 44, against 179 for the preceding day, and the death rate from this ailment was 58 on Friday as compared with Thursday's report of 60.

The number of new pneumonia cases for Friday was 38, with 28 deaths on that day from this cause, whereas Thursday showed 35 new cases and 35 deaths. Beginning Monday, November 4, all theatres in Chicago were permitted to run full time.

Pennsylvania Theatres Now Running Full Tilt.

AUTHENTIC information received from reliable source show that 90 per cent. of the theatres in Eastern Pennsylvania were operating on November 9, and 100 per cent. by Wednesday, November 1. The epidemic ban which is now being gradually removed by the authorities in nearly every district throughout the State, is expected to become a thing of the past by Wednesday, at the very latest.

G. Segel, booker of the Paramount and Artcraft exchange and accepting dates on shows for both Monday and Wednesday of the above mentioned days. Business in Philadelphia is gradually resuming its normal trend. Although the epidemic ban, though immediately following the opening of the theatres, it was apparent that neighborhood houses had only regained partial strength, patronage, while the centrally located houses had restored only 70 per cent. of their clientele.

Conditions in this city, however, have shown a decided improvement and since Thursday, November 3, many exhibitors have remarked that they were doing business in the city. Ninety per cent. of the theatres in Philadelphia are...
November 10 the Date for Iowa Reopenings

THE lid is gradually being pried off in Iowa and theatrical conditions are becoming normal. While comparisons with theatres are open at this writing, the majority of them will resume operations the coming week and before November 10 the entire state, unless an unexpected should happen, will be doing business as usual.

Local film exchanges are sending men out the coming week for the first time since the ban went into effect. Conditions, therefore, there is no turnover business locally for either the picture theatres or the others on resuming activities. The public seemed a little at first with changing large gatherings, although business continued to improve throughout the week.

The ban has not been lifted for soldiers from Camp Dodge on attending theatres. A military policeman stands on guard at each theatre entrance and stops any prospective soldier customers. The rule applies to officers as well as men. It is understood this phase of the ban will be lifted within the next few days, and with 25,000 soldiers at Camp and no way to come out the month's time should boom at the picture houses again.

San Francisco Managers to Celebrate Reopening

T HE epidemic of influenza is abating in northern California, and it is expected that the city will reopen at a comparatively early date. In some communities in the interior tentative plans were made for reopening November first. However, at this writing, that San Francisco houses may also be allowed to open their doors again on that date. Some exhibitors have been quoted as saying that it would be the part of wisdom to defer the opening date until every assurance can be given that all danger is passed. On November 1 the leading theatre managers of the city, together with film exchange men, met at a luncheon at Tait's and discussed the proposition of holding a grand downtown celebration the night before about reopening to give thanks for the final return to health of San Francisco. It was suggested that the Board of Supervisors, the Down Town Association, the Chamber of Commerce, the various unions connected with the theatrical business and the newspapers be urged to aid the festival in every way possible, so that the event would not only be participated in by the million residents of Greater San Francisco but by out-of-town residents as well. The date of the celebration will depend upon the selection of the opening date by the local Board of Health. This may be as late as December 1.

Washington Opens to Big Business

Big business greeted every theatre in Washington, D.C., when the ban on public amusement was lifted November 4, and since that date most of the houses have been hanging out "S. R. O. signs every night.

Local bankers toward the impression that the closed period, although it entailed a loss of many thousands of dollars to the industry in this city, was in a way a good thing for the game. "For some time prior to the first of October," said an exhibitor, "I noticed a little falling-off of interest in motion pictures. True, we continued to do capacity business as before, but the picture bunches but in a stream and the audience fell off a little earlier than it had been doing. The city was so full of strangers with few engagements and after many evenings with nothing to do, that we were assured of capacity business, but still the impression prevailed that people were fed-up with the show, however, the crowds are big and we cannot accommodate all who would like to see the show. The rest gave them a chance to do without when I had seen them and to get hungry for more, while undoubtedly thousands of people found time to hang heavy on their hands with no motion picture shows at which to spend the evening."

Toronto Opened November 4.

When the health authorities of Toronto raised the ban on theatrical performances and permitted the selling of tobacco, restriction was continued in that the admission of all children under the age of seventeen years to theatres was absolutely prohibited in any circumstances. This order was a hard one to swallow because the Toronto schools continued closed for a week after theatres reopened because of the epidemic and the children had no place to go.

Toronto exhibitors showed confidence in the situation, however, by booking the best films on the market for their reopenings. A few raised prices for special attractions and a few conducted special matinee performances on the reopening day, but it was put up for some of the lost ground.

Generally speaking, the closing of Toronto theatres for the two weeks resulted in a state of affairs that could not have been obtained under any other circumstances. It was literally a "clean-up period" for all theatres and the theatres were never in better shape, from a physical standpoint, than they were when they reopened on November 4.

Dayton Opens with Ban on Children.

Dayton theatre and public amusements were allowed to open Saturday, November 2. Only one limitation was placed on the operation of the local theatres, this being that children under sixteen were not to be allowed to enter the theatres until further notice was given by the health board. Local managers and theatre people in general were pleased with the opening, Dayton having been closed for the last four weeks. The ban on children under sixteen will be lifted within the next week, thus making the opening complete.

The Dayton Theatre opened with Ger-aldine Farrar in "The Turn of the Wheel," with special music by the Dayton Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Dewitt H. Thomas, musical director of the Dayton, whose wife passed away several weeks ago, is ill at his father's home in Indianapolis, but a long distance call brought the noted conductor the ability to resume duties at an early date. The Strand opened with the Paramount-Artcraft special, "The Hun Within," and according to reports business at that house was not up to the usual standard.

Ban Still On in Portland

Everything is still quiet in Portland, Ore., motion picture circles. Several of the larger cities in the territory have allowed the picture houses to reopen. There is no prospect of the lifting of the ban in the large cities for at least another week if then.

Cape Breton Opens; St. John Closed.

The cases of influenza in St. John, N. B., are decreasing, but it is not at all likely that the theatres will be opened this coming week. The health authorities are determined to stamp out the epidemic. The picture houses and the theatre although Cape Breton have been reopened and the people are enjoying once more the opportunity of going to picture shows.

Film Clearing House Buys Kleine Exchanges

CLOSELY following the announcement that a number of prominent New York business men had taken advantage of the opportunity offered by the business being at the lowest point and the consequent readjustment of the different branches of the motion picture industry to work out a new and distinct plan of operation, it is now put into operation immediately on a permanent basis under the name of Film Clearing House, Inc., comes the statement that the new company has bought outright all of the George Kleine exchanges and will have them remodeled for immediate operation under the Film Clearing House plan.

Frank G. Hall as Supervising Director.

Among the well-known film men who have joined forces are Lynn S. Card, who is acting as general manager of exchanges; A. Jerome Lewis and Frank H. Gilman. Mr. Lewis has now reached Atlanta on a trip through the South, while Mr. Gilman is visiting Chicago. Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh. D. J. Chatkin, who also has allied himself with Film Clearing House, Inc., comes the statement that the new company has bought outright all of the George Kleine exchanges and will have them remodeled for immediate operation under the Film Clearing House plan.

Managers of exchanges already engaged include Philip O. Tupper, New York; C. C. Hans, Pittsburgh; A. Lincoln Ehrrott, Boston; Frank J. Flaherty, Chicago; C. P. Saunders, St. Louis; Carl De Seay, Atlanta, and W. A. Haynes, Detroit.

With the opening date of all branches of Film Clearing House, Inc., definitely set as December 1 and their readiness for complete operation on that date now makes look forward to announcements regarding producers who will take immediate advantage of the new outlet for their pictures are promised in the near future.
THEATRICAL MEN BACK WAR DRIVE

Moving Picture Interests Active in Raising Liberal Share of the Immense Sum Needed to Comfort Our Soldiers on Foreign Soil as Well as in Home Camps

THE Allied Theatrical, Motion Picture, Music and Entertainments Campaign was launched by the Red Cross Campaign Committee, of which William Fox is chairman and George M. Cohan associate chairman, completed their organization. The two men have allotted their services to the cause, and it is hoped that the campaign will be a success. In the Red Cross Drive, William Fox has placed the chairmanship of the Industrial Division in charge of Freder- ick W. Ziegfeld, representing the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. As soon as he received the official notification of his appointment, Mr. Ziegfeld appointed the following divisional directors to act on the committee with him:

Adolph Zukor, representing the motion picture producers; Walter W. Ir- win, representing the motion picture distributors; Jules Brulatour, representing the supply and equipment dealers; Paul H. Whiting, representing the motion picture exporters; J. A. Golden, representing the motion picture labora- tories; Samuel Middleman, representing the motion picture exchanges; Geo. H. Atkinson, representing the Klaw & Erlanger interests; J. W. Jacobs, representing the Shubert interests; Charles Bird, representing the Elliott, Comstock and Gest's interests; Nicholas Schenck, representing the Marcus Loew interests; Chas. S. Levin, representing the Wm. Fox Circuit of Theatres; Ben Moss, representing the Moss interests; E. F. Albee, representing the E. F. Keith Circuit; John J. Maloney, representing the United Booking Office interests; Henry Chesterfield, representing the National Vaudeville Artists; J. H. Hart, representing the Bur- league interests; Jules Whitmark, representing the music publishers; E. Zieg- linger, representing the Metropolitan Opera Association; Henry Hoke, representing the wig and costume makers.

A new plan of organization has been worked out for this drive which in- volves the public, and is expected to be done on a tremendous scale. Divisional Directors will be appointed for every concern directly or indirectly connected with the motion picture or theatrical industries. Mr. Elliott received his appointment on Friday last and that same night let- ters went out to the committee men list- ing the task allotted to each of them. On Saturday letters were sent to all the executive heads of the motion picture companies concerning their obligation to their companies. They were requested to appoint captains of the home office, exchange, studios, laboratories, design and producers, to represent their companies. In this way the entire subscription for each company will be kept in- tact and will not be divided as in the Red Cross Drive.

Motion Picture Interests

Co-operate in War Drive

Based on the experience obtained in the Red Cross Drive of last spring, in which the Industrial Di- vision of the Allied Theatrical Motion Picture Committee was engaged, the Committee rolled up a total subscription of $90,000, a higher total by several thousands than that obtained by the Industrial Division of any other indus- try in Greater New York, has perfected its organization and its campaign is under way.

As in the Red Cross Drive, William Fox has placed the chairmanship of the Industrial Division in charge of Freder- ick W. Ziegfeld, representing the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. As soon as he received the official notification of his appointment, Mr. Ziegfeld appointed the following divisional directors to act on the committee with him:

Adolph Zukor, representing the motion picture producers; Walter W. Ir- win, representing the motion picture distributors; Jules Brulatour, representing the supply and equipment dealers; Paul H. Whiting, representing the motion picture exporters; J. A. Golden, representing the motion picture labora- tories; Samuel Middleman, representing the motion picture exchanges; Geo. H. Atkinson, representing the Klaw & Erlanger interests; J. W. Jacobs, representing the Shubert interests; Charles Bird, representing the Elliott, Comstock and Gest's interests; Nicholas Schenck, representing the Marcus Loew interests; Chas. S. Levin, representing the Wm. Fox Circuit of Theatres; Ben Moss, representing the Moss interests; E. F. Albee, representing the E. F. Keith Circuit; John J. Maloney, representing the United Booking Office interests; Henry Chesterfield, representing the National Vaudeville Artists; J. H. Hart, representing the Bur- league interests; Jules Whitmark, representing the music publishers; E. Zieg- linger, representing the Metropolitan Opera Association; Henry Hoke, representing the wig and costume makers.

In this way the entire subscription for each company will be kept in- tact and will not be divided as in the Red Cross Drive.

Washington Wondering as to Future of Division of Films

Motion Picture men are wondering what will happen to the Division of Films Committee on Public Information when the war ends. George Creel, chairman of the committee, has declared that when peace is signed, Mr. Creel plans to return to his bureau, with the exception of those relating to foreign countries, will cease. Whether this means that the pictures division will once discontinue its work can only be predicted. In any case, the pictures division will keep it up until the pictures now out and those in preparation have been cir- culated throughout the country. It is not stated.

The Division of Films, through its several official motion pictures, has done a great deal to give the people of the country a clear cut picture of the situation. It has been pointed out that a great deal of educational work can be done with these pictures, but whether it will be done is uncertain. Gaumont news pictures will not yet be said.

The question has also arisen as to what will be done with the propaganda pictures for the campaign for the British war loan. If the anti-American feeling in England continues, these pictures will be just the right picture that is needed in this time of the public.

Gaumont News Service

Ready for Post-Bellum

During the entire four years of the war the Gaumont News Service has furnished service to patrons of the best photographic news of war happenings in every country of the world. It is also said that its dissemination of this pictures will be of great help to the creation of a friendly feeling between the nations. On the other hand, if Ger- many continues to try to spread love by ostracism, these pictures will be just the right thing that is needed in the mind of the public.

In France, the Gaumont news service is already planned to be imported. It is said that the Gaumont news service as soon as peace is arranged. All of its offices will be re- established, and its staff of cameramen will be increased. Every nook and corner of both hemispheres where news is liable to break will be covered. Gaumont news pictures will be the first authentic news pictures of every important event, and it is safe to guarantee that the Gaumont news pictures will be assured of the authentic news pictures of every important event, and it is safe to guarantee that the Gaumont news pictures will be of the best quality and not at all improbable that at times extra or even daily isues.
MARY PICKFORD has joined the ranks of independent producers, who are the heads of their own producing companies, in a contract signed November 9 providing for the distribution of her future releases through First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.

Miss Pickford acted as her own agent and negotiated with the preliminary negotiations and in signing the contract. Mr. Harry Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer, and J. D. Williams, manager, respectively, of the First National, represented that organization.

The star, her mother and her attorney and the two officials of the exhibitor-distributing concern were the only per-sont present at the time the epoch-making agreement was executed.

The sum involved was not made public by Miss Pickford or First National, but it is submitted that it is the greatest amount ever paid any feminine star, either in the total for the contract, or in respect to a single production.

Miss Pickford left on Sunday for Los Angeles, where, as an independent producer, she will complete arrangements for beginning work on "Daddy Long-legs," her first release through First National exchanges.

The signing of the contract is the finale to months of varied and active speculation on the rumor.

Three Months to Each Picture.

It is explained by officials of First National that Miss Pickford's contract does not provide for any specific release date on any of her productions. She told them that an average of three months would be required for each release to allow ample time for the effort she was making into each subject to insure the high quality she is determined to attain. The terms and conditions of the contract are said to be between First National and Miss Pickford.

The contract, it is said, makes Miss Pickford personally responsible for every release she makes through First National. She is now the head of her own producing company, on exactly the same basis that Mr. Chaplin makes his comedies for the exhibitor-directed distribution concern.

"We feel exactly the same as our franchise holders do about the contract with Miss Pickford," said an official of First National, "the pre-eminent among feminine screen stars, with a popularity that is phenomenal, she has given the weight of her name, her prestige and her personality to the exhibitor-created policy on which First National is founded—quality production through specialization, personal responsibility of the star in her selection of her releases to exhibitors free from conditions or restrictions of any character. That fact, to First National members, is significant. It is the assurance that the future as is the fact that Pickford-selected Pickford-made productions will be distributed by First National exchange.

"We do not hesitate to predict that Miss Pickford's release through our exchanges will change the standards of every aspect to anything that she ever done as a salaried or percentage star. In the language of labor, she is her own boss. It is a contract between Miss Pickford as a producer and First National as a distributing company until she has completed each negative and each release of the dura-mark. She is now a specialist in production.

We retain our status as specialists in distribution.

Open Booking for Pickfords.

"Exhibitors will be able to book her new productions through First National exchanges without being obliged to contract for any of the other subjects we are marketing. Pickford pictures will be handled, so far as booking contracts are concerned, as though they were the only releases we have to offer. That fact is the biggest part of the reason for our exhibition with Miss Pickford a price that measures up to her actual worth from a box-office standpoint."

Miss Pickford's first release through First National will be a motion picture adaptation of "Daddy Longlegs." Shortly before she came to New York from Los Angeles to conclude negotiations for her new contracts, she purchased the screen rights to "Daddy Longlegs" and "Pollyanna," for a total of $80,000.

The star's mother, who remains in New York temporarily at least, declared that the contract signed on Saturday was the result of months of study and investigation by her daughter, herself and their attorney. An unusual and somewhat radical feature of the agreement was that the star acted as her own agent and representative, and was present at all of the final conferences in which the exact details of the contact were determined upon.

"Miss Pickford has in deliberation to the future method of marketing her productions," declared Mrs. Pickford. "She has studied the question of distribution in every possible way, considered every possibility and eventuality which could be conceived, considering always the present trend of affairs both in the production and the exhibition. Her purchase of the screen rights to "Daddy Longlegs" and "Pollyanna" recently was an indication of what her final conclusions might be."

Chaplin Sues to Protect His Inimitable Antics

CHARLES CHAPLIN has again invoked the aid of the courts in his personal life. He has sued for protection of his own screen image, which is his only asset.

In his present action, filed in the United States District Court, through his counsel, Nathan Burkan, the comedian asks specific relief in the motion picture industry some years ago through the presentation of a new character of his own original conception and creation which he first exhibited in "Mabel's Predicament."

This character, which was grotesque and comical, was invented by the plaintiff, was developed with eccentricities, and distinctive peculiarities (which no one will deny), calculated to provoke mirth and cause great laughter," the complaint declares. To describe the character we will let Charlie speak for himself:

"His ill-fitting, much too large and large-baggy trousers—loose and baggy shoes, his shuffling, awkward flatfooted walk; the small hat, the cane, the little mustache, together with the manner-smarks, eccentricities, gestures and facial expressions present a most unique, extraordinary and distinctive personality, quoth Charlie in his complaint.

And now some "low comedian" attempts to imitate him, Charlie complains, in a moving picture production styled "Charlie the Trencher"—loose and baggy trousers, large shoes, shuf-fling walk, mustache and all to the damage of his reputation, averts the originator of the character. Citing his income of over a million dollars from the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for producing eight pictures all one place, Charlie says has been inac culably damaged and he demands no less than $50,000, although the alleged infringing picture was only exhibited a few times.

Quinn's Regulation Plan

Indorsed by Theatre Men

Los Angeles, November 12.

A PLAN originated by J. A. Quinn, manager of the Rialto Theatre, plans the formation of a regulation of films has been indorsed by the Theatre Owners' Association of this city. The plan is to regulate production along all lines through the cooperation of producers and exhibitors, and has for its ultimate object the reduction of inflated rentals and the stabilizing of conditions of the character.

Mr. Quinn says all exhibitors will be lined up and that support is promised by some leading producers and is expected from all.

A. M. P. a. to Honor Soldier Members.

At the regular weekly meeting of the American Motion Picture Artisans, Inc., held Thursday, November 7, at Rector's, the first steps were taken toward a fitting celebration of the return of those members now in the military and naval service of the country, several of whom have been participating in the fighting on the Western Front. To that end, it was appointed by President P. A. Parsons, consisting of Paul Lazarus, Bert Adler and Julian Solomon.

The weekly addresses, which proved such an enjoyable and instructive feature of last winter's session, will shortly be resumed, and at Thursday's meeting Arthur James, Julian Solomon and Nat Rothberg were named as the Speakers' Committee for the ensuing year.

The sympathy of the association was extended by resolution to Phillip K. Mindil, whose only son has just been-reported killed in action in France. Mr. Mindil was connected with the film industry for 40 years and was a member of the association among his friends.
LEAGUE PROTESTS ON THEATRE TAXES
New York State Exhibitors' League Argues With Senate Finance Committee Against Additional Impost on 'Theatre Men,' Saving It Will Particularly Injure Humble Showmen

In a lengthy protest prepared for the Finance Committee of the United States Senate by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of New York, the organization charged that an additional impost upon the industry would be the death knell of a large number of theatres out of business and that the purpose of the new tax would, therefore, be defeated. The

The New York State League of Motion Picture Exhibitors, representing approximately fifteen hundred owners of motion picture houses, at the conclusion of our serious consideration their solemn protest against the proposed new taxes to be imposed upon the already overburdened same, financially. That this step is not taken in a spirit of shirking or shying toward our country's financial needs or what these same men have done in the past in carrying their share of the increased financial burdens of the Government and the country and soul with all their resources into the national enterprises, is evident, and with a thought of profit—and often with a direct loss to themselves.

Our arguments on these two main facts:

1. The proposed new tax is oppressive, discriminatory and confiscatory.
2. The proposed new tax will fail of its purpose to increase Government revenue.

The Taxes as Now in Force.
The new law against which we protest proposes to double and in some cases more than double the taxes now in force. These taxes are:

1. The Seating Tax.
2. The Picture Tax.
3. The Film Tax.

1. The seating tax established under the new act of 1917 against each theatre owner (from the exhibitors, owners of motion picture houses) and was intended to make up in the absence of deficiency duties and other sources owing to the Prohibition of Government, and upon the seating capacity of each house. It is false that the tax, represents the contribution on the part of these owners to the demand of the Government for increased revenue. As a matter of fact, we would not think of protesting against the doubling of this tax. To pay it we deem a privilege and a patriotic duty.

2. The admission tax of 10 per cent. under the law of 1917. This tax, which would not apply upon the theatregoing public. On the face of it, this tax is borne by the public who purchase or are paying it at the box office. But, and this is very important, indirectly it has become a burden on the exhibitor (owner of the theatre) because it is imposed on admission, and the increased admission price reduced the attendance at the smaller houses by 25 to 30 per cent. and reduced the closing of about 20 per cent. of the smaller motion picture houses.

3. The film tax, under the law of 1917 which created a tax of six cents per foot on all negative film and one half cent per foot on all positive film, levied them against the film, at a cost of $2,300,000. This tax was of course imposed upon the exhibitors. Instead of doing so it was promptly passed on to the exhibitors in an aggregated form, the exhibitors being charged $2,300 per day. It is a fact, and it has been admitted by some of the manufacturers and distributors that this charge of fifteen cents per reel was more than the price of the negative film, and that above the film tax they had to pay. (It is just to say that a few of the manufacturers have been out of consideration from following this pernicious practice.) Together with this, the film tax is an additional tax against this extortion. He had no redress in law for this action against him, and the tax is on the public, because the prices for admission to the small houses, have reached that limit beyond which they may not be raised without running the danger of playing to empty houses. The film tax in its present form, allowing the film producer to pass it on to the exhibitor, is therefore a gross miscarriage of the principle of equity in taxation.

We submit the doubling of these taxes is oppressive, particularly so to the majority of the exhibitors who are men of the small screen, and are now, still, struggling for existence, still, often struggling for mere existence. The times, when every little motion picture theatre owner in the land was wattled with gold mine are of the past. The ever-increasing cost of production and distribution of the pictures —limitless salaries and changes in the appearance of the stars, large-scale exploitation and spending, the scarcity of the idle, the capacity of the producers and manufacturers, financial jobbing by the big house-holding firms, the struggle of the producers and manufacturers in the market. All of this the exhibitors must pay for the leasing of their rooms. To add to this the increase in overhead expenses, such as wages, salaries, living, heat and advertising, and it becomes apparent to us, and it would be only fair to them, if we, the National Government, with, let us say, a seating capacity of four hundred to six hundred, is struggling along at a breaking point. Permit us to quote from the recent report of the Joint Senate committee to investigate the motion picture industry, transmitted to the Senate of the State of New York on March 15, 1917. On page nine, center of second paragraph, we find:

"The committee is satisfied from its investigation that it is a rule the proprietor or owner of the small motion picture theatre, which this is an exceedingly small profit from his business, and in many cases none whatever, and that the present taxation is at an attempt to impose any substantial additional tax on the operators of motion pictures in the last two or three years have brought about a sort of special feature pictures, has increased enormously the production and exhibition of the so-called "star" actors and actresses who are engaged in the production of these pictures; to the exceedingly large salaries of the directors of productions of such pictures; of the officers of the various producing corporations, and the expense, naturally, in the way of royalties to the writers of the plays."

Present Taxes are Discriminatory.

We further submit that the taxes as they now stand are discriminatory, and that instead of increasing these measures should be taken for their distribution on the basis of the volume of business and the tax film fall exclusively and directly on the motion picture industry coming at the industry the shoulders by lowering its income. When looking around for new sources of revenue it was but natural that the Government should be obtained from the motion picture industry with its stagnation resulting from the war.

At first glance it looks as if the legislative forces in creating the new existing taxes and imposing them upon the motion picture exhibitor and the public. As a matter of fact, developments have shown imperceptibly with us, to the establishment of the tax for the theatre houses out the cost of the film, etc., have been admitted, the made for the greater part of the tax revenue.

We further submit that if the taxes are not abated they will become exorbitant as far as the small exhibitor is concerned.

To pay double the amount of a seating tax, to pay a flat 16 per cent. on rentals which would approximately treble the present tax of 8.5 per cent., to levy $2,300,000 against this impost, owing to the doubling of the admission tax, the result would be the doubling of the tax on the public, which is financially in a position to pay higher prices for their amusement. But the small house depending for its patronage on its immediate neighborhood and catering to the families of the neighborhood, has no way of passing some of the increased burden on to their public, which is financially in a position to pay higher prices for their amusement.

The burden of these taxes will be passed on to their public, which is financially in a position to pay higher prices for their amusement.

Function of Tax as a Revenue Maker.
The proposed new tax carries within itself the form of defeating its own ends. It is a tax on the public, which is the Government's revenue, because while raising a revenue of some $80,000,000 per annum, it is not to be levied upon the public, which is financially in a position to pay higher prices for their amusement. But the small house depending for its patronage on its immediate neighborhood, has no way of passing some of the increased burden on to their public, which is financially in a position to pay higher prices for their amusement.

The burden of these taxes will be passed on to their public, which is financially in a position to pay higher prices for their amusement.

Conclusion.

Drawing our conclusions from the foregoing statements and taking a survey of the entire question of taxes the motion picture industry, we find ourselves confronted with what we would like to call a serious misconception as to the component parts of the motion picture industry, particularly the small theatre houses, and as to their taxability in particular.

Being the latest comer among the new industries, and having had a more rapid development than the many of the old industries, it is perhaps natural that there should be a feeling among many of the different parts of the industry have as yet not been fully recognized and not correctly appreciated in their true proportions. The investment of fabulous sums of capital is characteristic of the film industry. The ending or the motion picture industry has come to the stage of a perfect glitz and glamor, to the point where the small theatre, or rather that part of the industry as the substantial and important, are lost in the eye of the general public a preponderance and standing which is out of all proportion, and not wholly unwarranted.
TURNER OF SAN FRANCISCO IS DEAD
Prominent Theatre Man and Associate of First National Exhibitors Succumbs to Pneumonia

A TELEGRAM received in New York on Monday told of the death at his home on Frederick street, San Francisco, of J. T. Turner, one of the largest and strongest of the Western film enterprises owning and operating theatre circuits and exchanges and owners of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for Northern California.

Mr. Turner is survived by his widow and six children, the youngest a son five years old.

In the death of Mr. Turner First National Exhibitors' Circuit suffers the first loss among its original organizers and franchise holders. The news of the passing of this splendid representative of the motion picture business will be read with deep regret by a host of friends all over the country.

LIEUT. GUY BRANDT IS DEAD IN WASHINGTON

ONE of the sad happenings of the week in Washington was the death of Lieut. Guy Brandt, who followed on the day of his burial by the death of his mother. The young man was one of the most popular of the members of the film industry, as a manager he had been employed for twelve years or more. He started in the business in Baltimore and was with the employ of Pearce & Scheck. When General Ismay opened his office in the capital city he was its first booker and remained with the company until 1913, when he went with Abe Bresner as assistant manager of the Pittsburgh office of Warner's Features.

After a year in the Smoky City Mr. Brandt returned to Washington, rejoining General Eddy. Eddy & C-E exchange was established he became assistant to Manager Berger, remaining with that concern until he was drafted into the United States National Army. It is greatly to his credit when his whole career is reviewed that he started in at the very foot of the military ladder and worked his way up. He became a corporal, then a sergeant and back again to buck private because of some trivial infraction of the rules. Then he started up again again and wound up a lieut.

Just before registration day on June 4, 1917, he was married. When he received his commission he was sent to the coast which was at that time his home. He became a captain of the United States naval reserve and went to the yards for duty with the military police.

Lieutenant Brandt was buried with full military honors in Arlington Cemetery. The funeral was attended by a number of his friends of the film days, sorry to part with so good a pal. He was twenty-seven years old.

FAIRBANKS MAY FLY AGAIN

There is a possibility Douglas Fairbanks will duplicate his flying stunt from New York to Canada to assist in the Dominion's Fifth Victory Loan campaign, which has just opened. This will be done provided an airplane and competent pilot can be obtained.

At the request of J. J. and Jules Allen, members of the executive committee of the Fifth Victory Loan, Fairbanks will sign an agreement for every subscriber who takes a bond in any one of the ten biggest theatres in Canada. The Artcraft star also made a request for the establishment of a new commitee, entitled "The Maple Leaf Forcder," which will be shown in all the Canadian film houses to help the loan over the top.
News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By A. H. GIEBLER

Los Angeles Landlords Rebate Rent.

The city authorities of Los Angeles have waived license fees, and about 95 per cent. of the owners of theatre property have agreed to allow lessees a rebate on rents for the period of the close down occasioned by the influenza epidemic, and the other five per cent. are expected to follow suit at an early date.

At a meeting of the Theatre Owners' Association, held in the offices of W. H. Clune on November 1, a resolution was passed that the rebate amount be paid by lessees to landlords who, in keeping with the spirit of patriotism and public service, have voluntarily agreed to rebate the amount due on leases, and receiving those who have not done so to align themselves on the side of generous landlords; and at the same time warning them that unless such action is taken by the Theatre Owners' Association will at its own expense protect the lessees of any such landlords by submitting the question as to liability under the law to the proper courts.

"Ray's Garden Theatre."

The Miller Theatre at the junction of Main, Spring and Ninth streets will be known in the future—as the "flu" ban is lifted—as "Ray's Garden Theatre," which name has been given the house by the manager, Carl Ray. His decision to rename the house was arrived at after Ray had had the place thoroughly removed and furnished, and he observed that the new name would look well in new signs and electrical display.

Work Rushed on California Theatre.

The decorators now at work on the California Theatre are finishing up the lobby and foyer of the mezzanine floor, and the art tile workers are laying the tile, into which a magnificent Oriental rug is to be inlaid. Every part of the house is being completed on schedule time, and the management confidently expects to open the new theatre to the public about Thanksgiving Day.

Film Row Hikes.

Exchange managers of Los Angeles and their assistants deserted Film Row during the last week in October to take a five days' hike to the near-by mountains. These film men made their headquarters at a cabin six miles up the Hogee trail, and for the time being forgot both "flu" and films. Some of the party were Dave Bershon and L. S. Thuer- koff, of Universal; Tom Hancock and Tom Merritt, from World Film Exchange; T. H. Harvey, of Goldwyn; Guy Gunderson, from the Kleine; Sam Loper, of Select; B. C. Steele, of the Symphony Theatre; Howard McBride, and a cameraman from Universal City. Moving pictures of the principal events that took place during the hike, and they will be shown at the projection rooms of the exchanges.

House Cleaning at Alhambra.

The Alhambra Theatre, one of the downtown houses that specializes in United States and Allied War films for its programs, is being thoroughly cleaned and overhauled against the re-opening of the amusement houses when the Health Department removes the ban. Besides the painting and decorating that has been done, a new system of lighting has been installed, and Manager Bosley, instead of being on the job all the time to see that the work was progressing as per specifications.

Emil Kehrlein, Jr., of the Kinema Theatre, is seeing the sights of Southern California in his car during his enforced vacation from movie exhibiting.

Suit for Breach of Contract.

Clara Horton has brought suit against the Triangle Film Corporation for breach of contract as a result of having been discharged on the 12th of October along with a number of other players on account of the influenza closing ban imposed by the Los Angeles Health Department.

Miss Horton claims that her contract still had a year to run. Local lawyers state that there is no precedent for a case of this kind, and the suit is regarded as of importance in the film industry, as there are many similar cases which hang on the same point of law.

Directors' Ball Postponed.

The ball that had been planned for Thanksgiving by the Motion Picture Directors' Association, has been postponed until the Christmas holidays. The influenza epidemic and the cessation of production at nearly all the West Coast studios caused the association to postpone the event. The change of date will allow more time for preparations to make the ball the most gorgeous entertainment ever given by any branch of the film industry in Southern California.

Club Honors Member.

The Cinema Cameramen's Club, of California, meeting November 1 to adopt resolutions on the death of B. C. Hayward, one of the oldest members of the club, who died of influenza on October 30.

Resumes Interrupted Business.

Mrs. Charlotte Pickford left for New York on October 30 to take up the interrupted business of her daughter Mary's new film contract. Lottie Pick- ford, whose recent illness necessitated sending for her mother and sister from the East, is well on the way to recovery, and Mrs. Pickford hopes to have little Mary's new film affiliations settled before she returns to Los Angeles.

Grauman's New Organ.

The big Hope-Jones organ that will be a part of the Grauman equipment for future picture attractions has arrived in Los Angeles, and is being installed in the Grauman Theatre. The huge organ was purchased at a cost of $50,000, and is about ten times the size of the organ that has been in use until now. Mack Well, formerly of Indianapolis, has been engaged by Sid Grauman to conduct the augmented orchestra of the Grauman when the house reopens, which will be as soon as the "flu" ban is lifted.

Leaves for Training Camp.

Bert Lytell, one of the Metro stars on the West Coast, has received an appointment to join a class of officers in training at Camp McArthur, near Waco, Texas. Mert will leave Los Angeles about the latter part of November. Mrs. Lytell, who was known as Evelyn Vaughan on the stage, will remain on the Lytell ranch at Napa, and will carry on the work of the farm while her husband is away.

May Produce Independently.

Fannie Ward, whose contract with Pathé expires within a couple of weeks, will go to New York, when her final picture under the present management is completed, to make new arrangements for her film productions. Miss Ward has not announced whether she will affiliate herself with any organization, either the one she produces independently, but it is said that she rather favors the latter method of working.

Directed by Vibration.

George Foster Platt, Helen Keller's director, has devised a method of tapping with his foot in directing the deaf and blind star in her film production. The director taps once for a certain movement, twice for another; and his star knows just what each tap means in carrying out her action before the camera. Miss Keller's sense of vibration is so acute that she can immediately recognize her director's footsteps in all of the noise and bustle of the studio. Rehearsals are conducted with the aid of Miss Keller's companions, Annie Sullivan, Macy and Polly Thompson, by means of the language of the finger tips, but usually one rehearsal of a scene is sufficient for the star, and when the camera is grinding the directions are given by means of the taps of the di- rector's foot.

Studio Shorts

IRVIN WILLET, a director at the Ince plant, has been summoned to appear at Camp Kearney for army training. Edward Sloman, director at the American studios, in Santa Barbara, spent his vacation during the flu-shut down in visiting a familiar region in a new limousine, Mrs. Sioman and the baby accompanied him.

A new film has arrived to direct Jane and Katherine Lee in their first picture to be made in the West.

Myrtie's* death of heart trouble recently, left an estate of $3,750, consisting of a house and lot, an automobile, and $100 in jewelry. As the accretion left no will her husband, Allen Watt, has filed a petition as administrator. Watt and his wife were married, James Jones, are the only heirs.

Mae Marsh has secured a house in the famous Wilshire district of Los Angeles. Mabel Condon, film booking agent, has deserted Laurel Canyon and is again living near the center of movie activities, in Hollywood.

Willis Roberts, one of the pioneer picture directors, and at one time Universal City, has come back to the Los Angeles film colony after an extended absence.

Elizedor Fried, of the New York offices of Universal, is now at U City collaborating with Frank Lawrence, film editor, and cutting and editing of Universal and Bluebird productions.

Helen Eddy, who was for three months a "starting player" with Raymond Wells' stock company at Camp Kearney, is playing the heroine of King Vidor's story, "The Road," for the Brentwood Film Corporation.

Glady's Brockwell amused herself by cleaning her home in the garage garret to cellar during her flu vacation.

Elizabeth McGaffey, of the Lasky Research Department, has made application to go to Siberia in the interests of the United States Government.

George Condon accompanied William S. Hart on his Liberty Loan tour in the east, has returned to Los Angeles. Mr. Hart and his manager, E. H. Allen, are expected within a week.

Cecil B. de Mille has been confined to his home with just a cold—positively not the flu.

Clarence Badger, Madge Kennedy's director, has arrived and is looking around for a house in Hollywood, in which he hopes to be settled before his star arrives, so that production may begin at once on the new Goldwyn project at Culver City.

The first gold star has been placed in the Universal service flag in memory of Liberty People, who have been killed in action in France. Peyton enlisted shortly after the United States entered the war and has been promoted to the rank of sergeant before he died.

Hoot Gibson, film cowboy, visited his home folks in Los Angeles during a recent furlough granted him from the training camp at Gettysburg, Pa.

Jiunita Hansen, Douglas Gerard, Wm. Westover, Adda Gleason and the mother of Virginia Lee Corbin have all had light attacks of the flu.

Lottie Pickford, who is rapidly recovering from her recent illness, left the Sisters' Hospital on Tuesday, for the Pickford family home on Fremont place.

William Lord Wright, former publicity manager for Selig, and now business manager within the United States of the United Picture Theatres of America, is making his headquarters at the Brunton studios, looking after the interests of Durr-Farnum and Kitty Gordon, two United Picture stars.

Edwin Carewe, director for the late Harold Lockwood, has returned to Metro's West Coast studios.

Mr. Pickford, who usually speaks French before the camera because that is her native tongue, is fast learning American accent. The actress knows what is meant by her "lamps photographing well" and that all action is not "stunts" in a motion picture.

Bethwell Browne, female impersonator of the Mack Sennett studios, was one of the movie entertainers of Prince Axel of Denmark during his recent visit to Los Angeles.

We thought this was coming—Priscilla Dean declares she is not engaged to Eddie Hickenlooper, the high flyer in France who recently brought down his twenty-third enemy plane.

Charlie Ray has invested in a small farm near Los Angeles, where he will spend the time between pictures and really do the things he has pretended to do in his numerous farmer boy roles.

Jane Lee has had her first California spanking. She pushed Katherine into the studio fountain at the Fox plant and then got all wet herself, and—well, the spanking followed.

Schools to Get Official War Review.

Arrangements have been made by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information whereby schools, colleges and other educational institutions throughout the United States may secure the Official War Review at a minimum charge from any Pathé exchange. The arrangement is in response to a large number of letters from educators and superintendents of schools, calling attention to the need of stimulating patriotism and a comprehension of the real meaning of the world war among their pupils, especially those of foreign birth. The Official War Review is considered an excellent medium for the purpose.

To Issue Million Copies of Poster.

One million of the new and inspiring one sheets of the Official War Review, distributed by Pathé, will be given the most thorough posting of any announcement in the history of the country. It will carry its message to the remotest hamlet, and it will be a familiar symbol in the great, crowded haunts of the civilized world. It will be displayed in the 40,000 post offices of the United States and its possessions, in every public building, city, state and federal, and in railroad stations.

It is planned that every American in touch with civilized communities shall see it and heed its invitation to behold how the great war is being fought by the United States and the Allies. The spirit and design of the poster has evoked praise from every authority, and is a distinct contribution to the art side of the great struggle.

Along the Trail.

A. C. Wykoff, formerly auditor of the Vitagraph exchanges, is now controller of the William Fox enterprises.

Agnes Johnson, the scenario writer, has returned from Cambridge, Mass., where she has been attending a special course in playwriting at Harvard.

James R. Stiles, Boston representative of the Pathé Exchange, is now in New York negotiating for an affiliation with another concern.

William Fait, Jr., of Utica, N. Y., who gave up his theatrical connections in that city to take charge of the Liberty Theatre at Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio, has resigned from the Government service, and again will interest himself in the film industry.

Third Official Picture to Show in Seven Cities

OFFICIAL showings of "Under Four Flags," the new Official War Picture, issued by the Division of Films Committee on Public Information, are announced for seven cities outside of New York, where the latest Government war film will be made known at the Rialto and Rivoli during the week opening November 17. All the official bookings are for November.

In Washington "Under Four Flags" will be the initial attraction at Harry M. Crandall's new Metropolitan Theatre, which opens its doors Saturday evening, November 23. The Metropolitan will be one of the handsomest cinema houses in the United States. Indianapolis will see the new picture at the Circle Theatre during the week beginning November 24. The Walnut Theatre, Cincinnati, will have the official showing on November 25. It will be displayed in the Liberty Theatre, a new house, in Dayton it will be seen at the Strand Theatre, and in St. Louis at the Odeon. The latter is not a motion picture house, but the "vehicle of America's Crusaders" and "America's Answer" at this popular hall, as well as its great seating capacity, has made its use desirable. St. Louis exhibitors also favors the Odeon an account of the exploitation the picture will receive before being released for the regular picture houses, and are co-operating to make the engagement a success.

The official showing in Philadelphia will be at the Stanley, which has booked the picture for the week of December 16.

Duncan Back in Hollywood.

William Duncan, director and star of Vitagraph serials, is back at the Hollywood Studio, after a short trip to New York, where he visited relatives and met the officials of the Vitagraph Company.

The day following Mr. Duncan's arrival he went to the studio to resume the work of directing and starring in "The Man of Might," his next serial.
THE epidemic situation has not improved much. Many of us who have suspected all along that Spanish influenza was more serious than our ancient enemy, La Grippe, sailing under a new name, are now convinced that such is the case. But unmasking the "Flu" has not allowed those of us who have been wearing masks to unmask ourselves.

We are still watching and spraying. Amly Septics are everywhere. It is impossible to get into any studio in the film colony without first checking your germs at the gate.

In addition to the general disinfecting that goes on at every studio, many of the players carry their own private germ exterminators. Get in nasal distance of almost any bunch of actors and you'll think you are approaching a delegation from a retail drug clerks' convention.

Wednesday, I went out to the Brunton plant. After explaining to the Red Cross nurse with the atomizer and the firm manner that, since I had already been sprinkled and sprayed with Chloroform and a mixture of Alkaloids, Antiseptic Solution to such an extent that no germ of the coccus family could find a boarding place anywhere inside or outside of my physical premises, I have no use in using her anti-flu dope, I submitted to the spray and went in.

After a brief pause in the office of J. B. Brunton, who, with the exception of Bert Lennon, is the tallest press agent on the Coast, I bent my steps in search of William Lord Wright, who has just come out to look after the activities of Dyvin Farnum and Kitty Gordon.

How Giebler Shuts Out the "Flu."

Passing down a hallway I heard a loud and resonant sneeze! I paused a moment to cross my fingers and murmur:

The rose is red,
The violet's the blue,
If you don't wear a mask an incantation I have found to be very efficacious as a comforter to the nerves. After this I changed my buckeye from the right-hand pocket to the left-hand pocket and, seeking for a convenient place to complete the rite by knocking on wood, I used a door on my right, and heard a slivery voice exclaim, "Come right in!"

I did so, and found myself in the presence of he whom I sought.

"You'd better do something for that sneeze," I said. "How long have you been sneezing?" He long are you going to stay? Have the real estate people found you yet? Have you been to the beach? How do you like California?"

Mr. Wright emerged from the interior of his desk with a pale blue bottle of anti-flu, took a sniff and said: Two weeks—all winter—not yet—don't care much for beans—bolly!"

And that was just my regular morning sneeze.

How Not to Spoil a Pleasant Dream.

After this we had a little conversation, and Mr. Wright was so enthusiastic about our climate, so full of praise for the friendliness of the people and everything, that I allowed him to recite his panegyric left without warning him of the rainy season, fogs, the difference between yard eggs, ranch eggs and just eggs, real estate agents, quotas, summer squash and half-ripe olives.

Brunton's is getting to be a whale of a place, and a regular movie bee-hive. Madame Yorksa was putting the finishing touches to her film, "The Infernal Net." Bessie Barriscale and Lewis Cody were making scenes on a big outdoor stage. Wallace Worsley was getting ready to use four hundred extras for Kitty Gordon's new play, "The Nurse's Story," and about three hundred and ninety-nine were already on the lot. The Helen Keller company were all set and waiting for Miss Keller to arrive.

Howard Hickman was running around the lot bareheaded, with the wind whirling his hair. Sherwood McDonald was superintending the erection of a big set for a Gloria Joy play. Director Worthington and Sessue Hayakawa were dopin' out situations for their latest drama.

Dustin Farnum, who had just finished a twenty-four hour stretch of work the evening before, was getting ready to go to Big Bear Lake for mountain and rough outdoor stuff, instead of still being in the hay, where he should have been after that long absence from the tents of Montana.

Robert Brunton, the king bee of the big hive, was making his morning inspection trip around the studio, and he told the gang that what will be coming to Brunton very shortly, not counting the C. R. Macaulay people, who are almost ready to begin on their twelve-reel production.

Putting the "Flue" in Influenza.

I found them still wearing masks at the insect plant. Ince is the only completely masked studio in the colony so far, but since Dr. Woods Hutchinson has arrived in our fair but "Flu"-ridden city, and told us that masks are the only sure-fire method of putting the "Flue" in influenza, it may turn out that they were only just a little ahead of the general adoption of the gauze protectors at Ince.

Enid Bennett was making an Arizona atmosphere picture with Fred Niblo directing, B. P. Fong as leading man, John P. Lockney in a fine Desert Rat characterization, and Robert McKim doing the heavy.

Jerome Storm, who was working Charlie Chaplin and Wanda Hawley in "Greased Lightning," had just left with the company for location.

Victor Schertzinger, who has written another song, was doing up a rich man's home and the doings of his extravagant society, featuring Dorothy Dalton. Charles Clary, Philo McCullough, Donald McDonald and J. Barney Sherry, who came over to Ince when Triangle shut down, were in the cast.

After Ince I meandered over to the Sunset works, and had a most pleasant surprise by finding Allan Dwan at work again.

Allan has been taking a four weeks' lay off since his contract expired at Fairbanks', which he spent on the flat of his back with a doctor's attendance and a trained nurse in the offfice to see that he took what the Doc ordered.

No, Allan did not have the "Flu"; just a trifling indisposition superinduced by nine years of steady work and no play—sort of a nervous breakdown.

Dwan Making "Cheating Cheaters."

Dwan was looking "kinda peak-ed," as we say back in Missouri, but he was glad to be at work, and was chortling as he made up situations for the screen adaptation of "Cheating Cheaters," which he was getting ready to film.

"Listen to this list," he said. And I said yes, since while he was reciting the names of Clara Kimball Young, Jack Holt and Frank Campeau; cocked my ear in admiration over the syllables that made up Muriel Streeter, Arnold Singleton and Mayme Kelso; gasped with wonder at the sound of Frederick Burton, Nicholas Dunaw and Elmar Hanson, was filled with pleased surprise as the cognomens W. A. Carroll, Tully Marshall and Anna Q. Nilsson fell from his lips.

"Where?" I asked, "and how did you get them all?"

"Flue," said Dwan. "Many of the studios are closed, and as all of the players would rather work than not, I had the pick of 'em.

Verily, it is an ill wind that blows nobody good, but just the same, I'd hate to foot the pay roll of "Cheating Cheaters." Who picked would rather work than not, but none of them will work for small salaries—decidedly not—"Flue" or no "Flue."

Leaving Dwan, I met one H. A. Litchig, casting director for the Harry Langston enterprises, and he took me back on the stages to see Marshall Neilan direct Blanche Sweet, Matt Moore and Wallace Beery in a version of "The Unpardonable Sin," which is nearing its finish.

Richelave Strong on Technique.

Lichtig then introduced me to an interesting chap named George Richelave, who was brought all the way from New York to take care of the technical points of the above-mentioned drama.

George is strong on technique, and he showed me two German railroad cars he had just made—the kind the Huns use to transport prisoners in—and they were marvellous. They were more like real Liberty I ever saw, complete down to the Hun hieroglyphics chalked on the sides of them. No movie fan who works in the railroad yards in Rock Island,
THE National Film Corporation of America has signed a contract with Henry B. Walthall for the exclusive services of the famous star for an extended period. The definite signing of Mr. Walthall follows close upon the deal by which the Robertson-Cole Company takes over the National Film Corporation interests, handling for the entire world the eight Billie Rhodes pictures, as well as the forthcoming series of Walthall dramas.

According to present plans Mr. Walthall will make eight big dramatic pictures during the next twelve months. William Parsons, general manager and treasurer of the National Film Corporation, announces that Mr. Walthall will receive the highest salary of any individual male star in the motion picture world. Several stars may receive greater remuneration through the fact that they own their own producing organizations, but Mr. Walthall will take first place among salaried stars, declares Mr. Parsons.

Mr. Walthall has just scored a personal hit in the spoken drama, "The Awakening," at the Criterion Theatre in New York. Mr. Walthall will return immediately to the National Coast studios to begin work on his first feature of the series.

Probably no star in the screen world is better known or has a greater following than Henry B. Walthall. He scored to the front in the famous old Biograph days when David Griffith was laying the foundations of the modern photoplay. He scored one of his first big hits in "Judith of Bethulia," and he followed it with his famous depiction of the little colonel in "The Birth of a Nation."

No portrayal before or since has so endeared a player to the American public. Walthall's Colonel Cameron still stands as one of the best loved characterizations in the realm of the silent drama. After leaving Griffith, Walthall joined the Essanay forces, and later starred with Paralla. Only recently he returned temporarily to the Griffith fold, appearing in "The Great Love." Then he came East to rejoin his first love, the spoken drama.

The Robertson-Cole Company, which will handle the Walthall series, already has a Walthall drama ready for release. This feature, "And a Still Small Voice," was produced independently before the star came East to appear behind the footlights.

BROADWAY RUN PLANNED FOR "THE UNPARDONABLE SIN"

A LONG Broadway run is planned for Harry Garson and Marshall Neilan's production of "The Unpardonable Sin," starring Blanche Sweet. Word has just arrived from the West Coast that the trio will leave Los Angeles immediately, and that the production is completed. According to announced schedule, it is planned to give a special performance of the production before Government officials at Washington.

After the Washington showing it is believed a private showing will be promoted in New York City, where the newspaper men and other critics will be invited. From the enthusiasm already recorded in displayed by Messrs. Garson and Neilan, nothing will be overlooked to give this production the promoting and exploitation which they believe it deserves.

It is declared that several of the finest New York theatres have already been offered for first run, and the sponsors expect the first run to be a long and a successful one.

Distributing arrangements are not announced as yet, but upon the arrival of the trio from the West Coast it is expected something definite will be made known as regards the distributing arrangements of "The Unpardonable Sin."

SHELDON ANNOUNCES CHANGES IN MUTUAL EXCHANGE FORCES

W. A. V. MACK, manager of the Buffalo branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has been appointed manager of the New York Exchange of Mutual by President James McM. Robertson, succeeding Fred. G. Sliter, who has accepted the appointment of the office November I. Edward J. McShane, now Mutual's manager of the Buffalo Exchange of Mutual.

The new Mutual manager for New York has had an interesting business career. He came into the film industry through newspaper and later into the Buffalo, New York, as manager of the Crescent Theatre, Syracuse, and was president of the Peerless Feature Film Company and Syracuse. He made manager of the Syracuse office of the Picture Playhouse Mutual Company and later succeeded D. J. Savage as manager of General Film Company, Buffalo, from which he came to Mutual as manager of the Buffalo Exchange, succeeding G. H. Christoffer.

The promotion of Mr. Mack was merited by his successful career with Mutual, and his appointment is in accord with President Sheldon's policy of selecting men within the organization for higher places.

Mr. Hayes has been connected with the General Film Company, Buffalo, as branch manager, and has also had charge of several big theatres, among them the Colonial of Elmira, N. Y., and the International Theatre of Niagara Falls. He has been a branch manager for the Metro Pictures Corporation, where he made a splendid record. His record as both sales and management are well known in the business. These traits and the needs of the exhibitor should carry him far in the ranks of Mutual.

President Sheldon also announces the appointment of Edward L. McShane as manager of Mutual's Washington (D. C.) branch, succeeding H. R. Mason, who resigned on account of ill health.

Mr. McShane comes to Mutual from the sales forces of Select, for whom he traveled out of Washington. Prior to his connection with Select he was under subject manager for Paramount's Washington office.

Mr. McShane is known to every exhibitor in the Washington territory, to whom he is known as a man of energy and initiative.
Greiver Distributing Corporation.

The Greiver Distributing Corporation has opened executive offices in suite 509, Mallers Bldg., Chicago. This organization is distributing the Ford Educational Weekly nationally, through its twenty-two agencies. All recommendations from exhibitors should be mailed to the office, as they will receive prompt attention. Various letters received, which comment on the contents of this Weekly, have been very gratifying to the company. Among these is a communication from the Rialto Theatre, New York. The Ford Weekly is received every week to all exhibitors gratis. The only expense incurred is the payment of express charges.

Lubliner & Trinz Opened Tenth House.

Wednesday evening, November 6, Lubliner & Trinz opened the tenth house on their Chicago circuit of picture theatres. This theatre bears the name of the commander-in-chief of the American armies in France, the Pershing, and it is located at Lincoln and Wilson avenues, in the midst of a prosperous community.

The opening success of the Pantheon, which took place several weeks ago, was repeated at the Pershing, and the house was filled to capacity at the two shows given. A large audience, enthusiastic, made a trip to "Pershing City," a Select feature, in which Norma Talmadge is the star, was the chief attraction of the program, which was supplemented by the comedy, "Gaelic.

The music was played by a well selected orchestra of twelve pieces, under the capable direction of Charles Schoening. The Pantheon is under the supervision of Architect Walter A. Ahschlaeger, who also designed the plans of the more showy Pantheon, on Sheridan Road, near Wilson avenue. Dan Lubliner is manager.

Within a few weeks Messrs. Lubliner & Trinz will open two more new picture houses—the Wilson, at Madison street and Western avenue, and the Devon, at Clark street and Devon avenue. This will round out a circuit of an even dozen in Chicago, all of large capacity and modern construction.

Enrico Caruso in "My Cousin."

Kitty Kelly, in the Herald-Examiner, bears this testimony to Caruso, the great tenor, in Artcraft's "My Cousin."

"Mr. Caruso—it's so Americanish to call the singer 'mister'—is an actor of parts as well as a tenor of tones, and he performs ever so much more entertainingly for the silent drama.

"He is not a collar advertisement model, a dude, or a hero, but you quite forget that he isn't, as you observe, his skillful, colorful playing of himself as the humble artist, and his successful performance of himself as the great tenor as well.

"For, of course, Mr. Caruso has the two roles to perform, the story being all about how he found his cousin, in face of James' obstacles, with an Italianized New York setting carried out with convincingness.

"Nor is Caruso alone in accomplishing. Carolina White, who makes her film debut, is a beautiful and expressive subject for the celluloid."

"Lafayette, We Come" Wins Mid-West.

The special screening of "Lafayette, We Come" in Chicago, which was originally announced to be given Tuesday, November 5, at the Morrison Hotel, took place Wednesday, November 6, in the Louis XVI Room, Hotel Sherman, after an informal and complimentary luncheon given by the exhibitor, (American) Corporation, of the central western States. Seventy-five covers were laid and every seat was occupied. Louis B. Stephenson, of St. Louis, a national director of the organization, was present, also H. A. Brink, of Grand Rapids, president of the American Distributing Corporation. Another showing of the feature was given Wednesday morning in the private projecting room of Universal. Everyone present at both showings was enthusiastic over the performance of the picture. Orchestral accompaniments were furnished at each presentation.

"The Yellow Dog" at Ziegfeld.

"The Yellow Dog" (Jewel) showed at the Ziegfeld all last week to good business. The feature deals with an organization known as The Boy Detectives of America, and its members raise many laughs among the spectators by their humorous and surprising antics. This Jewel feature holds the spectator intensely interested throughout, and it raises many laughs by its frequent comedy appeals.

"America's Answer" Repeats Successes.

"America's Answer," the second official war picture, was shown at the Orpheum Theatre for three days last week, or five days at Mckivens and the Rialto. All these houses are owned by Jones, Linick & Schaefner. The attendance was unusually large during the respective runs, notwithstanding the advertised and successful showing of this picture at Orchestra Hall several weeks ago.

Embryo Scenarists See Films at Broadway House.

Forty-Five Scenarist writers possessing knowledge gained from books and from the collective experience of ten thousand forerunners in their craft, attended the showing last Friday at the Broadway Theatre in New York City, of "The Ordeal," that will inaugurate a series of such excursions, the object of which will be the uplift of the screen art.

G. K.氛, manager of the theatre, originated the idea and obtained the cooperation of J. C. Brownell, scenario editor of the Universal. His purpose was to have skilled screen writers play up criticism upon the films of all companies that are shown at the theatre, and if possible devise suggestions for the betterment of films in the future.

These scenarist writers invited were members of the class in Scenario Composition, of Columbia University, and of the Cinema Composers' Club, who have graduated from the class. Mrs. Frances Taylor Patterson, instructor of the class, was in charge of the party.

Others in the group were Miss R. C. Sminck, who wrote many stories for Clara Kimball Young, and Dr. Ralston Reed, author of many well known films.

The labeling and sale of old pictures featuring well known stars in such a way as to mislead exhibitors and the general public in the belief that they are new features, is the subject of a formal complaint just issued by the Federal Trade Commission against certain motion picture concerns. The commission states that it has reason to believe the Royal Cinema Corporation, The Mothers of Liberty Pictures Company, the Monogram Pictures Company, and W. H. Productions Company, all of New York City, are engaged in unfair and misleading practices in the motion picture field, detrimental to the best interests of the industry and the public, and has accordingly issued formal complaints against each of the companies named.

The complaint against the W. H. Productions Company alleges misrepresentations in the labeling and sale of old pictures featuring S. Hart, produced and shown prior to July, 1917, and charges they are made with the intent and purpose of leading exhibitors and the public into believing they are new pictures made since that date by the William S. Hart Productions, Inc., which are sold under the trade name of Artcraft Pictures.

Use of the name "W. H. Productions Company" and of the term "The Artcraft Star" in connection with these previously shown pictures are declared by the commission to deceive and defraud exhibitors and the public.

The concern also is charged with selling old pictures featuring S. Hart and Charlie Chaplin under new title, "without notifying or apprising exhibitors and the general public that they were such."

The complaint against the three other companies alleges plagiarism of material in copyrighted pictures known as "The Ordeal," produced in 1914 and widely exhibited throughout the country. The Commission alleges the motion picture which was produced and sold by the three concerns, was made up "almost entirely" of "The Ordeal."

The three concerns also were charged with making false and defamatory acors refusing to exhibit "Mothers of Liberty," charging them with being German propagandists and disloyal to the United States.

The W. H. Productions was cited to appear before the Commission in Washington on November 20 and the other three concerns December 20.

Many Are Chosen; Few Are Chosen

THE volume of stories that are being written by ambitious authors who have designs on screen success past and present was rather low last year. Some years ago when the legitimate stage was experiencing the top wave of popularity that some five thousand plays were turned out by every year, one in ten of this enormous number less than five per cent, were produced. A conservative estimate of the number of photoplay submitted to the producing companies in the United States is in excess of five thousand a month. Eighty per cent. of picture plays produced from original screen scripts written by authors who have had training and experience in this line of work.

World Pictures is put to an expense running into thousands of dollars haring ing scripts from budding authors residing in all quarters of the world. Stories come in from bankers, clergymen, lawyers, doctors, and, in fact, every profession in which there is a significant organization, and still a good many authors have no idea what to expect in this avalanche of what is hoped to be material for the camera. Each one of these stories must be read, as one can not be sure that the new idea can be found, and it is the hope of discovering some new treatment of picture material that prompts and warrants the trou- blesomeness of going through this mass of manuscripts. It was thus that World Pictures found "The Latch String," which Tefft Johnson directed for M. G. M., and which is expected to be a big success, not alone for the producer and the star, but also for the exhibitor.

School of Pantomime for Screen Aspirants Planned

A TRAINING college for the development of motion picture actors and non-diegetic material is planned by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph, to be opened after the first of the year. One condition of matriculation will be that the candidate has never appeared on the speaking stage, as Mr. Smith considers the dependency on the voice for dramatic effect a distinct handicap for the moving picture actor. There will be no charge for tuition, and practical experience will be afforded the students as "extras" in Vitagraph features.

The idea developed with Mr. Smith from the consideration of the history of numerous present day stars who began their career under his direction at the Vitagraph studios. He has turned out so many stars "from the rough," as the trade puts it, that Mr. Smith has gained a perfect knowledge of the personality and personal qualities which will lend themselves to the super-pantomimic art of the cinema.

Among the best known graduates of the Vitagraph school are: Art Johnson, Edith Storey, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Lilian Walker, Jean Page and Walter McGrain. These prominent stars all began as "extras" with Mr. Smith's company.

The pantomimic art of the cinema is higher than that of the dramatic speaking stage, and Mr. Smith yesterday, "and justifies the establishment of a thorough educational institution for its development. The film-story without a dramatic or narrative capacity and slide, is the perfect cinemato graph development. The principal element in obtaining this is the fixation of the pantomimic act- ing. That should tell the story alone. Explanations on slides are weaknesses and break the interest."

Pile Up Big Loan Totals

A TOTAL of $4,860,450 was subscribed to the Fourth Liberty Loan through the efforts of the people of the Big City of Los An- geles. A considerable amount of this sum was paid in by the heads, players and employees of the various studios, but large sales were made to outsiders by means of an intensive campaign conducted with the three tanks, Victory, Liberty and Democracy, and an organ- ization of representatives from both companies, until the influence closing or- der stopped all public meetings and put an end to this part of the work.

These studios stationed in Central Park, Los Angeles, and in charge of the players of a different studio each night, produced a total of $1,679,970.

Liberty Tank, under the leadership of Mary Miles Minter, which traveled to San Jacinto, Long Beach, Pomona, Santa Ana, Huntington, Fullerton, Whittier and other nearby towns, secured a total of $2,171,700.

Tank Democracy, managed by Roy Sturges and Joseph Sedgwick, made a list of towns including Redlands, San Bernardino, Santa Monica, Sawtelle, Glendale, Burbank and others, and reached a total of $120,550.

The largest individual subscription was made by Charles Chaplin for $60,000. Other large subscriptions were as follows: Frank Keenan, $40,000; Douglas Fairbanks, $35,000; Lois Weber, $30,000; D. W. Griffith, $30,000; Wm. S. Hart, $30,000; William Parsons, $25,000; Ethel Clayton, $25,000; Deanna Dona, $20,000; Francis Ford, Fanny Ward and Mary Miles Minter, $20,000 each. Thos. H. Ince and Lillian Gish, $15,000 each. C. B. De Mille, $12,000, and $10,000 each for Jesse L. Lasky, Mack Sennett, Sexie Hayakawa, Henry Lehrman and William Duncan.

W. D. Parkinson, a citizen of Glendale, got the souvenir receipt book and album of autographed pictures of stars that was offered for the biggest single subscription, by signing up for $110,000 in bonds.

Helen Keller sold in the neighborhood of $200,000 in bonds by writing and wiring to friends throughout the country. These subscriptions were all credited to the Los Angeles moving picture drive.

The amounts subscribed for by the heads, players and employees of the different studios were:

Astra, $31,150; Chaplin, $63,950; Brunton, $117,500; Christie, $16,250; Brentwood, $350; Fairbanks, $6,700; Eltinge, $8,400; Hite, $13,340; Francis Ford, $1,500; Fox, $24,000; Griffith, $89,400; Hampton, $12,050; Hart, $38,500; Hayakawa, $27,850; Ince, $52,600; Manager, $17,750; Metro, $64,400, National, $47,850; Rolin, $11,300; Romayne Super Films, Inc., $1,000; Sun- shine Comedies, $27,600; Sennett Studios, $38,650; Lois Weber, $43,750; Universal, $122,650; Triangle, $12,450; Vitagraph, $90,550; Columbia, $8,000; Laboratories, $18,000; Theatres and Exchanges, $97,000.

The order prohibiting all public meet- ings on the part of the Liberty Loan Association, which came just as the drive was in full swing, materially affected totals, but in spite of the handicap, the showing is splendid, and all the member companies of the Los Angeles colony showed fine patriotism in the unselfish manner in which they threw themselves into the campaign and bent all their energies to make the loan drive a success.

Woody Is to Be Select's General Sales Manager

S. WOODY, former field manager for Select Pictures Corporation has been appointed by General Manager Arthur S. Kane to the position of general sales manager. Mr. Woody is a Seattle man and is well known to exhibitors and producers all over the country, having enjoyed a long and successful career as a director.

New York exhibitors will easily recall Mr. Woody as sales manager of the New York Triangle branch, while the Chicago trade will also remember him for the efficient manner in which he managed the Triangle branch in that city.

Out on the Pacific Coast, which is Mr. Woody's old stamping ground, he is, perhaps, better known than in any other place. In 1912 he started with the General Film Company, where he worked in varying capacities from sales- man to district manager, changing la- ter to Mutual, where he held the same office, that of district manager. It was while he was working with Triangle that General Manager Kane appointed him Pacific Northwest general mana- ger for Select. Shortly afterward he was made field manager.

Woody's present field of endeavor will carry him to every Select Branch in the country, although six months of the year he will be at his desk in the Home Office. The remainder of his time will be divided equally among the different branches.

Ramsay Joins Rothafel

Terry Ramsaye, publicity manager for the Mutual Film Corporation for the past three years, has resigned and become press representative for the Ri- bert W. Rothafel Company in the direction of S. L. Rothafel. Mr. Rams- saye took charge of his new job on Monday, November 11. He was suc- ceeded at the Mutual by Colvin W. Brown.

Leonard C. McChesney Dead

Leonard C. McChesney, for six years advertising manager of the Thomas A. Edison, Inc., died Monday morning at his home in Orange, N. J. The deceased was fifty-nine years of age and leaves a widow, two daughters and a son.

Senate Finance Committee Has Substitute Rental Tax

The Senate Finance Committee will recommend to the Senate shortly after the reconvening of Congress that the Senate incorporate. Representatives with respect to the so-called motion picture rental tax. In the new war revenue measure which the Senate Finance Committee is considering, the House of Representatives adopted a provision reading:

"There shall be levied, assessed, collected and paid, in lieu of the taxes imposed by Section 600 of the Revenue Act of 1917 (in this case the so-called film footage taxes) upon the business of leasing or licensing for exhibition such pictures containing a picture ready for projection, 10 per cent."

As the House adopted the measure, it would have been up to the exhibitor upon renting a picture to stand the 10 per cent. tax. The way the Finance Committee has the matter fixed up the burden is placed upon the lessee of the films. It will be upon the latter that the tax will be assessed. A clause in the proposed new section, however, will give the lessee the privilege of adding only 5 per cent. of the rentals will be assessed against them. The object of this is to protect the taxpayers on films where the theatre agrees to put on the picture and the contract does not permit adding the whole of the tax provided for.

The text of the Senate Finance Committee's provision reads:

Sec. 907. That on and after the 1st day of January, 1919, every person who shall engage in the business of leasing or licensing for exhibition such pictures containing pictures ready for projection shall pay monthly an excise tax in respect to carrying on such business equal to 10 per cent of the total rentals paid by such person in the preceding month. If a person owning such a film exhibits it for profit, he shall pay a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the fair rental value of such film at the time and place where and for the period during which exhibited, but if the film is sold for exhibition by lease or license, the tax imposed by this section shall be at the rate of 5 per cent. of the total rentals paid by such person in the preceding month and the tax imposed by this section is hereby made applicable to the business of leasing or licensing for exhibition for profit, and if such contract does not permit the lessee to add to the whole of the tax imposed by this section to the amount to be paid under such contract, then the lessee or licensee, shall, in lieu of the lessee or licensor, pay so much of the tax in proportion to the total rentals paid by such person as is not permitted to be added to the contract price. The tax imposed by this section shall be in lieu of the tax imposed by subdivisions (c) and (d) of Section 600 of the Revenue Act of 1917.

Bruxex Exhibitors Dance

The Cinema Exhibitors' Association of the Borough of the Bronx, New York City, held its sixth annual entertainment and ball at Hunts Point Pavilion, on Monday evening. The entertainment comprised Fox, Sunshine and Twede Dan comedies; Houdini, the master of mystery; Andy Rice, mone-tery; Ewart Sumner, the house and Margerite Marsh, entre- tainers, and McCarthy and Fisher, in a spasm of songs. Marion Davies, George Walsh, and June Walker, followed by the officers of the associa-

Winipeg Exhibitors to Get Rebate on Theatre License

The City of Winnipeg has decided to make a rebate on moving picture licences for six months of the present year to enable local exhibitors to make partial reimbursement to their employees for loss of wages through the closing of theatres because of the epidemic.

At a meeting of the Board of Control of Winnipeg, Alderman Sparling, chairman of the market, license and relief committee, who had been appointed chairman of the same committee, appointed a committee to interview the Manitoba Government officials with a view to securing a rebate of the Province's licence tax for the theatres for the same purpose.

Data showing the number of theatre employees out of work, the number needing immediate assistance, number of dependents and other details has been asked for by the city to be used as a basis for special relief. A public grant was made to N. J. Hargreave, legal representative of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, and R. Ker- shaw, president of the association, who headed a delegation of exhibitors and theatre employes.

It was pointed out that the exhibitors did not want compensation, but that the exhibitors wanted their employees protected in some way. The theatres pay an aggregate of $9,000 per year in licence fees to the city, and in addition pay a large amount in various other charges.

Theatre rents amount to more than $8,000 per month for some twenty-five Winnipeg theatres, and the investment in Winnipeg theatres amounts to $400,000, it was declared.

"When employees of concerns are sacrificed for the benefit of the community, the theatres are sacrificed by the community," said Controller A. W. Puttee, in urging the proposal to rebate fees for six months of the year. Winnipeg theatres have been closed since October 12.

Norma Talmadge to Return East

A message received at the Norma Talmadge studios, at 318 East 48th street, this week stated that Miss Talmadge, her director, Sidney A. Franklin; Thomas Meighan, Gladden James and other members of her company would start for New York on November 4 and that the play having been titled "The Heart of Wetroa." Miss Talmadge intends to stop off at the Grand Canyon a day or two to get one or two location scenes for "The Probation Wife.

Miss Talmadge will produce in the East for the winter, and following "The Probation Wife" will do a series of original stories by Eugene Walter.

Kentucky Judge Decides For and Against Central

A DECISION made by Judge Field of the Circuit Court of Jefferson County, Kentucky, in a case of the Central Film Service of Indianapolis, Ind., may result in the matter going to the Court of Appeals. This case is an interesting one from several points.

The Central Film Service was an Indiana corporation, and is now a part of the Universal Company, it being operated as the Universal Film Exchange, Inc. The Central Film Company maintained a booking office in Louisville, which delivered films and secured business, but all contracts were located in Indianapolis, the local office merely acting for the company, and not having the power to make final contracts.

Under the Kentucky statutes a concern doing business in the state must file with the secretary of state and clerk of Jefferson County a statement showing the names and places of residence and the places where business was transacted, and upon whom action can be taken. This was not done in the case of the Central Company, as the Louisville branch was acting there for the same work as a salesman. However, under the statutes a contract cannot be upheld if the ownership or agent is not listed.

Judge Field, in his decision, held that on the ground that the Central Company was not authorized to do business in Kentucky between August 1, 1915, and December 31, 1915, because it had not complied with the statutes relative to filing papers as explained above, the defendant was held not to be entitled to recover. Therefore this decision of Judge Field's is almost certain to be carried to a higher tribunal.

Henry D. Berger in New York

Henry Diamant Berger, director of a big French film trade paper in France, Le Film, has just arrived in this country. He has come here with the object of establishing in Paris a central distributors agency for all films in order to defeat the efforts of the German film industry to secure the film trade closed in neutral countries.

Mr. Berger has made his offices with Adolph Oss, 1457 Broadway.

Ruth Roland Portrays Bit of Daring

Ruth Roland, as heroine of the Paris Central Film Company's latest production, reached the zenith of her unusual daring in the fourteenth episode, released the week of November 17, where she is thrown into a perilous situation and battles her way out. There was no Tracy peril that might have turned to tragedy at any moment. Miss Roland emerged from this scene almost unscathed.

FACTS AND COMMENTS

WELL, that's finished,” as the old lady exclaimed as she wound up the last ball of carpet rags for the new rug on the sittin' room floor. Yes; we mean the war. You've heard that it's over and that we win and that the Hun Kaiser has beat it along with his brood of kaiserlings to await whatever fate a thoroughly incensed world may have in store for him and his defeated war lords. Terms of armistice handed to what was left of the once powerful German Government are such as to preclude any renewal of hostilities by that Government or whoever it's successors may be. There remains only the final cleaning up of the terrible mess which has been left by the worst war the world has ever experienced. That will be a job for the diplomats, and we believe that it will be well and properly done.

But in the meantime we have a duty to perform that is just as important and just as insistent as anything we have yet been called upon to do, and that call that will be made upon us to maintain the men who have performed so brave and efficient a part in bringing about the only right conclusion of this great conflict against the peace and security of the world. In the brief space of a year we have brought into being the greatest war machine the world ever saw and have manned it with millions of men. It will take longer to disassemble that machine and to return those men to peaceful and creative occupations. The taking apart will not be as expensive as was the building up, but much money will be required. We are now being asked to give to that end and our giving should be cheerful and liberal. Remember, our boys faced death with a smile; let us bring them back with that smile still on their faces. How much will you GIVE?

* * *

THERE are other problems facing us as the result of war's termination. They concern the conduct of our respective businesses during the period of readjustment that must follow. Under the unvariable stimulus of war there has been an inflation of prices of almost everything we eat, wear or require in business. Wages have risen to unnatural heights in many industries. In the period of readjustment all these things must be corrected; prices and wages must return to their proper level, but the task will be no easy one. Fortunately the motion picture business has not been materially affected by this wartime inflation. War taxes it has been called upon to pay, but not in a greater proportion than has been levied upon other industries. In the matter of wages operators' unions only have demanded more money. Employees in all other branches of the trade are receiving about the same wages they did when the war began. In the matter of raw material the advance has been comparatively slight, so that the deflation process will not be so great a problem within the trade. What will affect us will be the consequences of deflation in other industries and that will be considerable. To meet these conditions will call for careful financing and the husbanding of such resources as are now in hand. Every effort to prevent overproduction should be made, for the home market is hardly in condition to absorb a greater product than it now takes.

* * *

Too much hope should not be put in the foreign market at this time. It will require more than a year to straighten out business conditions abroad. In Germany, Austria, Russia and the entire Balkan region only chaos exists. When reason and regularity may be restored is problematic. Until that time comes the exportation of pictures to those countries will be impossible. It is true that embargoes that have restrained shipments to neutral countries will be, in a measure, raised, but there will still be limitations because of the great need there will be for the shipment of supplies needed for the rebuilding of Europe and the maintenance of our men who will remain there to help with that work. Hence it is well not to be too optimistic on the matter of immediate trade expansion. The war is over. Yes. But there remain many adjustments to be made before trade can safely follow the flag.
THE WORLD IS NEW-BORN
By Louis Reeves Harrison.

NOT that the end has come, but that the truth has come. This world of ours was not created for destruction, not the playground of kings to be overturned by them at will, for we have rid ourselves of those gaunt specters of the Middle Ages handed down to us by a serfdom which could not be rooted out of the hearts of people except through the dread instrumentality of war. We are through with kings, but we still have to face the ignorance they fostered. Out of the wreck and wreck of attempt to stifle progress and corrupt all mankind has risen an immortal idea of enlightenment that will shine eternally, the light perpetuated in our hearts by noble sacrifices on every hand and by those who gave their lives to establish the world's finest principles.

Our resentment of wrongs done gave us the impulse. Our determination to right those wrongs built up a fine sentiment.

Then sentiment became united with clear-headed reason, and we fought.

No broad form of philanthropy, no magnificent system of world-wide charity, not the deepest laid schemes ever dreamed of in our humanitarianism, ever compared with this United American effort to alleviate suffering across the seas, its ultimate aim to create democratic and intelligent conditions of government under which no such suffering can exist within the limits of present vision.

We sacrificed our present happiness for all.

We sacrificed it for the future of all.

Now the question arises how to make future happiness assured.

Is it possible to prevent this fearful waste of vital energy?

Can all this misery and woe be avoided in the years to come?

Not by any optimistic political scheme, nor even by the scientists—they fail to stop pestilence and famine—not by policing the nations as planned, not even by benevolent forms of government. Our happiness in the future does not depend so much upon government as on our understanding as a united people. The right course of action for this nation, and for all other nations, to pursue for the best interests of those on whom freedom has just dawned.

Most of them were ignorant of their best interests. Otherwise those interests could not have been usurped.

They were educated from childhood to believe in kings.

A kingdom is a good deal like some of our big business organizations, run in the interest of the officers, not in that of the stockholders, and we have grown accustomed to the big business organization, the combination which puts up the price of vital necessities, privateering under a flag of Government loyalty. The smaller a man's holding, the less chance he has of finding out how he is being robbed by the kings of commerce.

What could be grander than our Liberty Crusade?

We have overcome those who would have withered human freedom.

We have cleared the field for progressive elements abroad.

Not let us turn our attention to the big crooks at home.

While we were giving up the little joys of life and handing over all we could rake and scrape together for the sake of our boys at the front, a lot of financial and mercantile kings and kaisers on this side of the Atlantic filled their pockets by overcharging us whenever we were compelled to go for the bare necessities of life, making famine and pestilence possible in our midst. It is all very well for us to ameliorate conditions abroad, which we are willing to do, but we have in the SCREEN a powerful instrumentality for arousing a new sentiment about those parasites here who produce nothing of value to the world, who really add nothing to its wealth, who contribute nothing to its progress. We will have no striking proof that this old world of ours is born anew until we make war on THEM.

Let us strike for a new freedom at home, using the screen in place of the sword, against the enemy within, against the parasite, the profiteer, and build a better art for our grander nation.

THE GREATNESS OF WOMAN
By Edward Weitzel.

THE claim has been made by a number of reviewers and persons interested in the exploitation of moving pictures that "Woman," Maurice Tourneur's latest production, is one of the finest achievements of the screen. Such a claim calls for careful and truthful investigation of the picture in all its phases. The first question to be considered is the ethical status of the work. No moving picture of a serious nature can escape such examination; an alleged screen masterpiece with the comprehensive and responsible title of "Woman" demands the closest kind of scrutiny on this head. It can have but one moral purpose—to do justice to its subject and impress upon the mind of every spectator that the evidence for and against the mothers of men has been presented with the strictest honesty and that the conclusion reached is overwhelming in favor of woman. Any other verdict is also an artistic error.

Charles Whittaker, the author of the scenario of "Woman," acknowledged that the inspiration for his share of the work came from the writing of the English realist, George Moore. It is doubtful if a more untrustworthy source could have been found. The author of "Esther Waters" has always dealt with woman in her lowest mental and physical aspect, and the quotation "The legitimate occupation of man's mind is woman," which is published as the inspiration of the Whittaker scenario, is from a book that is not circulated by the public libraries of the country, a distinction shared with Arnold Bennett's latest story, "The Pretty Lady."

The arguments against woman are presented in the picture in five episodes that take up four-fifths of the story, and the characters chosen are Eve, Messalina, Heloise and two fictitious persons whose acts are as little to any woman's credit as are the disobedience of Eve, the lust of Messalina or the sensuality of Heloise. In what is termed an epilogue, brief incidents are shown of woman's efforts in the present and her share in helping to win the Great War. An insert states that woman has always stood by the side of man throughout the ages and helped him in his struggle toward the light. This attempt at compromise comes too late, and does not restore either the moral or the artistic balance. Each physical Jezebel or moral harpy should have been neutralized by the introduction of some noble and uplifting woman of the same historical period. As it stands now, the overabundance of evil in the picture leaves an aftertaste that is not removed by the antidote in the epilogue.

Granting George Moore his contention that “The legitimate occupation of man’s mind is woman,” there is a still more praiseworthy war for him to study in his female companions than what Granville Barker calls “that barnyard world of sex.” In the play, “The Madras House,” one of Barker’s characters remarks: “I don’t see why we men and women should not find all happiness—and beauty, too—in sober purposes.... I want an art and a culture that shan’t be just a veneer on savagery.”

*Maurice Tourneur’s share of the work leaves much to praise. All his skill has not sufficed to blend the several episodes into an artistic whole, because the original proposition lacks logic and sincerity and one of the episodes is in bad taste, to say the least. A sacred history is traced to Adam and Eve, and also in “Woman.” This screen version of the Garden of Eden story is a bewildering and unlovely scrambling of the Book of Genesis and Darwin’s theory of evolution. Adam is shown as still in the ape state, a repulsive and mentally deficient creature, who could have had no more understanding of a divine command than could the dinosaurian have comprehended a traffic regulation or a sign reading “Keep Off the Grass.” Eve, on the contrary, is introduced as a physically and mentally perfect being, with all a modern woman’s graces and sensual weakness. The contrast between the two robs the episode of all dignity and brings it perilously near to burlesque.

The Messalina episode, considered separately, is an artistic gem. All the Tourneur ability in the handling of lights, grouping and authentic atmosphere is used at its best. It is a fascinating revelation of the higher walks and the unbridled licentiousness of life in ancient Rome. Flore Revalles, as the wife of Claudius, gives the finest performance of the entire cast. The Heloise-Abelard and the Cyrene-Fisherman episodes are both well migh impossible. The fifth episode, where the young Southern girl betrays an escaping Union soldier for the sake of a watch, is so false to the character of the women of that period it becomes a distinct blot on the general scheme of the picture.

To compare “Woman” to the screen version of “The Blue Bird,” directed by Maurice Tourneur, is to regret that the subject matter of the Whittaker scenario has not the beautiful logical and moral balance that gives the Maeterlinck story its chief value. The sooner the screen recognizes the importance of this factor in its advancement, the faster and firmer will be its progress.

Making Old Stills Serve a Most Worthy Purpose

QVTIE the most practical idea in scrap books for the entertainment of soldiers and sailors has been worked out by the World Film Corporation and the Stage Women’s War Relief. This is the Hospital Film Book—all pictures and no text to tire eyes and brains. The first dozen scrap books of this new type were made at the suggestion of Anna Steese Richardson, magazine writer and lecturer, who had been asked by the Stage Women’s War Relief to assist in entertaining 500 or more convalescents in the Red Cross Hospital of a nearby hospital. When Mrs. Richardson learned that many patients would miss the program because they were still confined to the wards, she conceived the idea of taking moving picture scrap books to the sick men. The World Film Corporation did the rest. “Stills” from popular film dramas introducing World Film stars were grouped under military titles, bound to appeal to the soldier-patients.

About twelve “stills” were used for each book, and they were tied inside glazed cardboard covers with red, white and blue ribbon, like loose-leaf memorandum books. The covers were lettered and decorated with patriotic pasters, flags, shields, army and navy insignia and figures of Columbia and Uncle Sam. Pasted on a corner of each picture where it would not interfere with the scene was a typewritten caption, just enough to explain the photograph and identify the player. They were a capital idea, made an instantaneous hit with the wounded men, and were passed from bed to bed by nurses who pronounced them the most practical scrap books so far supplied.

The charming actresses in the work rooms of the Stage Women’s War Rel-lief, 366 Fifth avenue, are making up the books as fast as covers, ribbons, pasters and typewritten captions can be secured.

Here is a new and valuable use for what once represented considerable waste and loss in the film production business. It is patriotic service for fighting men now laid low, for every soldier knows and loves the “movies.”

Funeral of Harold Edel.

The funeral of Harold Edel was held at the Campbell Funeral Church in New York City on Monday, November 4. The services were conducted by Rabbi Stephen Wise. A string quartet from the St. Bartholomew Church was present for appropriate selections. Herbert Waterman and Dorothy Tilsen sang. The body was taken to Cleveland.

Christy Walker Dies of Influenza.

The funeral of Miss Christy Walker, well known in the motion picture profession as the mistress of ability and promise who died Tuesday from influenza, was held Friday from her home, 601 West 137th street.

Born in Birmingham, Ala., twenty years ago, Miss Walker, by her beauty and talent, had attained a prominent position in the profession. She was ill only a few days.

Besides her husband, Captain H. N. Walker, of the Chemical Warfare Service, stationed at the American University, Washington, D.C., her year-old son, Carter Walker. Miss Walker is survived by her mother, who came on from Birmingham to attend the funeral.

Approach of Peace Already Boosting Theatre Receipts

IMMEDIATELY on receipt of the glorious news that Turkey had collapsed and that Austria was pleading for a cessation of hostilities, World Pictures took steps to observe the attitude of the public toward the theatres in New York City. The officials of the company felt that here would be found an opportunity to show hopeful pictures to picture producers as well as the exhibitors might expect the full tide of prosperity for amusement enterprises that it was felt would come with the termination of the world-wide struggle. World Pictures learned that notwithstanding the deterrent influence of the influenza epidemic the theatres in New York recorded an increase in box office takings of an average of 400 per cent over the week previous. One ticket agency said that business reached on Friday $3,000 on the day, whereas a week ago they did less than $200 on the day. Some of the theatres—in fact 70 per cent. of the theatres on Saturday night—had their standing room only signs out for the first time in many months. If this is the experience of theatres with the elimination of Turkey and Austria from the war, what will be the effect when Germany will be compelled to surrender unconditionally? Experience has shown that theatricals connected with the theatre for many years are unanimous in the belief that we will have for the next three or four years the greatest era of prosperity for amusements ever known in the history of the world.
ACTIVITIES IN THE EDUCATIONAL FIELD

Naturalization Bureau’s Efforts for the Schools Included with Military and Zoological Subjects

I

WHAT seems to be the most inactive period in the production of educational films it is interesting to note the rumblings of a much more intensive effort on the part of available material than ever before. The interest to which the moving picture film has been put is in general propaganda work and the view that the field is one to which the producer has not been exposed is all the more questionable. What is to be gained from the use of the film as a recreational and instructional medium, as well as in the great work of helping to maintain the spiritual morale of the fighting forces, has served as strong suggestions of greater use to be made of the strictly educational film. The cry of the schools for film and film work in visual education is going to be met more squarely, there is going to be a new use for shielded material of the kind the films are, and the producer is

One of the most significant signs of the times is the move being made by the Bureau of Naturalization of the United States Department of Labor to distribute educational films in schools as an aid to Americanization.

David K. Niles, Chief of the Motion Picture Section of the Naturalization Bureau, has handed us the following letter which is being sent to schools throughout the country in an effort to establish an interest in the visual approach to work and to gain information regarding the facilities and disposition of the various districts to ward the enterprise:

Dear Sir:

You have heretofore indicated your active interest in the work of the Bureau of Naturalization of the United States Department of Labor by organizing citi-szenship classes for applicants for naturalization.

The Motion Picture Section has selected and edited the Motion Picture Section and the Bureau of Naturalization of the U.S. Government has distributed the “Student’s Textbook,” compiled by Mr. Raymond P. Crist, Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization, and are intended as an aid to the public school teacher in the preparation of candidates for the responsibilities of citizenship.

While motion pictures can be used successfully in school work to supplement the work of the school teacher and textbook, they cannot be used to supplant either.

This attempt to develop the educational possibilities of the motion picture in classroom work and under the supervision of your Government. Too long has this work of the motion picture been neglected.
The motion picture in dedication has been next step is up to
you. Will you, therefore, please answer the enclosed questions?

Cordially yours,

DAVID K. NILES,
Chief, Motion Picture Section.

QUESTIONS.

1. Have you an appropriation for motion pictures?
2. Has your school department motion picture projectors?
3. What is the age of projector?
4. How long have you been showing motion pictures?
5. How soon could you begin using the films of this Department?
6. How many hours a week will you devote to this purpose?

I. Can you pay anything toward the cost of handling motion pictures for your school?
II. Name some motion picture theatres near the schools in which you believe it would be possible to show motion picture pictures, if you have no motion picture projecting equipment?

Asks Extension of Time on Film Shipping Cases

T

HE National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has entered into negotiations with the Bureau of Explosives relative to having time in which motion picture companies must comply with the new regulations of the bureau in regard to film shipping cases extended for a period of seven months.

When the new regulations affecting the shipment of motion picture film were put into effect there was a provision that anyone who had purchased the old style shipping cases prior to May 15, 1918, could continue to use them until December 1, 1918.

Owing to the introduction and the difficulty in obtaining sheet iron, of which material the new cases must be made, the method had practically impossible for the exchanges throughout the country to obtain the new cases. As the period of grace expires in less than a month’s time, an extension has been asked for under the law.

Owing to the short time remaining until December 1 it is expected the bureau will take prompt action on this request.

Dwinding Reels.

By Epes W. Sargent.

HARKING back into the past, it will be remembered that all reels used to be “approximately 1000 feet” long. This is due to the inflation of the advertisements of five years ago.
When a manager booked in a three-reel or a five-reel show he knew just how long that show would run. He could arrange his program to within a few minutes of a schedule, knowing that few reels would drop below 975 feet at the worst.

To-day a reel is a tin thing on which the film comes wound, but just how much film is wound upon a reel is hard to say. The beaten track of the release reels was left behind with the appearance of the two-reel stage. Since then the picture must be better than a five and an eight-reel release better than a six, until nowadays many features contain seven and eight “reels” which might be accommodated very comfortably on five reel wound reels.

It is a well known fact that the reach point where the reel has ceased to exist as a convenient standard of measurement and has become instead the tool of the selling agent and the publicity man. It would not matter were this generally understood, but the growth of the scheme has been so slow that managers are not aware of it. A reel of film eight feet long is regulated by pure food law and regulated by any standard of weights and measures. As one correspondent says:

“This sending in a five-reel subject wound on eight reels is the latest.
Make them tell it in feet; not reels. We follows in the sticks book a seven or eight or nine-reeler for a full show and the people hardly get seated when the show is over—all half-reels. Here’s a good chance to help the remote exhibitor who thinks he has booked a two-hour show, judging by its length in reels. If you buy the reel you are buying a cat in a tissue and more often than not it is a mighty skinny cat. It’s getting worse time all the time.

There is a great deal in what this exhibitor says. He is located some distance from an exchange and cannot extend his show with added bookings at the last moment. He must trust to what he has booked. It is all very well to say that he can arrive at the length by asking. This one does now, but why cannot the reel return to the old standard of measurement?

Artists cannot be produced by the yard nor regulated by exact thousand feet. It is much to the advantage of the serious exhibitor if the exchange announces the result of that effort in definite footage and not the misleading reel length, and for the sake of the man in the sticks, who must needs the help, such a course should be followed.
HOW to fool the editor? It can't be done. There was a time when publicity men indulged in the greatest possible amount of lying over on the editor. And they got away with it. And they laughed about it. And, in high glee, they showed their bosses how the editor that fooled for them. Then the editor, who after all is merely a worm like the rest of us, turned. He became suspicious of "news" items out of theatrical folk, and he learned to lump moving picture folks in those same suspicions. So he fell into the habit of dumping such stuff into the waste basket.

Then, along came certain publicity men who had a real desire to reform things. They decided to tell the truth. But they didn't take the trouble to find out what kind of stuff the editor wanted. Some editors like long stories, some like short ones, some like mere paragraphs, some like stuff in lighter vein, some will use photographs, some won't. So, to suit all editors alike, it went to the waste basket just as the old fakes had done.

So the reform publicity men thought the truth wouldn't work, and they reformed themselves again and went back to faking. It never occurred to them that it was the deadly dull form in which they gave the truth to the editors that made it unpalatable. The pitfall in the work and which made their efforts futile.

Fooling the editor is a thing that can't be done—in either of the old ways.

To Fool Editor Give Him the Truth.

There's only one way to fool him now, and that's to give him the truth in just the particulars that interest him by giving him what he doesn't expect. He doesn't expect the kind of stuff he wants. Give it to him. He gave up giving it to him. Fool him by giving him the kind of stuff he has quit hoping for. No matter how much of a shock it may give him, give him what he thinks you haven't brains enough to give him. He's not going to take the time to teach you what he wants. That's your job to find out. He has troubles of his own. You can make yourself useful to him. You have great quantities of the kind of news that he wants, because in studios as large as those of the Universal company, all news is breaking every day. Your only problem— and it's yours, not the editor's—is to serve it the way the editor wants it.

The editor is smart enough to know that the majority of people are interested in moving pictures than are interested in baseball or any other entertainment or sport.

But he is not going to let you prostitute his magazine just so you can get some free advertising. He is willing to use your news, even though it contains publicity, but only if it is genuine, and something that he himself wants.

Just as soon as you give him as much real moving picture news (truth in an interesting form) he will devote as much space to moving pictures as he now devotes to baseball, because he knows as well as you do that more of his readers are putting a real time in pictures and hasn't time to rewrite your stuff. He hasn't time to look out for fakes. First, you've got to find out what he wants. Then, you've got to keep on giving it to him until you've established a confidence in your stuff. It may take a long time to prove that you're not trying to fool him or to get something for nothing. You'll have to overcome old prejudices that exist in his mind against the old-style publicity man. But once you've made good with him, he'll help you as much as he help you. He doesn't expect you to do any of these things. He never expects to get anything that he really wants from you. He thinks you're always going to make the same old mistakes.

Fool him.

Universal to Issue Big Film on America Aroused

AFTER months of preparation the America's Infantry Pictures and Universal Film Manufacturing Company announce the completion of a super-picture presenting a narrative of America's war and peace power. The film shows how the United States accomplished military and industrial supremacy over its enemies, and how it is equipped now to achieve infinite good for its works.

"Keep the Home Fires Burning" is the title of the production. It is declared to be one of the greatest spectacle films ever made, and the very first of what may be called victory films. It is, in effect, the screen story of America's conquest.

The picture will be issued as an official message of the American Defense Society, with the heartiest support of that organization and all its executive leaders.

Several nationally prominent men are said to have originated the basic ideas of the production. They collaborated for weeks during their vacation in devising the general plan of what they hoped would be an epical review of the nation's rise to the world leadership, and then enlisted the film experts and defense society leaders for its making. The work of production started immediately.

Cameramen and film scientists were dispatched to many parts of the country to collect scenes and spectacles for the film. More than a hundred cameras were employed.

"Keep the Home Fires Burning" was made at the Universal studios by Harry Levey, manager of the industrial department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, under the direction of the American Defense Society.

Metro Has Three Lockwood Pictures

Though the death of Harold Lockwood came as a blow his many admirers will be glad of the opportunity to see more of his recent Classics productions, which had already been completed before his illness. These were "A King in Khaki," adapted and directed by Fred C. Balshofer from Henry Kitchell Webster's novel; "The Great Romance," by Finis Fox, directed by Edwin Carewe; and "The Yellow Dog," a novel by George Gibbs' famous novel, also directed by Mr. Carewe. These represent the young star at the zenith of his power.

First, this screen version of "The Wilson Dodd's stage play from "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" came to town. The picture stayed a week, and the producer decided on the theatre to see it. The box office receipts were over 1,500 pesos every night.

"We had a carnival the week that the Universal's picture came. This made an awful big hit with us, because Filipinos are great swimmers and we love water pictures.

"But the biggest movie hits are the patriotic war pictures. These pictures had a whole lot to do with making us Filipinos realize what this war means. I know they certainly made me feel like getting into the fight quick."

Get Busy.

During the Fourth Liberty Loan, a picture of the window of this office was like looking into fairyland.

Fifth Avenue, as far as the eye could see, was a mass of bustling, the Loan flag, the flags of our allies, slogan bars, the Stars and Stripes and banners. We recall only one occasion when the street was so well dressed. But while the Loan activities, there was not a side street that did not get its share of advertising. There was not a store, not even the outbuildings that did not cry the same slogans.

The Liberty Loan Committee did not rust to the Fifth avenue display to sell all the bonds. It went after everyone. The same in selling advertisements, take your plans from your office and with your house front, but do not think that advertising in any one locality will completely cover your clientele. Get after them with posted paper, programs and newspaper work to the extent that your plans permit. Don't do all your advertising in one bunch. Get it spread over a much larger surface as you can. Make the mutual row closest to home, but the further afield you get, the broader your appeal.

Steve Farrar.

Steve Farrar, of Eldorado and Harrisburg, Ill., gives the whole receipt for good advertising when he writes in a recent letter:

"You will notice that I have always been lucky or something in getting a printer wherever I have been. But I always go over every ad with him when I take it down, and I also take down sample for him to look over, this I usually get from your department, and then when I send one in and you give it a good word as to display, I always take the book down to him and show him that we are working along the right line. Perhaps I have been lucky, but I know that I have always gotten good work from the printer."

That is not luck; it's common sense.

We're glad to see that Steve is following the Bleich ideas. We are surprised to see so few using this layout. And talking of Steve, you'll remember that he was raising blooded dogs lately. The other day he swapped his stud dog for a fliver. Must have been some b'cause for even second hand flivers cost money these days. Here is a double space for the Boyd, Omaha, in which the suggestion of two advertisements is given through the totally different style of advertisements. Had the name of the house run across the picture I was playing. That's strong language, perhaps, but it is true. A press book gives you what a company press man thinks you should use for his attraction. This is fine, but it is not the best ideas of the best managers throughout the distributing company. Steve lately is a living example for "Under the Yoke" that tells in three lines what the play is about, and tells a lot of them. Put the glass on this and get the text, then try your hand at it the next time you have a vamp picture yourself. A good adaptation of the Bleich weekly advertisement is found in a full and a half, full. This is run in the Saturday issue with a six inch single for the current bill. It is a useful form of display even if it does give some advertising credits a pain in their Just why all the "beat" about the "Vampy"-villagers? Never mind. If the female is given in flagrant disobedience of one of these "vampy" rules then what a hard time she has. Let's take the present situation, for example. "The "vampy" lady in this instance is about in about 5000 people are getting through with this kind of housewife, making her a traitor, up to the house front, this is embarrassing for her. Then, woman, a feeling sorry for herself, goes over to the "vampy" house, tries to get her "amorous" ending, and finally tries him in attempting to get the paintings that will save the house's life. After hearing returned the valuable paintings, our "dovey," does he no longer a "vampy," deliberately submits herself, and then on a black, "The end," and the customers make room for more, when we hope you are waiting on the inside to get in.

I've been looking at "vampy" plays and histories for years, and have yet to find one where she looks more than "30 cent" at the boxoffice. I know in mind writing a scenario some time, developing one ready to the Professorian operations of Miss Vamp and she wins the newspaper to the bound to come to anyone with vampy aspirations.

I don't have a young man for waiting to live a life like Bryan Pilkington, Marguerite Clark, Etta Jackson etc., party but when it comes to following the occupations of a vampy—well I think the trouble with Eleva for a life.

McCormicks.

S. Barrett McCormick, of the Circle, Indianapolis, is always well worthy of study. For one thing he knows how to say things so well that it pays to use display spaces for small type talk. It is what sells the picture, and he puts his press notice in his display ads. One pair of elevens—one three and one four columns wide—are more text than type, with a large attractor. He knows that it will pay him to make his readers find out about Mitchell Lewis, so he tells about him and identifies him through a previous play. The insert shows how he cuts down a large cut to make it fit a two fours. Once he has a mat he can cut his casts as he likes, and he gets many new effects through this means. If a cut is your own have a mat made and use portions if you can to advantage. A three fifteens and a three thirtens for Nazimova come out nicely so well that the suggestion of Salome is made too prominent. It is not a part of the real play, and gives the wrong suggestion. People will go to the theatre expecting to see something different, and will be disappointed no matter what they get. The larger cut is almost an oddity in its picture. The only display lines in a three fifteens are the star, play and house name. The rest is mostly eight point italic, but it makes an unusually attractive space, and one that will probably be read. The banks below the title relate to the additional attractions. For "The Fall of the Romanoffs" a four fulls and two three fifteens were taken. The red shirt announcement is another example of the unusual, and it will attract more attention than either of the other displays because of its oddity. The artist is wrong in using the dome with a crescent for his tailpiece in the other displays. This is the emblem of the Moslem, and not of the Russian-Greek Church. It will be seen that the same tailpiece is used in both the three and four column displays. This can be done where the top and tailpieces are separate. Here one is held together by a pair of columns, and in the other twelve point rule serves the same purpose. The width of the set is a three fulls, a four fulls and two smaller threes. The three fulls makes a vivid display, and the cut has been cropped to work as a three thirtens, with some changes in the type display. The four fulls starts off with a redrawn poster, and runs right into smallop, with the big type following. The bill was used for the second and third at the house, and special spaces were taken. All of the displays are made with unusual care, and show real work. The anniversary is merely announced. The rest came in the reading pages, but the anniversary announcement gives a punch to the suggestion that the bill must be better than usual.

Gave Away Stockings.

A. C. Raleigh, of the American, Butte, Mont., played "A Pair of Silk Stockings" lately, and as there was a patriotic demonstration on that evening, he announced that silk stockings would be given away at the next showing. It's an old trick, but the something-for-nothing appeal hitched up closely with the play, and it brought a crowd. Mr. Raleigh also hung around town red and yellow leg cut-outs lettered, "A Pair of Silk Stockings." Oh, Boy!" and at the top, "Americ Physical conditions they impressed the projection of the problem given them to solve.

The further fact that this must be done by a business or profession in which the field is the most difficult has a material effect in the further probable fact that many of the disabled who have been accumulating during the war will never again reopen their homes.

Mathews and Mathews also pointed out the fact, citing the recent scathing report of conditions in projection of the State Board of Health in proof, that a very large percentage of projection rooms, parting, and the like are not the "store-room" type, are dangerously unhealthy, and that projectionists working there are in continuous danger from inhalation of smoke, the point that many projection rooms must be reached by way of rooms leading through trap doors, or by devices and often times difficult paths, so that only an able-bodied man could have escaped serious injury or even death in event of a serious fire in the projection room.

"I have seen a man with one leg, one arm, and the other one with his hand in a cradle, trying to open a trap door, get through an eighteen-inch square hole and develop a film of static for a few minutes of fire on the screen!"

The projectionist editor set before the board the arguments that it is impossible that the job would be to disabled men to place them in the projection field without any even half an able-bodied apprenticeship, and with little or no real training in theoretical or practical projection; also that such action would work tremendous injustice to the industry itself. His argument was largely confined to showing the board the need for the induction of such men as the profession could absorb (after having absorbed its own returning men, who must naturally be taken care of;—a rather large undertaking in itself, by the way) as competent instead of incompetent projectionists. It was pointed out to the board the utter futility and absurdity of attempting, as some seem proposing to attempt, the transforming of disabled soldiers and sailors into projectionists through the medium of a few lectures and a short course of hospital training with a projection machine. We tried to show that unless the unquestionable fact, viz: That this would work injustice to the man himself and to everyone concerned, and that the board should recommend to no man to enter the projection field except after supplementing such teaching by a course of training (an apprenticeship) in a theatre projection room. We discovered the fact that much pressure

To Washington Again.
Again, at the request of our International offices, the editor of this department has journeyed to the Capitol City, this time to take part in a conference with the heads of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, to which board Congress had delegated the great task of rehabilitating, as workers, our partially disabled soldiers and sailors.
Assistant President Dolliver and Third Vice-President S. D. Newman had expected to take part in the conference, but other matters propelled their absence, so that First Vice-President H. J. Harrington and Organizer Mathews and the editor were left to represent the interests involved in the field, and Superintendent Training of W. J. Hamilton frankly declared, hinged the decision of the board as to his further action with relation to the projection and disabled men.
The conference lasted from 10:30 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. the board being represented by H. L. Brunson, superintendent of employment for the board; W. D. Hamilton, superintendent of employment for the board, all of whom impressed the editor as being men who are taking up a task of extreme difficulty with enthusiasm and with a broad vision.
They seek to place so old the return-disabled army and navy men that they will be self-respecting, self-supporting citizens, and to accomplish that end without the upsetting of labor conditions in any vacation affected.

"This board cannot be used," said Superintendent of Employment Brunson, "to flood any industry with an overplus of workers, and thus break down labor conditions in that field. To allow that would be to destroy the war work of the disabled soldier or sailor we seek to help as to the men already employed in the field, the tendency would be to leave the disabled man in an overcrowded field of labor, hampered by physical disability, yet compelled to compete with able-bodied men. That we prohibit because to guard against, so far as is possible. We are not seeking to guard against disabled soldier and sailor, not to injure him."

In these words were indorsed by Mr. Brunson’s colleagues on the board, and it stamps them as broad gauge men, having an understanding of the most outstanding phases of the problem given them to solve.

The view of matters from the stand-

The projectionist editor set before the board the arguments that it is impossible that the job would be to disabled men to place them in the projection field without any even half an able-bodied apprenticeship, and with little or no real training in theoretical or practical projection; also that such action would work tremendous injustice to the industry itself. His argument was largely confined to showing the board the need for the induction of such men as the profession could absorb (after having absorbed its own returning men, who must naturally be taken care of—a rather large undertaking in itself, by the way) as competent instead of incompetent projectionists. It was pointed out to the board the utter futility and absurdity of attempting, as some seem proposing to attempt, the transforming of disabled soldiers and sailors into projectionists through the medium of a few lectures and a short course of hospital training with a projection machine. We tried to show that unless the unquestionable fact, viz: That this would work injustice to the man himself and to everyone concerned, and that the board should recommend to no man to enter the projection field except after supplementing such teaching by a course of training (an apprenticeship) in a theatre projection room. We discovered the fact that much pressure sure is being brought to bear on the board to place large numbers of disabled soldiers and sailors in the projection field. The board officials intimated that they would not look to them just a bit "quicker." The left had been the impression that its officials are fair minded men who seek to and intend to do the right thing regardless of any outside influence or pressure once the "right thing" has been fully determined. Certainly it seems that the board will not allow itself to be used to flood any vacation with a surplus of labor, and that most decided is good.

Misguided Activity.
From Fred J. Harrington, former president Pennsylvania Exhibitors’ League, comes the following, with request for publication. We comply, of course, but reluctantly, because the letter cannot be to other than call for adverse criticism. I shall make represent it as written, consistently can, for the reason that I know friends Harrington personally and believe him to be perfectly honest.

In other words I do not for one moment imagine there is any ulterior, wage economizing scheme involved. Harrington’s judgment, that may not hold good of everyone implicated. The letter reads:

Dear Editor: While the convention of our organization, the American Exhibitors’ Association, was on at Chicago the Keystone state was not represented as it should have been; still I am pleased to let you know the members of the E. A. E. of our state were and are not asleep at the switch. Attached letter from the Supervisor of Western Pennsylvania to the Department of Labor of our state will prove that fact. It may be news to some of the states to hear we are ON THE JOB and that our representation has been forwarded by the Department of Labor now allowing us to employ operators 16 years of age, which certainly means something to the exhibitors of this state, and may help exhibitors of other states to obtain consideration, which they all need under present labor conditions and the scarcity of operators, with so many of the boys going to the front to aid Uncle Sam, which is a much nobler, grander work. I ask that you publish this letter, also copy of Mr. Feehan’s letter to the Department. Signed, Fred J. Harrington.

The letter of Mr. Feehan reads, its non-essential paragraphs deleted for sake of

Mr. J. H. Walker, Acting Chief Inspector, Department Labor and Industry, Harrisburg, Pa. Dear Sir: A conference was held the picture theatre owners of western counties, composed of E. J. Herrington, Mr. Oliver, D. McKee, St. Clair; J. S. Newman, Newcastle, and W. M. Kane, Carlisle, all the members of the Pennsylvania office today and directed my attention to the serious difficulty that would exist if the state should be in accordance with the Industrial Board’s standards for motion picture machine operation, which became effective January 1st.

The following constitutes their principal objections, viz. (A) Section 1 and 2 of the bill that an operator shall be not less than 18 years of age and that he shall be licensed as a projection operator. The third section of the law provides that boys 18 years of age be subject to its provisions. This means that large numbers of motion picture machine operators will be forced into the licensed position and the theatre owner will have no assurance that when he has secured a licensed operator he will have a man in his employ, unless he be physically unfit for military duty. You know that one of the hazards of this occupation, both to the operator and the public, has been unquestionable, prohibitory interpretations and regulations in order to insure competent and efficient operation. While the present condition is not the final solution toward the problem, it is a start toward it. That last declaration sounds queer to one acquainted with Pennsylvania examination of projectionists.

Ed. The effect of this provision of the new safety standards and of the new draft law will make it almost impossible to carry into effect the provisions of the standards, and the owner, being unable to secure an licensed operator, will be confronted with the proposition of either closing his theatre or deliberately violating the provisions of the law. (E) If your schoolboy "operators" work damage to the film over and above that done to the film by the projectionists, are you prepared to have the Pennsylvania League shoulder the added overhead expense thus incurred by the industry, or do you expect to make the exhibitors of other states help you foot the bill? (F) If you are going into the schoolboy business, why stop at 15. There are thousands of boys of ten and twelve who can do just about as well as the proposed 16-year-old untrained material you propose to shove into the projection rooms of Pennsylvania.

And the shame of it is that the Pennsylvania officials, who only ought to be working to ensure that the Pennsylvania Law is not violated, consented. Herrington says this action may be of value to exhibitors of one theory. Yes, as an example of what not to do. The Pennsylvania exhibitors have succeeded in dealing with the state a solider blow from which, I venture, the Indiana is also taking the matter up with pathos because it is a matter of weekly producers. I intend to try to secure at least a reduction of the evil, if not its remedying. There is no number of years ago did not have • • •. The subject is a very good number of 16-year-old boys (Children, you don't you.—Ed.) who can be drafted into the service.

(B) The question of suspending the requirements of Sections 1 and 2 of the bill was given rather consideration by the Industrial Board, for the following reasons: That this section will be enforced in securing operators due to abnormal conditions existing will undoubtedly be forced. I think that the commission in that respect is really right.

I am in favor of holding in abeyance the provision requiring projectionists to prove that conditions are again restored. I request you to call the Commission's attention to this letter; also members of the Industrial Board, as it contains my views on this subject.

Herrington and Peckan the following questions, which they are entitled to ask liberty through that department. (A) How is it that Vancouver, B. C., with an examination? Because Pennsylvania examination I know of like a plugged copper coin, has not, after years of war, in the past shut down the barrel and is not able to secure projectionists (not operators; she has no use for them) to man her houses. (B) How is it that New York City seems to stand in no danger of closing her theatres from lack of projection room help, though, as examination is as strict as ever and the age limit reduced. How is it that the Massachusetts is an age limit of twenty-one (21) and a good stiff examination. Why the tremendous excitement in Pennsylvania alone? (C) You propose to employ sixteen-year-old school boys to reproduce the product of the industry on the screen, do you? How much apprenticeship have they served, please? If in competent you, of course, understand there will be very great waste of machinery, and of light, which means coal. What do you propose to do to insure us against the possibility that what can but ill afford at this time? You, of course, expect to pay for your "operators? (I imagine that in most all they will be if they could be justly called even that. To make the picture (theatre) be an instrument to intelligence) the standard wages and give them the standard conditions of work. (D) What assurance do you offer the actor and producer that their work will not be even more taken from your theatre. (E) If your schoolboy "operators" work damage to the films over and above that done to the film by the projectionists, are you prepared to have the Pennsylvania League shoulder the added overhead expense thus incurred by the industry, or do you expect to make the exhibitors of other states help you foot the bill? Lens Combination.

asks: Would like to ask a question, provided it would be worth much of your valuable time: Can you recommend to me the best combination of lenses for projection of 35 mm. on 6.35" screen? 110 volt a. c., using 49 amperes. Size of projection lens is 4½, 4½, 5¼ inch focus. Distance of projection is 76 feet, and size of screen 12 feet, 10 inches. Distance from arc to film 20 inches. Please give price of combination you recommend.

Answering questions is exactly what your valuable time is for. Your question is a good one, but I have no knowledge of the equipment you mention. For forty amperes a. c. you should have two inch (1½) wide angle and a condenser lens set as close together as you can get them without actual contact, with about 22 inches of film in front of the condenser lens set. The 30.000 pound machine you mention has been made by S. A. Disney, known to be rather well equipped for the job. The projector, which will supply all the necessary information as to condenser lens focal lengths, is a matter of importance to know. The diameter of projection lens and distance of revolving shutter from aperture. Watch for it.
The Evolution of Picture Music
Is the Result of Conscientious Effort

Part III.

Theatres were assuming larger proportions and the time was ripe for more innovations. Here entered Mr. and Mrs. Tyrpani to complete the family reunion of Percussion. The family now being together and in concave solemnity, it was to be expected elsewhere would be some momentous upheaval in the realm of picture music, and there was.

During the slow growth of the cue sheets, musical scores crept into existence. The Essanay Company of Chicago produced a feature of five reels accompanied by a piano score which could be played on the organ. These scores were rented to the exhibitor at fifty cents a day and proved very helpful in properly interpreting the picture, but were not a financial gain to the company. This was in 1912, and there were no further experiments in musical scores until the run of "The Birth of a Nation" in New York during the year 1915.

The music for "The Birth of a Nation" will go down in the annals of the history of the film industry as an epoch of greatest importance. It was arranged for an orchestra of forty pieces and was clearly synchronized to the minutest detail. It was composed and arranged and, in so doing, he set a high mark at which future composers might shoot. At the time of writing, after these years of musical advance, "The Birth of a Nation" score still stands as a criterion, and no subsequent score has transcended its beauty or comprehensiveness.

Following closely upon the enthusiastic and popular reception of this famous score, the writer presented at the Broadway Theatre, New York, September 16, 1915, a musical score arranged for the Oliver Morosco picturization of "Peer Gynt."

Never was there a more severe test set for synchrony than this first performance of "Peer Gynt." Because of an unexpected delay in getting the music from the printer, there was no rehearsal, and the writer was forced to conduct a newly gathered together orchestra of fifty instruments through the intricacies of Grieg and at the same time through the music out coincidentally with the scenes. All went well until Peer Gynt shot the Southerner. Immediately after that there was a scene which was interpreted by using "Dixie." For some unaccountable reason, the shooting was delayed and the orchestra could not, with justice to the merits of the number being played, be held back until the duellists had vindicated their honor. Thus a moment before the shot the orchestra started "Dixie." No doubt at that moment the Southerner wished he was in Dixie, and the appreciative audience thought they were listening to a musical joke perpetrated to relieve the tension. Nevertheless, it was a bad break and was criticised severely by the daily papers.

If we are conscientious and painstaking in our efforts, we learn by our mistakes, and following scores were more successful.

The Paramount saw the possibilities of this arrangement of music and, by an arrangement entered into with G. Schrerner, Inc. and the writer, printed orchestral scores for one hundred and sixteen shows. "The Temple of the Sons" received an exhibitor for a nominal fee and letters of praise were received from hundreds of those deriving benefit from the publication.

But the time was not ripe for such an elaborate form of picture music. The service was poorly advertised and all those interested lost money. It was discontinued—not because the idea was wrong nor because the scores contained little merit—but from the pure lack of support expected from the exchange and the critics.

During this period, S. L. Rothapfel, sometimes called "The Little Napoleon of the picture industry," saw the vast possibilities of the musical part of his program and, being engaged to open the Strand Theatre on Broadway, gathered together an orchestra of thirty-five musicians and installed a large organ as a permanent feature of this new house. Carl Edouardie was engaged to conduct this constellation of artists, and a standard program of merit was conceived, in which singers of reputation had a prominent place. The Strand became the Mecca, not only for picture "fans," but for all lovers of the truly artistic music. Nothing like it had been seen before; never had the "movies" been run on such a large and elaborate scale. Picture presentation became an art which met with popular favor throughout the country. Live exhibitors everywhere began to pattern their amusement palaces after the Strand model. The name "Movie" lost its significance, and in its place we heard such new dignified terms as "Picture House" and "Motion Pictures" and "Picture Palace."

The program opened with an overture of classic nature or excerpts from some of the most popular operas. Then followed music fitting an educational subject. A vocal number separated the Scenic from the Pictorial Review, followed by another vocal selection. Then came the feature, an entr'acte by the orchestra, a comedy, and the bill closed with an organ solo.

The music from beginning to end, this program established itself in the hearts of the people and, although only four shows were run daily, the receipts were considerable in thousands of dollars.

The musicians who made no pretense of fitting the picture, but calmly sat waiting for a scene to appear that was a "joke," had done and the orchestra pit was to know them no more forever. Their places were filled with competent. Music publishing artists who gave the scene a more scientific intelligence and who played the music in perfect synchrony. These theatres indeed a far cry from the store front of earlier days to the "Picture Palace Beautiful," and a long flight from the big drum to the synchrony orchestra.

Though young in years, Mr. Edel's life was filled with many opportunities of hearing the best orchestral music and the increased interest and patronage of musical composers has been a wonderful musician.

From earliest childhood, he loved music, and became proficient as a pianist. It was his good fortune to have many opportunities of hearing the best operas and symphonic works. He reveled in musical color, and being an apt student, soon learned the fundamentals that distinguish artists from amateurs.

All this stood him in good stead when he undertook the management of picture theatres for the late Mitchell Mark. Mr. Edel's modesty never permitted him to accept the credit for his musical conceptions, and it was characteristic of the man that he should force the claim of achievements accomplished upon the head of his friend and employer.

The passing of Mr. Harold Edel, to music lovers, and to countless well wishers has created a void impossible to fill. To those of his family suffering in bereavement, we personally extend our inexpressible sympathy.

Death of Harold Edel Stuns Picturedom.

Active, useful and fruitful in the picture field, drawing to him countless friends because of his sunny disposition, Mr. Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand Theatre, New York, finished his work and passed into the Great Beyond, Saturday, November 3.

J. P. SEEBURG PIANO CO. - REPUBLIC BLDG. CHICAGO
Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean.

The beauty of his creation and a certain amount of leisure which is unavailing on board ship, have given the sailor many opportunities for music that the more prosaic musician is quite jealous of. Even while at work, the former is far more accustomed to lighten his labors with some pleasant strain, than is the latter.

Taking these facts into consideration, it is rather surprising that so few songs have been written that are distinctly the ocean in atmosphere.

Among this little group and embodying these ideas of patriotism and prayer we have "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean." It can scarcely be ignored when reviewing the current listings. Its versification and all the words are distinctly American.

So many wavy battles have been fought afloat that there should be interest and enthusiasm for that reason if it had no other title to distinction. England has set up some very wavy heroes of its own, but the American writer very sensibly argued that the "Gem of the Ocean" was far more applicable to the Island of Great Britain than to a large continent three thousand miles wide, and bounded by land on two sides. In England, the song is called "Britannia, the Pier." This is a little odd; there is a similar one there under that name as in this country by the one with which we have become familiar.

If the tune alone was concerned in the controversy, it would not be quite so a public matter of the American lyrics seems to be equally a question never satisfactorily decided. There were two clean songs in the Chinese Museum in the same city, called upon Mr. Becket and requested him to write the music for a song to be used in a benedict given Mr. Shaw. The latter produced some lines which he wished used as a nucleus. Mr. Becket wrote that these words were so ungrammatical and so deficient in measure that it was impossible to set them to music. He then mentioned that to the best of his knowledge, the idea had been acknowledged the truth of the statement.

The two men then went to the house of a friend who had an orchestra. There Mr. Becket wrote the first two verses in pencil and composed the music. On reaching home again, he added a third verse, arranged the music for a copy in Ink, gave it to Mr. Shaw, requesting him not to give or sell a copy. Then he adds: "A few weeks later I was in Philadelphia and was greatly surprised to see a published copy, entitled 'Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean,' written, composed and sung by David Shaw and arranged by Thomas & Becket, Esq."

Mr. Becket proceeds to relate that upon his return to Philadelphia he called upon the publisher. By him, Mr. Becket was assured that the music had been surrendered from Mr. Shaw. Mr. Becket thereupon produced the original pencil written manuscript and claimed the copyright. In a few weeks, the same made its reappearance and the credit was given to Mr. Becket.

The song did not take long to find its way across the ocean, and was sung everywhere in England. Mr. Becket seems to have had a difficult task in preserving to himself the honor of writing the song. For, when he visited London in 1847, he read the crotchet, and so diverted into other channels and it was accepted everywhere as an English composition by addressees, who probably really is, I being an Englishman by birth."

Thus the song, familiarly known as the "Red, White and Blue" flourishes. Its origin is shrouded in claims and counterclaims of controversy. But it would be a strange reader who cannot conceal the fact that it is warmly received as one of our patriotic airs. It breathes a true, simple, patriotic spirit which is a part of our American life and indicative of the spirit which in this present national crisis, we made "Columbia ride safe thro' the storm."

Patriotic Rally for Thanksgiving Day.

A patriotic rally entitled "Three Stars," the work of Mrs. David Allen Campbell, founder of National Song Day, will be given on Thanksgiving Day attraction in motion picture theatres throughout the United States. In connection with this picture presentation, the song will be sung by the audience. The words are by Charles Knapp, and the music is by Mrs. Campbell. The composer had this to say, which she has used the refrain of three old familiar songs. This fact alone should insure an ovation for the song, aside from the merit of the verses.

Promptly on the stroke of four o'clock Eastern time, Thanksgiving afternoon, if the splendid idea works out as planned, audiences all over the country will begin the same patriotic choral, and will follow the unfolding of a picture unique in the annals of American theatre and universals in its appeal to patriotism.

The allegory consists of five panoramic pictures chronicling slow progress of the American people through the ages of Autocracy's oppression down to the present time.

The crushing of the American spirit by war, famine and pestilence, heavily burdened by the weapons of Autocracy and compelled to march in chains. The chorus, to which all the forces of humanity respond,

These epic scenes move in quick succession across the screen, and fade into the dim scene of our American boys answering the call to arms and to the Blue Sands. Everywhere when the audience will be invited to sing the first verse of the song:

"Blue Star of Valor glowing ever on service flags of white,
You mark a hero's going" To fight the fight for Right.

The blue star, dissolving as the boys march away, the oncoming scene portrays the first defeat of Autocracy in battle—of the star, the Silver Star, of Service appears, while the audience sings in unison:

"Bright star of Silver shining over the land of the free,
Dole the life refining
By action glorified."

The Silver Star of Sacrifice, finally is dissolved into the Stars and Stripes, significant of the end of the conflict.

Then there is sung "With Star of Sacrifice" while the audience joins in singing:

"O, star of Gold! Immortal! O, sacrifice supreme!
Yielding to Heaven's portal
With Star of Bethlehem."

This star dissolves into a blue background, the Star of Bethlehem appears, and the whole and the audience, the "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

The "Liberty Song," is being arranged under the direction of Mr. Philip North Moore, president of the National Council of Women, an organization seven million strong, is intended to create a wave of patriotic melody that will reach from ocean to ocean.

New Ballad, "When I Come Home to You." "Smiles" has made such a hit wherever it is heard—and it is sung everywhere—there is another song of which Mr. J. Will Callahan, the writer of "Smiles," has a new ballad, "When I Come Home to You," written and arranged to music by Frank H. Grey, and the publishers, Huntlin & Dillworth, are predicting a great future for it.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q. I have a new theatre under my management and the work of gathering together the musicians for the regular weekly concert has been somewhat hard. After getting what I consider a good orchestra together, they refuse to play unless I pay them a day. As you can readily understand, with our show running continuously from 1:30 p.m. to 11 p.m., we must have music. What shall I do?

A. Music is not mechanical and good results cannot be ensured if the players are forced to play for hours at a stretch. No doubt the musicians who you have engaged can play more than seven hours without breaking one of the Union rules. Your data is somewhat meager from which to form a basis of advice, but, taking it for granted that the orchestra is a small one, we would suggest that there be a relief pianist or organist employed. He should open the show and play until 2:15 p.m., when the orchestra begins and plays until 5:15. The relief then should carry the supper show until 7 p.m. and the orchestra again take up the burden from 7 to 11 p.m. Moreover, they will be steady even when they are in the pit. Give them breathing spells by the interpolation of recitals or encores. This will give you better music.

Q. My cellarist refuses to play on a cement floor, claiming that it gives rheumatism. How can I please him?

A. Cement floors are poor sound resonators and much of the quality of tone is lost because of non-resiliency. Get a false wood flooring laid over the cement, and it will hold your cellarist and prove a blessing as a sounding board for your music.

Q. Should I start my music "at screenlights" or wait until the first scene of the picture?

A. Never allow a foot of film to lack musical accompaniment of some sort.

MENTAL "STUNTS" BY D. FAIRBANKS

Celebrated Exponent of the Active Life and Physical Agility as Applied to Moving Pictures Sits Quietly and Talks Soberly of the Serious Side of the Screen

By Edward Weitzel

The light which met the gaze was one that might have been anticipated from the well-known devotion of the movie star to the most strenuous forms of physical exercise.

Clad in a gray checked business suit, soft collar and dark blue tie, Doug stood on one foot in the centre of an imported rug nonchalantly swinging an elderly Japanese valet, Indian club, and a wrist watch around his head with one hand. His grasp upon the dark-skinned servant's ankle was gently reassuring, and he smiled pleasantly at the son of Nippon every time the bald spot on the man's head brushed against the ceiling.

"Mr. Fairbanks at his morning exercise," announced his press representative.

"Howdy, folks?" called out the athletic star, as he tossed the valet over from his right hand, and transferred his motion through space. "Sit down and make yourselves at home, I'll have this almond-eyed servitor pass the cigars as soon as I'm done with him. How long have we been at it, Sakio?"

The whirling Japanese consulted his wrist watch, and answered gravely:

"Forty-seven minutes, most honorable Mr. Fairbanks."

"Good—only an hour and thirteen minutes more!" And resuming his cheery whistle, the great exponent of pep and the active life accelerated the tempo of his muscular symphony and sent the human dumbbell circling through the atmosphere in even more intricate and bewildering curves.

"Does Mr. Fairbanks always employ Japanese valets?" asked a lady reviewer.

"Always," explained the truthful Mr. Zeidman. "Sakio was top-mount with a trio of acrobats in Tokio for over twenty years. No other training would stand the strain."

Interesting—if True.

There is one fact connected with the scene just described that will not meet the approval of a portion of the Fairbanks admirers—it never happened. No one will deny that it would have been included in Chaplin's film. Yet it would not have been surprising if any Fairbanks fan had anticipated such a method of calisthenics, judging from many of the star's hits before the camera. Truth also obliges the prosaic statement that the number of scribes at the interview was limited to one. Also that Douglas Fairbanks was engaged in a business discussion with his brother, John Fairbanks, and that the actor sat quietly in a chair throughout the interview and talked soberly of the serious side of the screen.

Like all persons who have any real understanding of the art of the silent stage the man whose reputation has been built up by his ability to do "stunts" believes that the moving picture has a marvelous future, but that it has progressed but a short way toward ultimate classification of form and perfection in producing its several modes of activity. Whether the news reel as a rival to the daily press, the educational feature or screen fiction in its different forms eventually will take the lead he does not pretend to say, but he is very positive that all three will make great strides forward during the years to come.

To the question, "What producer has shown the most originality and freedom from the conventions of the stage?" came this unconventional answer:

"Charlie Chaplin."

Paying to note the effect of his reply and to smile the famous Fairbanks smile, the champion of the creator of "Shoulde Arms" proceeded to state the reasons for his belief:

"I consider Charlie Chaplin to be far in advance of every other producer of the moving picture. He has several effects, so clean cut and drives so straight to the point to be made! Now that he is his own producer and relies solely on his own inventive powers and skill, he is giving the screen a series of comedies that are thought out and executed with an originality and grace of the artistic that put him in a class by himself. The article by him in one of the November magazines shows the thought and care he gives to everything he does, and what serious business making people laugh really is."

The Interviewer's Views.

"Chaplin's method of acting recalls, I think, that of the American comedian, John Sleeper Clarke, whose professional career was confined almost exclusively to London and the English stage. Chaplin never saw him act; the American died about thirty years ago. But Clarke, who was famous as Bob Acres, Dr. Pangloss, and in a line of similar parts, made his points by the same thorough mental preparation and strict attention to artistic concentration that is used by the screen actor. And now about your own affairs, Mr. Fairbanks. How is 'Arizona' progressing?"

"All right, as far as we've gone. You know, I stopped work on it to come East and help on the Fourth Liberty Loan and make some propaganda pictures for the Government. One of the things that Uncle Sam is preparing for his soldiers is emotional training. To that end pictures are being made that will keep before the boys who are doing the fighting the ideals for which they are asked to risk their lives. I am at work on a picture now that will have a powerful appeal to their emotions. It is symbolic, and several historical characters are introduced. There is a scene in the trenches, and the figure of Christ appears as the men go over the top."

Remaking "Arizona."

"Do you find remaking a picture a difficult task?"

"It is certainly not an easy one, the way we are doing it. 'Arizona' was a fine stage play, of course, but the first screen version stuck too close to the original form. We are trying to profit..."
VETERAN WILLIAM SHEA IS DEAD

WILLIAM SHEA died suddenly on Tuesday morning, November 3, at his home, 349 Lafayette avenue, Brooklyn. He is survived by two sisters, three nephews and three nieces. The funeral was held at 9 o'clock Saturday morning at St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church, and interment was made at Holy Cross Cemetery. Many friends in the profession attended the obsequies.

William Shea, better known to his companions as "Bill," was one of the veterans among picture players. He made his first appearance before the camera some thirteen years ago with the Vitagraph Company, and was one of that company's oldest players. His recollections of the early days were full of humorous incidents that were the kernel of many interesting stories of the beginnings of screen drama. He was the leading comedian of the Vitagraph Company, and as such was a strong favorite with motion picture fans throughout the world.

Before going into pictures, Mr. Shea was a legitimate actor of wide experience, appearing in company with such artists as Edwin Booth, Joe Jefferson, Lawrence Barrett, Maggie Mitchell, Clara Morris, the elder Salvini, J. K. Emmett and with many notable traveling combinations of his time.

By reason of a delightful disposition, Bill Shea made many friends among his associates, and his sudden death will be widely and genuinely mourned.

Stop Work on Big Theatre.

A Government order, just transmitted to the city authorities by the War Industries Board, instantly halts all work on theatres in the building where structural stages have not been passed. Only those theatres which are virtually completed, requiring only material for finishing, will an exception be made. In such instances permits must be secured from the mayor's Committee on National Defense before the necessary material may be purchased and hauled to the building site. But one important structure in progress of construction in New York will be halted.

This is the B. S. Moss house, which is going up on Broadway at 81st street. Inasmuch as this building has not progressed to the stage where it may be said that it is ready for the finishing phase, work will be abruptly halted.

"WILLIE" NOW A LIEUTENANT

RECOVERING FROM WOUNDS

EMBERS of the film industry who know William J. Moore, of the former 9th Regiment—and who doesn't know "Willy"—who since the days of 1907 has been identified with the motion picture business, having been employed successively by the Atlas, Exclusive Supply, All-Star, Italia, Harmony and United companies, read with interest the account in the April 6 issue of the Moving Picture World of his having received the French Cross of War for bravery under heavy bombardment. They will now be pleased to hear that he has recently been commissioned a second lieutenant and is continuing to show enviable record with our fighting forces in France.

This information was contained in a letter just received by Harry Raver from Lieutenant Moore, and which Mr. Raver has kindly permitted us to publish for the benefit of our readers:

October 7, 1918.

My Dear Mr. Raver:

At the present time I am sitting up in bed in a base hospital recovering very swiftly from a machine gun bullet wound received in the recent Verdun campaign. The extent of its course penetrated my right lung which at first gave me much trouble, but through my breathing a great deal. However, I am pleased to inform you that the wound is mending very nicely, many thanks to the splendid treatment and care which I am receiving at the hospital. There are forty wounded men, Mr. Raver. Nothing is too much for them to do for you. Just like a mother, and I can assure you it is more than appreciated. The folks back home haven't the slightest conception of the great work those doctors and nurses are doing for our boys in the base hospitals.

If you were only present at the starting of the bombardment that paved the way for us I know you would have been able to get a wonderful story out of the effects, for it seemed as if the skies had opened up and begun to spit forth fire. The scene was one which I never witnessed and am quite confident that if put into scenario form it would be the biggest√breast in the history of the world which I have ever seen. It was the greatest attack of the entire war. The immediate results were our loss, placing the greatest confidence in them. They were sure on edge waiting for our hour to arrive. Assuring you that when the time did arrive they were all on the go, and as you have no doubt read, many, many rounds of thousands of men and demoralization of our entire lines, placing the greatest confidence in them. They were sure on edge waiting for our hour to arrive. Assuring you that when the time did arrive they were all on the go, and as you have no doubt read, many, many rounds of thousands of men and demoralization of our entire lines, placing the greatest confidence in them. They were sure on edge waiting for our hour to arrive. Assuring you that when the time did arrive they were all on the go, and as you have no doubt read, many, many rounds of thousands of men and demoralization of our entire lines, placing the greatest confidence in them.

The second day out finished my episode when I was forced to put the gas mask on and to order the German gunners to surrender en masse.

The enemy was in the position of being out of the country and artillery fire just as we were taking our second village. However, our tanks came to the aid and it wasn't long before we silenced them and went through the village. I have been commissioned since July 9 and am putting in the Ohio boys, if you please, to the Ohio boys. Before going into the drive took an examination for the Ohio boys. I am sure that my corps, which I expect is back at the company by this time, takes control of the business to go through the military channels.

When the twenty-fifth of this month arrives it will be a year since I set foot in France. During that time I have traveled the best part of France, which I have enjoyed very much. I believe the old scenes of France are afar that are picturesque. Yes, Mr. Raver, I can assure you that the Rhone and Seine and all the rest are very "over here." They are surely hospitable to our chaps, a mighty fine race. You will most likely be very much surprised to know that if you have a few spare minutes drop me a line, I will be pleased to hear from you.

WILLIE.
ADVISORY BOARD FOR FILMS DIVISION

Director Hart Calls to His Aid Many of the Country's Prominent Motion Picture Showmen

THE organization of an exhibitors' advisory board, to co-operate with the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, is an assured fact. A meeting of the board by Director Charles S. Hart comes from all parts of the United States.

The purpose of the exhibitors' advisory board, as outlined by Director Hart, is to take up matters in which the exhibitors are especially interested and work out a system of distribution that will be to the interest of all.

"Since entering the work," says Director Hart in his letter to the exhibitors, "it has been my feeling that the exhibitor is the most important element in the film industry, and, as such, should have a voice in all questions of policy and taxation which arise relative to the industry. From time to time, problems arise which touch essentially exhibitor problems, and in forming this advisory board it was also my purpose to get the advice and assistance of the leading members of the matter of adjusting the distribution of official pictures through the Division of Films."

Those whose acceptances have been received are: D. Cooley, Tampa, Fla.; Louis H. Frank, Chicago; Willard C. Patterson, Atlanta; Ernest H. Horstmann, Boston; Alfred S. Black, Rockland, Maine; Mike Shea, Buffalo; Peter J. Schaefler, Chicago; Charles Weigel, Cincinnati; Henry H. Lustig, Cleveland; E. M. Mandelbaum, Cleveland; E. H. Hebbel, Philadelphia; Charles H. Seaman, Grand Rapids; Frank Rembusch, Shelbyville, Ind.; F. L. Newman, Kansas City; Glenn Harper, Los Angeles; George Tally, Los Angeles; Charles H. Branham, Minneapolis; Theo L. Hayes, St. Paul; Josiah Pearce, New Orleans; E. R. Richards, Muncie, Ind.; Ed. New York City; H. R. Thomas, Omaha; Lawrence D. Beggs, Philadelphia; Mike Comerford, Scranton, Pa.; John D. Kelpman, Kansas City; John D. Davis, Pittsburgh; Jean H. Roth, San Francisco; Sidney Grauman, Los Angeles; Charles E. Petjohn, New Orleans; Alfred T. Tanze, Milwaukee; Sydney S. Cohen, New York City; J. Von Herberg, Seattle; H. B. Varner, Lexington, N. C.; Harry M. Grandid, Washington, D. C.; Jake Wells, Richmond, Va.; G. C. Gildersleeve, Kingston, N. Y.; George J. Schade, Sandusky, Ohio; C. E. Geoghegan, Chickasha, Okla.; Va. S. Barrone, McComb, Indiana; Henry F. Har- ing, Brooklyn; Thomas Saxe, Minneapolis; A. L. Stalling, Salt Lake City; John E. Weinig, Cincinnati; John Man- nell, New York City; Joseph Grossman, Cleveland; Thomas Saxe, Milwaukee; Samuel I. Berman, Brooklyn; Christopher Kell, Philadelphia; William Reaver, St. Louis; Hector M. E. Pasmezoglou, St. Louis; Thomas Furniss, Duluth.

British Naval Photographs.

An exhibition of British naval photographs is about to be opened at the Photographic Division, British Bureau of Information, opened at the Anderson Galleries, New York, November 6. The net proceeds will be for the benefit of Navy Auxiliary No. 205, American Red Cross. These pictures are not only of the battleships, but are enlarged photographs which depict every phase of naval warfare, the collection forming a valuable record of the war to date.

The exhibition comes directly from the Prince's Gallery, London, where it was attended by over a quarter of a million people in a few weeks.

Association's Directors to Hold Important Session

THE regular quarterly meeting of the board of directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will be held at the rooms of the Association, 806 Times Building, at 11 o'clock, Thursday morning, November 14.

Numerous important matters are on the calendar for action at this meeting. It is expected the Washington situation will be carefully gone over in every detail, especially the recent action of the Senate Finance Committee in amending the War Revenue Tax bill.

Another important matter that is to come before the association is the organization of the Exhibitors' Branch of the National Association. At the convention of the American Exhibitors' Association in Chicago it was decided the two national exhibitor organizations should merge into one body to be called the Exhibitor's Branch of the National Association. Since then nothing has been done pending the arrival of Peter J. Schaefer, the president of the merged organization, in New York.

It is also probable the board will appoint a delegation of its members to attend the annual meeting and convention of the United States Chamber of Commerce, at which the association is a member, to be held at Atlantic City, December 4, 5 and 6. This is a very important convention, as the question of world trade after the war will be discussed in all its details. The part the motion picture will play in the reconstruction period after the war is naturally very large, and it is expected the delegation will take an active part in the deliberations of the convention.

Another subject that will be brought up for discussion will be the question of inaugurating a campaign for Sunday opening of motion picture theatres throughout the United States. Preliminary plans for this campaign are now in the course of preparation, and it merely requires the action of the board of directors to put them into effect.

This will be one of the most important meetings of the board that has been held in considerable time, and the attendance of every member is urgently requested.

Winnipeg Exchange Faces Drastic Fire Legislation

MOVING picture men of Winnipeg, Manitoba, were having plenty of excitement during the health vacation imposed by the local authorities through the action of the Fire, Water and Light Committee in revising drastic legislation governing the operation of a film exchange.

The Winnipeg fire chief and building inspector must examine every film exchange at least once every two months.

Examinations and repairs of films must be made on a regular basis, with a certificate of examination by the inspector must be kept in the possession of the owner of the building with tight partition walls of non-combustible material.

Reels containing films under examination must be enclosed in magazines or approved metal containers or other safe enclosures.

Lighting arrangements are to be restricted to incandescent electric bulbs with vapor-proof globes.

One fire bucket filled with sand is to be provided for every 500 feet of floor space or fraction thereof.

Smoking is to be prohibited in every room containing films.

"We must get film exchanges out of dangerous buildings," declared Fire Chief Buchanan, in discussing the pressures of the committee. The draft of the by-law was sent on to the city's legal department, after which it will be prepared and finally recommended to the city council. It may be ready for the city council by November 11.

In the meantime the managers of Winnipeg film exchanges threaten to close up shop permanently and to withdraw from the Winnipeg field.

Set Release Date for U. S. A. Series

The World Film Corporation, which is to distribute the new "U. S. A. Series," which will comprise twelve two-reel pictures, to be produced by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, has notified its exchanges that the first picture, "When Your Country Needs You," which visualizes the work of the field hospitals in a new and interesting way, will not be released until December 25. The original date for release was November 9, but delays, largely caused by the prevalence of the influenza and the necessary rearrangement of bookings, made it advisable to push back the opening.

The other pictures of the series will follow regularly, two each month.

An Opened Letter to One Film Magnate Who Tried
To Double in Celluloid

LAST night in a folklore moment I attended a showing of "Virginia City," and enjoyed the music and the Pathe News very much, and then there suddenly flashed through my mind the undiscovered alones of the vast multitude a supposed scenic of the Yosemite Valley with Marion H. Kohn and John Steiner. The film was played by two mules.

To say that I was surprised at first, disappointed at second and disgusted at third and cut out the edge of Glacier Point and you had on your Los Angeles clothes while you were supposed to be showing comedy with your hat and umbrella, unbeknown to yourself your trousers were displaying real comedy by crawling up your limbs and bestowing upon you unsuspecting public Phoenix silk hosery at 75 cents per pair, Boston garters, non-silv, at 25 cents per pair, and fuzz enough upon your shirt to make you resemble a Newfoundland dog.

I knew that you were not a Tom Mix and that you were sore and getting sorer from riding that you were not used to. I also knew that the other two asses were also sore from the loads that they were carrying.

Your comedy with a frying pan at the camera is all right; but when it is sexual it is natural and showed that you had never tried to cook before, and when you appeared in your role of the little boy in the next morning sub-title said that you were to take a bath in the pool that was running close by your tent, it was a lie, because it was only Tuesday.

The next time I saw you you were sitting in the cold wind wondering to catch the two mules, that had decided like the rest of us that they had had enough and were going back to their homes. It must have been a hot day, because about every five hundred feet you took off some garment until finally you were almost naked, and then as the sweat began to pour from your body and run down your legs I knew damn well that you had not had a bath, because sweat left long streaks between the dirt which they traversed.

Mr. Roth is my friend, but I shall ask him to make you see on him that he would be so mean to his public by running it. Also I shall try and ascertain whether he pays for it or you build for it. Then I will curse him for presenting me with an annual pass to his house and not announcing in your papers that you were going to catch the two mules.

I was requested to say that your pictures were not so bad as your letters.

World Pictures Announces List of December Issues

WORLD PICTURES has a notable galaxy of stars to present to the public in its releases scheduled for December. Included in the list are: Blackwell, Evelyn Greeley, Lewis S. Stone, Barbara Castleton, Madge Evans and June Elvidge. All established stars—head the list of those appearing in World Pictures during the coming month.

Carleton, Miss Mathilda and Evelyn Greeley in a story of love and redemption on the east side of New York come first on the list of the month's releases. Their picture bears the title of "Hitting the Trail," and it will be released on December 2. It is slow the leading man picture with stars sexy and Muriel Ostrieche, George MacQuarrie, Edward Bikas and others.

Second on the month's program comes Lewis S. Stone, who achieved such a hit in his other World Picture, "Inside the Lines." Mr. Stone's new picture is a different sort of a Western play and bears the title of "The Man of Bronze." Supporting Mr. Stone in this picture is Myron Dell and Clayton. The picture is released December 9. The story was written by Karl K. Coolidge. The picture was directed by David M. Hartford.

June Elvidge in "The Zero Hour" comes on December 16. This is said to be one of the most unusual stories ever filmed and added interest is given to its presentation by the fact that it was penned by Paul West, shortly before this famous writer met his death in the Seine River in Paris. Supporting Miss Elvidge are Frank Mayo and a supergal company. Hamilton Smith and Harry O. Hoyt wrote the continuity. It was directed by Travers Vale.

The unanimous verdict of all those who have seen "The Love Net," the picture in which Madge Evans stars, and which will be released on December 23, is that it is a fitting successor to her great success, "The Little Volunteuer," which firmly established her as a motion picture star. The story of "The Love Net" is complete with human emotion and should appeal to all ages. Jack Drummer is featured with Madge in this production. The story was written by Bertha A. Backus, continuity by Charles Beranger, and the direction is by Teft Johnson. Kate Lester, W. T. Carleton, Nora Cecil and Charles Alecott are in the cast.

Last on the month's program is "The Sea Wolf," starring Louise Huff with John Bowers as leading man. This picture will be released on December 30. The story was written by Lieut. Howard Irving Young of the American Expeditionary Force, during his rest periods while serving his country in France. The continuity is by Hamilton Smith and Harry O. Hoyt. Frank Reicher directed the picture.

Rainbow Reaches Fifth Release.

With a new subject every other week, the Rainbow Comedies, made at the United States Motion Picture Corporation's studios in Wilkes-Barre, have now reached their fifth release as a General Film offer. Included in this current Rainbow picture is "The Camouflaged Baby," and the favorites of this series. Lillian Vera and Eddie Boul- den, are in the leading roles.

Production of Rainbow Comedies is well ahead of schedule, since the next November subject and the first December subject are ready and only await the date of release.

Reports to General Film Company indicate that the sparkling nature of the Rainbow single-reeler already distributed makes them acceptable to exhibitors. The titles are "Nearly a Slackers," "Some Judge," "My Lady's Slipper" and "How She Hated Men."

Fox Productions Saved Situation for Showmen

During the no-release period, reports show, the William Fox Big Timely Pictures and the Productions extraordinary have proved life-savers to those exhibitors unable to get pictures of an importance worthy of their patronage. The Big Timely Pictures available for exhibitors during the no-release period are "The Prussian Czar," R. A. Walsh's great play, which has proved one of the most successful box-office attractions of the season; "Why America Will Win," the stirring photobiography of General Pershing, and "Queen of the Sea," which, starring Annette Kellerman, has scored a sensational success all over the country.

Many theatres also have been able to tide themselves over the no-release period by showing "Cleopatra," "Les Miserables" or "A Daughter of the Gods." This last named production, starring Annette Kellerman, has enabled numerous exhibitors to capitalize the public interest created by the other Kellerman picture, "Queen of the Sea." A large number of theatres which showed "Queen of the Sea" found that by showing "A Daughter of the Gods" soon after they were able to attract all those who for any reason had been unable to see "Queen of the Sea."

During the no-release period, reports to the Fox offices show, exhibitors have found themselves facing this difficulty: They have been unable to get the regular releases of big pictures, while at the same time only the best pictures made could persuade their patrons to brave the influenza dangers that lay in crowds. "The Prussian Czar," "Why America Will Win" and "Queen of the Sea" apparently were known to the public all over the country, because wherever exhibitors booked these pictures during the influenza days they played to capacity houses.

Unwarlike Views of France.

Incidental to D. W. Griffiths new photoplay, "The Greatest Thing in Life," are some wonderfully beautiful pictures of France and French life. Much of this picture was filmed on the other side when Mr. Griffith went to the front line trenches by special permission of the British and French war offices. Most of the battle scenes are real and were taken during actual engagements with great beching howitzers and field pieces.

Among the most interesting of the "real pictures" in the play are the bits of quiet French life—as calm and serene and peaceful as though war had never been invented. Some of these scenes are more like beautiful paintings than photographs. There is one scene looking down the historic River Marne.

Brunet Praises Artistry of Mercanton in "Infatuation"

PAUL BRUNET, vice-president and general manager of Pathé Exchange, Inc., feels confident that Louis Mercanton, who directed the special feature, "Infatuation," starring Gaby Deslys, has reached a rare height of artistic achievement in presenting this picture, produced by the Eclipse Film Company, of which he is the director-in-chief.

"Mr. Mercanton's experience with both stage and screen productions and his personal artistic equipment, suggests Mr. Brunet, "are all used to fine advantage in this production, which combines the deft aesthetic, and social touches of French with the finest of modern American direction, for Mr. Mercanton's experience embraces both sides of the Atlantic. His screen work is favorably known to American exhibitors and audiences through 'Her Triumph,' featuring Gaby Deslys and 'Mothers of France,'" interpreted by Sarah Bernhardt.

It is well to remember that Mr. Mercanton was one of the first recruits from the theatre to the motion picture, years ago, when he persuaded Madame Bernhardt to appear on the screen in 'Queen Elizabeth.' He had been the stage director of the great French artist in France and served in the same capacity for Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree at His Majesty's Theatre, London. He is a pioneer in big screen productions, backed by an exhaustive and complete knowledge of stage technique.

The advertising material includes posters, one sheet, two three sheets, six and twenty-four sheet; portrait slide in colors, two and single column cuts, line cuts, one sheet, one column portrait cuts, Gaby Deslys, and one two column cut of the star; sets of twelve black and white photographs of star and scenes, 2x3 sepia of star, lobby display in sepia, three styles of large hand-colored portraits for lobby use.

The campaign book of "Infatuation" will have a beautiful cover design in three colors, the portrait of Gaby Deslys in the twenty-four sheet being reproduced.

William Farnum Hero In Automobile Wreck

Many times in his photoplays William Farnum has been called upon to perform great feats of strength. In "Les Misérables," as Jean Valjean, he lifted a carriage from the body of an old man, and raised a huge stone. In "Riders of the Purple Sage," which he filmed from the novel by Zane Grey, the famous William Fox star pushes a gigantic boulder over the edge of the cliff. In each case the task was so difficult that only a man of Mr. Farnum's great strength could do it.

Last week Mr. Farnum again was called upon to exert his strength—but this time it was in real life, with no cameras around. While coming from a location at Fort Schuyler, N. Y., where some scenes were to be filmed for Mr. Farnum's latest production, an automobile containing seven men was overturned while taking a sharp curve, burying its occupants beneath it. Mr. Farnum, who was following in another car, reached the spot a moment later and ran to the rescue of the men pinned beneath the machine. He put his shoulder to the wrecked car and with great effort slowly lifted it, enabling some of the men to wriggle out to safety. By this time Director Frank Lloyd and Cameraman Billy Foster had arrived, and adding their strength to that of Mr. Farnum, soon had the machine righted.

Expert Praises Settings for Fox's "Ali Baba and Thieves"

THE day when a motion picture director could assemble a few heavy pieces of furniture, hang some draperies around the walls and let his imagination take over is past. "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves" is a combination called posters, magnificent scenery and magnificent settings, but not a story. It is about the fabrication of a story, and if the fabricators have succeeded in making "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves" in the course of making "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves" will be a production of unusual beauty and magnificence. Professor Delaroche's letter reads:

"I wish to thank you for an exceedingly interesting afternoon which I had as a result of a visit by me to the Fox Film Corporation this week. Professor J. E. Delaroche, of Harvard University, who is probably the foremost authority in this country on Persian literature and Persian customs, set forth the story of the famous story of the Arabian Nights, and is said to have set down the story of the story on paper.

"The story is a remarkable one, and I am sure that Professor Delaroche's letter will be of interest to you."

Loew Books Lowry Film for 70 Days in New York

RA M. LOWRY'S great patriotic screen spectacular "For the Freedom of the East," a drama of the defeat and rout of the Hun in Siberia, featuring the Chinese star, Lady Tseng, has been given seventy days' booking on the entire Marcus Loew metropolitan circuit, comprising New York City and nearby communities.

"For the Freedom of the East," regarded as a striking testimonial to the wide appeal of this subject, was produced and are rated by the Loew experts as strong enough to warrant such blanket booking. A contract for immediate playing dates was signed because, to quote the Loew bookers, "For the Freedom of the East" is one of the best pictures ever made for the average American.

The production was booked at sight. After the Spanish influenza shutdown interrupted a record-breaking pre-release showing at the Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia, where thousands were turned away, the show was given in the days the subject was shown. During the month of no releases twenty Goldwyn productions in the United States have proved by bookings that this offering is to be one of the big money-makers of the Winter and Spring seasons. Goldwyn believes it is not too much to predict for it a success equal to that of "For the Freedom of the World," another Lowry production which has broken box-office records wherever shown.

"Common Cause" Will Be Released on Big Scale

FROM the offices of the Vitagraph Company comes the announcement that plans are maturing for the handling of "The Common Cause" on a big scale. The common cause has had a fine variety of posters, including one twenty-four sheet, one six-sheet, two three-sheets, two one-sheets and a window card. In addition there will be available for exhibitors a special herald, 5½ inches wide by 8½ inches long, six styles of star cuts, two slides, portraits of newspaper ads, numerous scene cards and special publicity campaign material. The publicity and advertising helps will be up to the high standard set by the company.

"The Common Cause" should prove one of the big offerings of the year. It is described as "the war story with a laugh, a thrill and a throb," and its theme is such that the picture not only is one of great timeliness now, but it will endure even after hostilities have ceased.

In point of talent the production has behind it a combination richly endowed. Its producer, directors, stars and supporting cast are among the best.

Commodore Blackton has behind him a record of splendid work done while he was with Vitagraph, while the authors of the play—J. Hartley Manners and Major Ian Hay Bell—were recognized as among the leaders of the present day writers. Anthony Paul Kelly, who wrote the scenario, is a man with many screen successes to his credit.

Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Bremer, the two featured players, have both won wide followings among screen patrons, and in addition to them there appear in the main story of the picture Lawrence Grossmith, Louis Dean, Charles and Violet Blackton, children of Commodore Blackton; Huntley Gordon, Philip Van Lorr and Mlle, Marcel. Added interest is given to the production by the appearance in the prologue and epilogue of such famous stage artists as Julia Arthur, Marjorie Rambeau, Irene Castle, Effie Shannon and Violet Heming.

Pathe Shows Air Men's Work

The miracle of the air, one of the amazing prodigies brought about by the great war, is shown in No. 12 of "The Far Flung Battle Line," released by Pathe the week of November 17. Here is described the armored doughtiness that made the British and the Americans sure of the day when birds will fly into the sky. This collection of official pictures is called "British Flying Ships," and indicates how the training of naval air men, as shown in previous pictures, is in preparation for the perilous and hazardous work.

The evolution of the seaplane is shown and discussed. The news from London are here seen in actual work: The Sopwith, the Sunbeam Short, the Short and Minor, the Bristol and the Nord and many seaplanes called "flying boats." In this number also there is a magnificent postcard, a view of the Bristol Channel and an English coast town.
Two Nazimova Productions Are Ready for Release

Two great Nazimova productions de luxe, super-features, prepared in seven acts each, will be ready for release by the following picture theatres throughout the country: the actual release of "Eye for Eye" and "Caption Shooni," which is a typical example of an entirely different type of Nazimova in "Eye for an Eye." character. They will be presented by Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger, both productions having been directed by Albert Capellani.

"Eye for Eye" will be the first Nazimova production released. It bids fair to eclipse anything previously achieved by this star, not even excepting her successful "Revelation." "Eye for Eye" is a picturized version made by Mr. Capellani and June Maitlis from the three-act drama "L'Ocident," by the Belgian playwright, Henry Kestenauer, and tells the story of Hassouna, a girl of the Arabian desert. The difference in the ideals of the Orient and the Occident is shown in "Eye for Eye.

This vitally dramatic feature illustrates the law of the desert, "An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth," and in contradiction to it the code of Captain de Cadiere, French gentleman and naval officer, who seeks to uphold honor and the flag of France.

In "Caption Shooni" the scene is changed from the eastern to the western hemisphere, and its heroine, Eve, is as different as possible from Hassouna. "Caption Shooni" was used by Mme. Nazimova on the speaking stage, and as picturized by June Mathis and Albert Capellani it promises to be even stronger than it was in play form. "Caption Shooni" is a drama of the sea and the New England coast. It is elemental and irresistible in its appeal.

"Caption Shooni" is a mighty drama of human souls, and the lessons it drives home are unforgettable. Charles Bryant plays Captain Blake, who awakens love in the heart of the unsuspecting girl; Henry Harmon plays Job Coffin, the same part in which he appeared with the star in her stage production, and other roles are in capable hands. "Caption Shooni" was originally written in play form by H. Austin Adams.

Big Reports from "Shoulder Arms.

With an extension by the Broadway Theatre, New York, of its original booking of one week to a three-weeks' run on "Shoulder Arms," and increases by the big vaudeville houses of the B. F. Keith Circuit of from three days to a week on Chaplin's second million dollar comedy, the fame of "Shoulder Arms" is nothing less than a success, if it is not his best," is proving its value in the unusual indorsement of the public and the critics.

Reports on early runs of "Shoulder Arms" from practically all of the exchanges of the first National Exhibitors' Circuit indicate that it will play to a total of more days than any other Chaplin production.

Assassination of Count Tisz

Hooked Up With "Kultur"

The assassination last week of Count Tisz, formerly Premier of Austria-Hungary, credited with having been one of the men who brought on the great war, is another startling example of the close adherence to facts which prevails in "Kultur," the play which Gladys Brover well made as an expose of Austro-German intrigue prior to hostilities.

Scene in "Kultur," which lay bare all the secret plotting carried on by Germany and Austria to bring on the war, show Tisz as one of the arch conspirators, leading Serbia to commit some act which the Teuton powers could construe as a cause for war. This part of the story of "Kultur," which is one of the ring-leaders of the plot, was corroborated in greatest detail in the Vienna despatches which followed the assassination of New York City's premier in the streets by a Hungarian soldier. These despatches reviewed his activities at the beginning of the war and showed once more the close fidelity to little known facts which is seen in "Kultur."

In calling attention to this the Fox Film Corporation points out that with the conclusion of the first reel of the Trueman released the war will come to the fore, for it is generally conceded that the Allies will be forced to open offensive action upon the Teuton leaders which plunged the world into more than four years of bloodshed. There is bound to be tremendous public interest in this phase of the peace discussions, and "Kultur" is believed by the William Fox organization to afford a splendid opportunity for exhibitors to capitalize this public interest.

Eighteen Metro Subjects

Are Ready for Exhibitors

Eighteen Metro productions distributed by Metro, comprising twelve of the All-Star Series features and six Screen Classics, Inc., super-features, will be ready for exhibitors throughout the country at the close of the four-weeks' cessation of the industry's activities decreed by the National Association. President Richard A. Rowland, Metro's executive, points to the statement that never before has the corporation been in such an advantageous position to launch large-scale motion picture theatres and their patrons.

November 18 has been decided upon as the date the "Run of Pictures" will be resumed throughout the United States. Metro's first contribution under this arrangement is a dramatized starring Emmy Wehlin entitled "His Bonded Wife."

"When The Kaiser?" the great Screen Classics super-feature written by Maxwell Karger and directed by Charles Miller from A. Owen's story, will be offered to exhibitors at an early date.

Hale Hamilton's initial Metro starring vehicle, "His Majesty, William," will be released November 25. Hale Hamilton is by no means a new name to patrons or exhibitors of the leading dramas, starring Emmy Wehlin.

December 2 is the date announced for May Allison's next feature, "The Testing of Mildred Vane." Charles T. Dazey, author of "In Old Kentucky," wrote the story. "Hitting the High Spots," which will be released December 4, is the title chosen for Bert Lytell's next feature, written by himself and adapted by George D. Baker. Directed by Henry King.

Next in the list of All-Star Classics releases is "Sylvia on a Spree," an Emmy Wehlin feature, which will be seen for the first time December 16. It is probably the most naive and unusual feature picture drama in which Miss Wehlin has appeared.

"The Poor Rich Man" will be released December 23. France and Beverly Bayne are the co-stars in this attractive feature, which was written by Hume B. Ray and Gary Cooper, directed by Charles J. Brabin and his.

The final regular release of the year will be "Her Brother's Keeper," starring May Allison, December 30 being the date set for it. This five-act feature was written by George D. Baker and Thomas J. Geraghty, and directed by Robert Thornton. Many other productions besides those for which the release dates have been announced will be ready and waiting for distribution as soon as the theatres are in a position to handle them.

General Film to Release

Subject Starring Edna Mayo

THOMAS BEDDING is now general sales manager of the American Feature Film Corporation, with offices at Suite 616, Candler Building, 220 West Forty-seventh Street, New York. The American Feature Film Corporation is producing "Hearts of Love," produced by the company, is going on the General Film program for the year. The foreign sales are handled by Mr. Bedding.

Edna Mayo is the star of the production. Miss Mayo was identified with a long string of Essanay successes and has never been more popular than her recent appearance in the limelight of popular favoritism. Gladden James, Frederick Rowland, and Fred Hearn are also in the cast of the picture, which was directed by J. Charles Hayden.

"Hearts of Love" was made in the South. Many long and large sums of money were devoted to its preparation. It is essentially American in theme and acting.

"In recent times," declares Mr. Bedding, "there has been a tendency to overlook the fact that American drama is popular with audiences all over the world. We have been so obsessed by the war that the screen has not had our ideas on this matter and American productions have become influenced by the conditions so created. 'Hearts of Love' is like the beginning of a new epoch in picture production. It is all American; it deals only with the United States, its history, drama and problems.

"It is a complete picture and a complete production. There are no clippings from weeklies included. It is complete. Everything about it is thorough, genuine, artistic, authentic.

"The release of circumstances, due to the recent shutdown, make 'Hearts of Love' among the few great independent releases available for foreign sales in States and Canada.

"It is one of the best pictures I have handled."

Topics of the Day Moves Offices

A. E. Siegel, head of the Timely Films, Topics of the Day Company, announces the move of his office from the Times Bldg., to suite 716 Longacre Bldg.

It is said that a tremendous publicity campaign will be started in two weeks. The company's activities throughout the United States and Canada was to be launched a week or ten days after the outbreak of the Allies' strike, which was raging in New York recently, have held up this campaign temporarily.

Rex Beach Exercises Author's New Prerogative

THE individuality of Rex Beach is as marked in his photoplay productions as it is in his novels. The reason for this is multifarious, and it is because the popular American author does not merely arrange to have pictured one of his works and then leave it to somebody else.

Rex Beach, on the contrary, supervises every detail of his cinematic productions. His vigor and breadth of outlook are apparent on the screen as on the page. Unfortunately, he is not always true in regard to his newest play, "To Fat to Fight," with Frank McIntyre as the leading man.

When it was arranged to produce this unpublished story of Mr. Beach's at the Goldwyn studios, the author set about to do precisely what he had done to make "The Fighting 69th"—to solve his problem of casting.

Beginning with the scenario, which he wrote himself, the entire production came under Mr. Beach's watchful eye. Hundreds of applicants were interviewed before Mr. Beach assembled his cast. It is well known that he demands more of his players than many of them can give in pictorial fidelity to their prototypes in the book. Accordingly, when an actor is personally approved by Mr. Beach, it is a safe bet that he is the living counterpart of the character created in the novel or short story.

All the locations were chosen first by an experienced man at the Goldwyn studios, but since Mr. Beach was "through the Dark," the Maud Radford Warren story of the war in which Clara Kimball Young is starred, and Alla Nazimova is the distinguished author, and through Thomas G. Patten, postmaster of New York, the location field at Belmont Park was requisitioned by Rex Beach for important scenes in "To Fat to Fight."

When the production was completed, Mr. Beach's work was not by any means at an end. There were a score of titles to devise, some of them to bring out a point developed in the action; others to reflect the spirit of the patriotic comedy, and some to give an amusing twist to the dialogue supposed to have been spoken by the author himself—lights in doing, feeling that the silent drama is affording him actual expression of his convictions as he goes along. He is practically the only author who enjoys this advantage.

Jazz Makes Committee on Public Morals Dance

THAT music hath charms even for a committee on morals bent on saving its townpeople from tangling themselves to peddlers is combically brought out in Madge Kennedy's latest Goldwyn picture, "A Perfect Lady," from the novel by G. B. Evans, starring Pollock and Renold Wolf, to be released December 8.

When the producers learned that Lucille Le Jambon, prima donna and premier danseuse of the Merry Models Burlesqueas, whose opening performance in Sycamore the constable has stopped at the command of Deacon John Griswold and other members of the town's purity league. Resolved to stay in Sycamore, Lucille quits her stage career and opens an ice cream cabaret, where she teaches the tango and other modern steps. Again she meets with opposition from the self-appointed purifiers. They warn her that "she may be tarred and feathered, and rode out o' town on a rail." Lucille defies them, and the committee calls on her to give her final warning. Music and dancing ceases with the arrival of the goody-goodies. They state their case to Lucille in no uncertain terms, but Lucille, firm in the belief that her dancing lessons are harming no one, orders the orchestra to play.

For a time few of the couples brave the committee's anger, but the ragtime tune the orchestra is playing proves too alluring, and soon the floor is as crowded as when the committee made its appearance. With the dancing resumed in full blast, do the committee members fume and fuss? Not much! They begin to sway to the lith of the dance-inspiring tune, and the deacon is shocked beyond words when two of his committee forget their mission and join the others on the dancing floor.

Select to Release Two Subjects in November

SELECT announces two new pictures for the month of November. These will be "Bill Hyde," a sequel of titles to devise, some of them to bring out a point developed in the action; others to reflect the spirit of the patriotic comedy, and some to give an amusing twist to the dialogue supposed to have been spoken by the author himself—lights in doing, feeling that the silent drama is affording him actual expression of his convictions as he goes along. He is practically the only author who enjoys this advantage.

Ten-Dollar Bills on Fifth Avenue During Great Jubilee

HUNDREDS of thousands of persons went victory mad and money mad in the premature peace celebration in New York on Thursday, November 7. Then again they went "plush loco" Monday, November 11, over the real thing. As the crowds of wildly excited patriots swarmed up and down Fifth avenue changing tin pans, ringing bells, blowing horns, yelling, cheering and exchanging embraces there was sudden commotion near Forty-second street that made the rest of the celebration look like a country village fair.

The police reserves were called into action; everybody rushed to the spot, and all the shriveling avenue to get a share of the ten-dollar bills that were raining down from the heavens. One smartly dressed young man shouted: "John D. Rockefeller is giving away money—J. P. Morgan took a wad of greenbacks and let 'em fall, less as fall can everybody this way! A chance of a lifetime to get rich quick!"

But alas! When the excited persons bucked each other in picking up the greenbacks, a quick analysis revealed that the "ten spots" were not real United States money, but imitation money certificates which Goldwyn's service department had issued to exploit Mae Marsh in her dramatic success, "Money Mad," the last picture released in Goldwyn's first year. The money certificates, at the time they were issued, met with the enthusiastic endorsement of motion picture exhibitors everywhere. The title and subject of Miss Marsh's production necessitated advertisements of an appropriate nature, and the imitation money was conceived for the purpose of directing attention to "Money Mad."

An enterprising office boy was the direct cause of the rain of "ten-dollar bills." The Goldwyn New York exchange, on the eleventh floor of a building on Fifth avenue, carried a large stock of the money certificates. Grabbing a bundle of the "money," he rushed to the window and let them fly. The sensation he created was one of the big features of the two greatest celebrations New York has ever known.

Rothacker Films Montana "Ind" Spots.

In "Bad Men and Good Scenery," the second in the series of "out-door" pictures produced by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company and released through Mutual, is shown the famous "Jackson Hole," which is the rendezvous of the gunmen and outlaws of the bad lands of Montana. When the trail of the sheriff and his posse became too hot for "Alkali Ike" and "Maverick Pete" in the "good old days," the bad men found a refuge in "Jackson Hole," into which few, even of the fearless Western arbiters of justice, ventured in pursuit of their quarry. Back in "the Old Hole" they defied law and order.
November 23, 1918

Mix was engaged in a scene at the Fox studio and was mounted on his horse, Blue. The horse, in taking a high jump, stumbled and the rider was thrown heavily to the ground. When he attempted to walk he found he was barely able to hobble. But he thought he had merely twisted his leg and tried to forget about it. The next day, however, the pain was worse, and the day following it was so severe Mix went to a doctor.

The surgeon made an X-ray examination and found all the trouble was caused by the bullets which had been twisted and collected into a ball that pressed against a nerve center. Mix promptly ordered an operation. This proved to be a simple affair and the bullets were quickly removed.

Blackton Release Date Still Unset.

In answer to many inquiries concerning the release of “Safe for Democracy,” the J. Stuart Blackton special featured at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, the week of November 3, Commodore Blackton announces that no distribution plan or release date has yet been determined. He is now considering propositions for the exploitation of this “work-or-fight” picture, and expects to make formal announcement regarding it within a few days.

Mitchell Lewis is starred in this production, and the representative cast includes Ruby De Remer, Sia Darling, Helen Ferguson, John C. Wade, John Sibley, Sidney D’Albrough, Gus Greenhorn, Eugene Strong and Aubrey Beattie.

X-Ray Reveals Bullets
In Tom Mix’s Leg

A X-RAY examination having revealed a number of shot which had been in his leg nineteen years, Tom Mix, the William Fox cowboy star, now hopes to achieve the greatest ambition of his life—to be fit for Uncle Sam’s aviators.

Several weeks ago Mix, unable longer to stand the strain of being out of the biggest fight in history, went to an aviation recruiting station in Los Angeles and offered himself for service.

The examining surgeons found him in perfect condition except for one thing. Something seemed to be wrong with one of the principal muscles of his right leg, and although Mix was suffering no pain or trouble he walked with an almost imperceptible limp. When the doctor questioned him about this Mix at first was at a loss for an explanation. Then he remembered that during one of the battles he was shot in the right leg by a Filipino with a shotgun and the bullets never had been removed.

The surgeon shook his head and told Mix that the bullets would bar him from the air service. Disconsolate, Mix went back to making pictures in the William Fox studio. The other day, however, an accident occurred which, while painful in itself, put Mix in a way of realizing his hopes.

Goldwyn Buys “Sis Hopkins” as Vehicle for Miss Normand

THE next picture which Nabel Normand will make for Goldwyn will be a vehicle of Miss Hopkins, and Goldwyn acquired the moving picture rights to this famous Hoosier play from Rose Melville, who wrote and created and played the part for nearly a quarter of a century. No play on the American stage has a more curious history than “Sis Hopkins.”

To the present generation of New York theatregoers it is known only by hearsay. In the provinces it was for twenty years as well known and popular as “Flip Van Winkle,” “Way Down East” or “In Old Kentucky.” In fact “Sis Hopkins” is of its kind a classic. Four people have made fortunes out of it and retired.

Rose Melville and her husband, Frank Minzey, toured America with it year after year for nearly twenty-five years, always making the same sure profit, and usually playing to about the same audiences. In both large and small towns all over the country many people would go to see Rose Melville in “Sis Hopkins” regularly once a year. Out of the proceeds the Minzeys have left the stage, and acquired a large estate on the shores of Lake George.

“Sis Hopkins” began as a specialty, which Miss Melville did in between the acts of the play, or as playing with the Baldwin-Melville stock company in the early nineties. Born and brought up in Indiana, she had made quite a study of Hoosier types. Her amusing caricature of the gawky farmer’s daughter made such an effect that she was engaged to do it in “Little Christopher” at the Garden Theatre in 1894, and subsequently in “The Prodigal Father” and “By the Sar Sea Waves.” Later on Miss Melville went into vaudeville with “Sis,” and was so successful there that she was persuaded to elaborate the sketch into a three-act play.

The characterization and the dialogue were entirely Miss Melville’s. As a matter of fact, “Sis” is one of those parts that grew rather than being written, because Miss Melville never ceased building up and elaborating the part. It will be an ideal character for Mabel Normand in pictures. The situation and situations offer ideal opportunities for her to build comic scenes on.

No Sectionalism in World Pictures.

In the selection of stories, plays and other kinds of dramatic material for photo plays the cardinal principle that guides the scenario department of World Pictures is to choose only such vehicles as are free from the taint of sectionalism. A story might offer splendid opportunities for picturization, in fact make a feature that would hold to any program and yet have in it certain elements that would arouse race religious or party feeling in some section or other of this country that would injure not alone the producer but also embarrass the exhibitor. A picture that will make several hundred thousand dollars in the North and excite public riots in the South is not the kind of a picture for a program company to handle.

A program company must have a policy entirely different from the sporadic productions of the independent producer as regards the subject matter of its pictures. World Pictures believes. One company lives by reason of the established value of its output while the other in order to make a profit must produce sensational photoplays to secure quick sales regardless of sectionalism.

Unique Advertising Stunt.

The manager of the Codman Square Theatre, Dorchester, Mass., is to be complimented for a most unique advertising folder stunt. The stunt in this case is a little strip of paper folded in a small square, with the words, ‘Keep this under cover—don’t show it’ on the outside. Naturally this piques curiosity, and upon unfolding the strip there is shown small cuts of each of Select’s stars, with an appropriate box of wording at the right of each picture. The manager of the Codman Square is continually on the lookout for new ideas, and this is what makes a theatre popular. Good pictures and new ideas are the best winning combination on earth.

Select to Handle "The Woman the Germans Shot"

SETTING at rest the various conflicting rumors in film circles during the past week, Plunkett & Carroll now make public their plans for the distribution of their feature production, "The Woman the Germans Shot," starring Julia Arthur in the role of a Mother of the Martyred British Red Cross nurse and under whose care the group has been taken. The booking rights to this picture have been secured by Select Pictures Corporation.

Since the presentation of this story at the Strand Theatre during week no less than one hundred and seventy-three press criticisms and magazine articles praising the production, both from the film and theatrical standpoints, has been published. Miss Arthur has been given such unanimous praise for her performance that it is certain that this production will be a great success in all the markets in which it will be shown. No conditions could be better than those under which I now go on with my new work, and every one can have the satisfaction of knowing that I have been brought to bear on the new productions.

Several Sales Reported on Victoria Cross Film

WITH the announcement that Sol L. Lasky is dividing his "Woman of the Crosses Rights" for All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., for California, Arizona, Nevada and the Northwest, there have been sales of other sales of the screen version of Victoria Cross' popular novel; the southern territory to the new firm of Baynes Features, Inc., of Detroit, where two weeks solid bookings were reported by W. A. Baynes before he had received his first print. The Sile Film Exchange has acquired "Five Nights" for Chicago with promises of giving Al. Harsh, who is keeping several prints busy in New York, a close run for record bookings; while a late arrival in the closing days in this office is from Herbert Osso in Maryland, where he gets the picture for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

E. K. Lincoln Starred in Special S-L Pictures

ARTHUR H. SAWYER and Herbert Lubin, of the S. L. Pictures organization, announce that E. K. Lincoln will be starred in a series of special productions under the direction of Ralph Ince; also that Conrad Milliken, who recently was vice-president of Petrova Pictures, Inc., has been associated with this organization.

In speaking of his new alliance, Mr. Milliken stated: "I feel certain of the success of S-L pictures not only because of the diverse organizations, but because of the fact that the husband is a producer, and the wife, Ralph Ince, but also that the fact that the husband and wife are in the right way, without hurry or worry. There is just one thing in view, that of creating a great picture, and that is the special in every sense of the word. There will be no fixed program of releases — only individual pictures being given at the proper time. All will be to have as nearly perfect as human skill can make it. The fact that Ralph Ince is to personally direct for S-L pictures is in itself a guarantee of a successful production."

Mr. Lincoln is well known for his long and successful career in motion pictures, his last appearance being in the production, "Lafayette, We Come," in which he was starred. He has also been starred in many other productions. Work on the first S-L picture in which Mr. Lincoln will appear under Mr. Ince's direction commenced this week, and, while the publicity and sales offices are kept in constant motion in order to get the word out, it will be a theme of international importance which will be of first interest to exhibitors everywhere. In this connection, it will be recalled that Mr. Lincoln appeared in pictures under Mr. Ince's direction several years ago with the Vitagraph.

Director Ince, in speaking of his connection with the new organization, says: "I have come to the point toward which I have aimed consistently through years of endeavor. No conditions could be better than those under which I now go on with my new work, and every one can have the satisfaction of knowing that I have been brought to bear on the new productions.

Pioneer Opens Office in Cleveland

After a thorough canvass of the situation, Nathan Hirsh, president of the Pioneer Film Corporation, has opened an office in Ohio territory and handled his own booking for "Wives of Men," consequently he will be visited Cleveland, and as a result a branch office of the Pioneer Film Corporation has opened in the Kline Building under the supervision of Mr. Burnside and Miss M. A. Smith. All bookings for Ohio and Kentucky will be handled through this office.

State Rights Sales Reported This Week

RGSFILM CORPORATION announced that H. M. Hoffman, 729 Seventh avenue, New York and New Jersey, has been announced as the representative of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises rights to the Sealsert production, "Carmen of the Klondike," for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia.

M. H. Hoffman has purchased from Wharton, Inc., the rights to six two-reel comedies for Northern New Jersey and the State of New York.

Trade Press Praises Latest Tourneur Film

NO PRODUCTION of this screen year has received more unanimous and enthusiastic trade press comment than Maurice Tourneur's "Woman," apparently without a dissenting voice, the trade publications pronounced this picture, aside from being Mr. Tourneur's masterpiece, to be one of the most artistic productions of the year. Hiller & Wilk, Inc., the selling agents for "Woman" and other forthcoming Tourneur productions, announced that they will make a statement within the next few days regarding the releasing channel for this picture, and they promise that it will be as striking as the releasing of the first independent Tourneur production, "Sporting Life," which, while the New York premiere, was immediately secured by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which in confidentially breaking its predecessors, as it was the first time that they ever purchased an independent production.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD 849
SANT FRANCISCO THEATRES SPRUCING UP
Will Be in First Class Condition Regarding Both Sanitation and Comfort When Re-opening Time Comes

ALMOST every moving picture theatre in San Francisco is being renovated and will be in perfect shape from the standpoint of sanitation and comfort when the reopening date is at hand. One house has a sign in its lobby reading: "This House is Being Washed, Ironed and Perfumed," and others are calling attention in various ways to the improvements that are being made.

In addition to being thoroughly renovated, some extensive structural changes are being made at the Tivoli Theatre, the stage being enlarged to care for the larger orchestra that will be installed. William Casey has resigned as manager and will be succeeded by E. M. Asher, now in charge of the film exchange business of the Turner & Dahmen Circuit.

Considerable work is under way at the California Theatre, but this is largely confined to a thorough cleaning of all hangings and carpets and the construction of a studio in the basement for the use of the orchestra leader. Advantage is being taken of the enforced period of closing to prepare new stage sets and some novel effects are promised.

The Imperial Theatre has received attention at the hands of decorators, and is now in the best shape since the opening of the house. Manager J. A. Partington has some interesting programs to offer in his inimitable way when the entertainment of the public is again in order.

The Strand Theatre, of which Leo Weinberger is manager, is being given a thorough cleaning; a larger screen is being installed and the public will be given a musical surprise when the house is reopened.

The Portola Theatre was closed for several weeks during the summer for the purpose of receiving a thorough overhauling, and but little work has been necessary to place it in perfect condition. Many changes were made a short time ago at the Rialto Theatre, but further improvements are being made by the new owners, sheehan & Mann.

The Silver Palace Theatre on Market Street near Third, one of the oldest moving picture houses in the city, and one of the few adhering to the old admission price of five cents, is also being made snick and span under the direction of Nathan Herzog, and the Unique and Odeon Theatres in the same block are also receiving attention.

Popular Exhibitors Pass Away.
A. A. Berard, who has conducted the Modesto Theatre at Modesto, Cal. for the past two years, passed away during the week from pneumonia induced by influenza. Mr. Berard was one of the most popular exhibitors in Central California, generous to a fault, with business methods that placed him far above the average in his line of service. Several were conducted under the auspices of the Masons, and the film trade was represented by Louis Reichert and G. C. Blumenthal, of the Metro Pictures Corporation. The Modesto Theatre will be conducted in the future under the direction of Harry L. Kellin.

Charles Rogers, manager of the Peerless Theatre on Third street, San Francisco, is a victim of influenza, his splendid physique proving no bar to the dread disease.

Smiling Man Visits City.
Leonard Meyberg, who is in charge of a plan announced a short time ago by the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, whereby moving picture houses will turn over to the commission a certain percentage of their gross receipts one day each month to be used in the purchase of smiley books for soldiers, has arrived from Los Angeles to interest local theatre owners. It was announced that twenty-four moving picture houses were to co-operate in the southern city.

Dixie V. Boulware, cashier, and Nellie Boulware, stenographer for the Metro Pictures Corporation since the opening of the San Francisco exchange, have enlisted as yeomanettes in the United States Navy and will leave for Washington, D. C., at an early date.

Hausessler Takes Recent Theatre.
W. F. Hausessler, who for several years conducted a moving picture house on Fillmore Street, has taken over the Regent Theatre and will reopen it as soon as the ban on amusements is raised.

New Fox Manager Soon.
Paul Mooney, who has been made district manager for the Fox Film Corporation, is expected here at an early date to succeed George Mann, who has resigned to become associated with Howard J. Sheehan in the management of the Rialto Theatre.

Preparing for Hodkinson Change.
W. O. Edmonds, manager of Hodkinson Service in this territory, is preparing to move to the Pathe quarters on Market Street. Hodkinson releases to be made through the Pathe exchange after November 25.

Installs "Picture Show" in Lobby.
WALTER ARMSTRONG, manager of the Strand Theatre, has installed in his lobby a free picture show under the name of William Westinghouse's Moving Picture Sound. A large cabinet, installed in it a big revolving wheel on which he placed stills of the picture with which Yeaman will reopen. A small peep hole allows one to look in, and a crank at the side revolts the wheel, bringing out successive picture in view. Every patron is his own operator. He had lots of trouble with the newsboys, who wanted to "see the wheel go round." It created interest and amusement.

brief items.
The Associated Press has reported the drowning of two film men in the sinking of the Steamer Dumur, when she caught fire off Guam. I am pleased to be able to correct it in one instance. W. W. Kohfeld, who was steward, was not on the steamer at the time of the accident, having left it at San Francisco. He returned to Portland and re-engaged in the film game. He was formerly the representative, but enlisted in the Merchant Marine. L. J. Samuelson, associated with Mr. Kohfeld and Pathe, enlisted at the same time. He stayed with the ship, and was lost.

Mr. Lederman, of the Universal Film Company, accompanied by his wife, has been making a tour of the company's offices, and is now in Portland. He reports that the Eastern cities have suffered far more than the Western ones from the epidemic, and that the Middle States have suffered the least.

Whittle Again with Variety.

THESE recently have been a complete reorganization of the Variety Pictures Corporation of Baltimore. J. L. Whittle has again associated himself with the management, and Mr. Whittle returned from Atlantic City last week, at which place he has been a regular visitor for the past ten years. He has a great deal of experience in the business, having been manager of the Milton Capon, manager of the Glover Theatre, 414-16 East Baltimore street, one of the most popular, has been named president of the company. J. Louis Rone, who formerly held that position, is now in the exhibition department. Mr. Capon will attend to the business arrangements of the company.

Baltimore Personalities.

M. (Mike) Siegel, well known throughout Allegheny County from the Maryland Cinema, who is connected with the Baltimore Film Exchange, according to present indications, may probably, in the near future, become a benefactor. It is said that congratulations are being showered upon this enterprising manager, who has the reputation of being the champion "African Golf" player of the Baltimore territory.

Several exhibitionists visited the home of Simon Pelsweig, formerly a salesman for Universal, working out of the Baltimore Film Exchange office, and several friends visited the family home of the bouncing baby boy. Mr. Pelsweig has returned to Philadelphia, leaving the service of the Universal, and has become a salesman for Armour & Company.

Out-of-Town Items.

Jerry Cahill, manager of the Opera Houses in Centerville and Easton, Md., took his family west last week for an inspection over the film situation and visited his friends along Film Row.

Cumberland, Md.—Peter C. Barnes, an attorney of this city, has received the appointment as motion picture inspector for Allegany County from the Maryland Cen- tral Board, of which Mrs. Margarette E. Harrison is the secretary.

Baltimore, Md.—Charles E. Thropp, who for some time managed Nixon's Victoria Theatre, 415 East Baltimore street, in Baltimore, is now associated with the Nixon-Nirdlinger interests in Philadelphia, is said to have had a successful management of the Acme Theatre, in this city, and probably have charge of the Colonial and Maryland theatres. After he left the Victoria Theatre, he managed the Henry Theatre, Light near Cross street, Balti- more, for the Parkway Theatre Company, for some time.

Frostburg, Md.—Lawrence Hitchens, the well known and popular manager of the Frostburg Theatre, has been discharged by the company during the week of October 23 at his home here. It is said he suffered an attack of influenza, but is up and around. His father will probably take over the management of the theatre.

Will Open to Service Men.

The New Theatre, 210 West Lexington street, will open on November 15. The United States service on Sundays hereafter between the hours of 3 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon, is to be provided. Dr. A. DeHoff, the well known manager of this theatre, a series of entertainments for soldiers will be opened and Mr. DeHoff is arranging a program of excellent moving pictures, including educational and philanthropic subjects. The entertainments are being held under the auspices of the United Service Club, of Baltimore. The first one took place on Sunday, November 10.

MARCUS LOEW'S PALACE THEATRE OPENS

November 20. Dedication of Washington Civic Biggest Picture House Managed by Lawrence Bealts

By Clarence L. Linn, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON--The newest link in the Marcus Loew chain of theatres, the Thirteenth, is the largest in the city, with a seating capacity of 3,000 persons. It will play pictures of all types, and, although a large stage and dressing rooms and other arrangements make it possible for the less worldly to do their stuff on the floor.

The theatre fronts on F street, where a large lobby, constructed in marble and travertine, is provided. The marble consists of a wallcasing about five feet in height and marble columns and pilasters which the light of a provided. The entrance have brassed capitals and support a cornice where are located the lights, which are of the indirect type.

The theatre is decorated in a modified Adam style, with a number of plaster ornaments especially modeled and constructed in house. The theatre is of soft colors ranging from gray to amber and gold. The main ceiling has a dome from which hangs a chandelier. The fixture, when lighted, shows a structure of delicate tracery in the openings. Set in the proscenium arch and suspended from the center arch in the main lobby are ten giant Venetian blinds. The entire lobby is so arranged in its relation to the rest of the house as to bring out the central theme. A mezzanine promenade, panelled in mahogany and with mahogany columns, has been provided for the comfort of patrons. The furniture throughout is of aown mahogany, upholstered in red mohair, all in the Adam style, to harmonize with the rest of the house. The smoking room for men and a rest room for women are located on the mezzanine promenade, the former furnished with large covered chairs, and the latter in black and gold Chinese lacquer. A large fireplace has been installed in the smoking room, over which is a mantle surmounted by a very rare specimen of Mandarin embroidery. The rest room has been finished with a Chinese wall paper of striking design. The entire house was opened with a large open well of Mexican mahogany, which overlooks the lobby below.

The lighting, heating and ventilation, all arranged throughout the theatre, is lighted consisting of a three-color system, showing through cover cornices and illuminated with amber, amber, and amber. These blend harmonize with the music of the large pipe organ and the symphony orchestra with which the theatre is provided. In addition, lights have been placed under alternate steps in the balcony, making it possible for patrons to find their seats even when the house is in total darkness.

The heating is of the hot-air type, carried in large return and supply pipes and a number of cone heaters under the seats. The air is brought in from outdoors through a vanable and is then heated, distributed through the house, and exhausted through the roof by large ducts. In the rear of the house, direct radiators have been provided for steam heat. The ventilation is treated in the same manner.

The stage is decorated with a semi-circular colonnade, with a beautifully decorated dome over it and was carried out in the same style as the rest of the house and forms the background for the lighting effects which are used.

The house will be under the management of Lawrence Bealts, who for the past three years has managed the Loew's Columbia Theatre. Through this connection he has become well known to Washington theatre goers who have long been aware of his desire to provide them with the finest picture house in the city.

Mr. Bealts was born in Memphis, Tenn., and received his first theatrical training there, finally moving to the West Coast, where he worked for some time as a projectionist and玺at the Lyceum Theatre. He has been in the theatre business for several years, and, with the Loew interests since 1911, his first position with Marcus Loew being as treasurer of the Palace, in New York. He has managed theatres since in New York, Toronto, Denver and Wash- ington.

LeVene Shows War Work Pictures.

A BOUT the only special exhibition of moving pictures held in Cincinnati during the past month was by Mr. LeVene on Seventh street recently by Manager LeVene of the Palace Theatre. LeVene shows 25 or so them, chairman of the Cincinnati War Chest, or- ganization. As it may be gathered, this mere exhibition of the pictures is only because of its connection with the work of the big drive. Manager LeVene showed films prepared for such purposes and they will be seen all over Cincinnati during the drive, provided, of course, the theatres have been opened, as it is hoped they will be shortly. The pictures show what the M. C. A., Red Cross and other relief organizations are doing for the country, thus giving direct proof of the service they perform.

Consolidation Plans arouse Indignation.

The reported plans for the consolidation of the Alhambra and Laben theatres by the Frankel interests aroused the indignation of the clothing man who occupies the store between the two theatres, and who holds a twelve-year lease on the property. He declares that he has no intention of giving up his lease, and will stand his ground, no matter what the less, in view of the facts already re- ported to the subject, there is room for belief that an effort is being made to secure the lease, eliminate the store and consolidate into one of the biggest one big house, of a size to compare favorably with any in Cincinnati.

Sweeney Succumbs to Influenza.

The epidemic of influenza, which has taken nearly 700 people from the city during the past month, claimed Eugene Sweeney, manager of the Erie Theatre, in Hyde Park, on November 2. Mr. Sweeney died at his home on Grandin Road of pneumonia growing out of an attack of influenza. He was 32 years of age, and has been in charge of the theatre since returning from the war with a desirable success for some time. A pathetic feature of the untimely death of the young man is that his wife, who is nursing him, has also contracted pneumo- nia, and at this writing is in a serious condition. There is a little daughter in the family.

Dolug War Chest Organization Publicity.

So successful was I. W. McMahan, the film and picture-show man, in "boasting" the operations of his team during the recent war cent of a benefit and has been made publicity lieutenant for Team T of the War Chest organization. This organization is not to work in the capacity of Mr. McMahan, who knows everybody, in- cluding the president, is fully aware of what is in the matter of news, and is therefore an ideal man for the work of keeping his team to the fore- front in the press.

Goldwyn Installs a System Which Improves Its Service to Exhibitors—Josephson Buys the Elliott

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

Goldwyn Better Service to Exhibitors.

The Goldwyn office at Kansas City was one of the few where all the force had been away on a trip to New York City for the entire period of epidemic restrictions. Richard Robertson, manager, discovered, when the force returned, that the work done during the "off period" was quite as much as he thought the force had ever accomplished. New systems were worked out to perfection.

Operated During Epidemic Period.

Circuit operators as known for their ability to operate throughout the epidemic period in the Kansas-Missouri territory. This was the way that the Goldwyn office did it. The town of Brookfield is one of the best of its size in the state, about 8,000 people. The epidemic did not seem to have touched this place, and no restrictions were imposed on gatherings of any kind. The Goldwyn office, and the other distributors, operated not at all from influenza, but all except Brookfield closed down theatres for an estimated four weeks.

The Josephson Amusement Co., of Kansas City, a corporation recently organized to operate the ground now occupied by the building of the Elliott Theatre here, and will operate it. The K. C. Amusement Co., the present management of the Elliott, failed to sell it within the 10 days time allowed, and Mr. Elliott, formerly proprietor of this theatre, recently leased the Grand Theatre at Kansas City for a term of years. The Elliott Theatre Building, a one-story structure (designed ultimately as a two-story building) was operated about the same time two months ago, having previously been operated as the Star Theatre. The Josephson company now has as its president Frank Josephson, who a few months ago bought the Westgate Hotel at Kansas City. Josephson, Josephson, will manage the Elliott. It is the purpose to run high-class pictures. The theatre seats 500; admission, ten cents and war tax.

Keep Tabs on Theatre Closings and Openings.

The Kansas City Vitagraph office established a card system for checking closing and opening dates of exhibitors with reference to the Vitagraph system was put into effect when the ban first began to be imposed, and has proved valuable, as the territory is being released generally from restrictions. The cards were, at first, in triplicate, but outside of ordinary business cards. One was used for each exhibitor, his name, address, and the date of his closing report. The same record is now kept in a quiescent file. In this way the office knew what shows were running, and how long they ran. Omission of quiescent file is to be used no longer, and that hereafter he will conduct his business under the style of Arthur S. Horowitz, New York, which gives him complete control. He will continue the business at the same location under the name of Arthur S. Horowitz, Inc. Josephson has had a most interesting career in Detroit, coming here eighteen months ago from Philadelphia. To-day he owns an individual exchange.

New House at Petersburg.

Peterburg, Va., has erected a new photoplay house, to be known as the Avalon. Veronee & Mortimer are the proprietors. The theatre will seat about 1,000 and is modern in its construction and equipment.

Dawn Masterplay Changes Its Name.

Arthur S. Hyman announces that the name Dawn Masterplay is to be used no longer, and that hereafter he will conduct his business under the style of Arthur S. Horowitz, New York. Recently Mr. Hyman purchased "Wives of Men," with Florence Reed, and "The Two Smeared Masters," in Detroit.

Detroit Dots.

If nothing intervenes the New DeLux Theatre, Percival and Parkview, Detroit, will be opened by the first of next month. The New Regent, in Battle Creek, will soon be ready to open the 1st of November, 2,000 seats, and the grand opera house for the past four days. Upon inquiry, it was proved that Mr. Fiala had not contracted the influenza. He has been sick with neuritis. Mr. Fiala hopes to be back on the job within a very few days.

Nunn Assistant Manager of Strand.

George Nunn, erstwhile assistant manager of the Apollo Theatre here, has transferred his allegiance to a larger enterprise and is now assistant manager of the Strand Theatre here. Although young in years, Mr. Nunn has had much experience in his line (not to forget the Alhambra and Dayton Theatre), and I feel that he will make a success of his new activities in an assured manner.

Majestic Not to Be a Colored House.

When sold at auction in Dayton several weeks ago it was announced that the Majestic Theatre would have been disposed of to a company of negro stockholders and would be operated as a house for colored people. It has just been announced that the negro lawyers who represented the purchasers, found as soon as the sale was made as acceptable money in the desk of the county register of deeds and that the Majestic was passed over to him. Mr. Harris is to open the Majestic within the next week as a first-class theatre, and will bend every effort toward making it one of Dayton's leading picture play houses.

New Members of Honor of Keith.

Because of the death of A. Paul Keith, president of the Keith interests, who operated the Strand Theatre here, this hounor was to have been made for him December 2, until six o'clock. This was done by reason of the fact that Mr. Keith's funeral took place before that time.

Campbell A Victim of Influenza.

A T CAMPBELL, for the last eight months Vitagraph salesman in Michigan, has been taken ill at his home in Cincinnati Friday, November 2. He has been ill for a few days with influenza. Prior to this Mr. Campbell operated the Strand Theatre in Escanaba and the Grand in Menominee.

Horowitz at Foursquare.

Joseph Horowitz, former half-owner of the Foursquare Exchange, Detroit, has taken over the interest of his partner, George Buchen, New York, which gives him complete control. He will continue the business at the same location under the new name of Joseph Horowitz, Inc. Horowitz has had a most interesting career in Detroit, coming here eighteen months ago from Philadelphia. To-day he owns an individual exchange.

EXCHANGE HEADS PLAN ORGANIZATION

Thirty-one Minneapolis Managers Meet and Discuss Means for Caring for Rush After Lifting of Ban

By William Edward Mulligan, Minneapolis Journal, Minneapolis, Minn.

Managers of the thirty-one moving picture exchanges in Minneapolis met recently at the Bank of America Building and made plans for a permanent organization in this city. They also discussed methods of caring for the rush of business which is anticipated as the aftereffects of the cessation of conscription take hold.

The primary object of the organization, which will be perfected at a later meeting, will be the prevention of any conditions and the merging of common interests looking to the betterment of the movie industry. A committee was appointed to arrange the details of organization, and will report at the next meeting. The members are S. S. Holmes, manager of the Greater Vitagraph Exchange; E. R. Pearson, first national exchange manager, and M. C. Leestee, manager of the Triangle Film Corporation's local exchange. Although many Minneapolis exhibitors have left the city exchange's management has organized, his is the first step in that direction taken by members of the exchange in this city.

St. Paul Fns "Railroad Night."

"Railroad Night" was observed in St. Paul at the Auditorium on October 25, when an army of workers of the Great Northern and the Interurban Railroad attended the showing of "America's Answer." Unusual keen interest was shown by the motley throng of picture lovers, because of the fact that it reveals some of the extensive construction of railways in France by American engineering.

Sunday shows are now an accomplished fact at the Prince, where it has had its first Sunday movies recently. When, despite strong opposition, the mayor refused to stop the Prince's "pleasure hunters" at the Princess Theatre. Since then other moving picture theatres in St. Paul have opened Sundays.

Circus Serial Boomed.

A big campaign to book "The Lure of the Circus," Universal's latest serial starring Eddie Polo, was launched by the Minnesota Theatre department with the mailing of more than one thousand attractive thirty-two-page four-color circus campaign and press books on the subject to exhibitors of the Northwest. Universal is sending out special advertising to the house managers. The exhibition will be serial over in record style. Special rates or posters, stock sheets and first episode specks for A. A. Nixon, well known in Northwest film circles, who will act as head salesman for this territory.

M. H. Ayxarn, formerly superintendent of schools at Akeley, Minn., has been appointed Minneapolis branch of the American Seating Company.

H. E. Lafferty, former auditor of the Minneapolis Mutual Exchange, has been appointed city manager of the credit department of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company.

David T. Hobson, of Litchfield, Minn., has purchased the Premier Theatre at Dassel, and will conduct it as a moving picture house.

Theodore L. Hays has disposed of the Grand Theatre at Crookston, Minn., to the Northern State Amusement Company, a new company.

The Grand Theatre, at Biwabik, Minn., recently damaged by fire, will be repaired and reopened in the near future.

A. Pontierio, of Elyant, S. D., has leased the Colonial Theatre at Tracy, Minn., from J. C. Cikina.

The Grand Theatre, at Grand Forks, N. D., recently destroyed by fire, will probably be rebuilt.

Amos Tweeden, proprietor of the Princess Theatre, at Fargo, N. D., is having the house rebuilt.

Dr. A. J. Dix, of Aberdeen, S. D., has turned over his moving picture interests at Mitchell, S. D., to his partner, William Fraser, who took charge November 1.

Thanks Film Men for Aid in Loan Drive.

The correspondent of the Moving Picture World has received a letter from the Central Liberty Loan Committee, which conducted the recent campaign in Ohio, Kentucky and Western Pennsylvania, thanking the exhibitors and exchange men for their co-operation in distributing the loan drives.

Greenbaum Made a Corporal.

Jack Greenbaum, former manager and one of the present owners of the Alhambra Theatre, Cleveland, was among those who were promoted at Camp Sherman last week. Greenbaum, a first-class private, has been transferred to the service of a railway company when the influenza epidemic broke out. The boys of this company who were at Camp Sherman were transferred and are now conducting the disease. Eight died. Greenbaum was made a corporal.

Elmer Cox.

Elmer Cox, well-known local moving picture operator, was electrocuted at the plant of the Hydraulic Pressed Steel Company while working there during the enforced closing of the theatres. He was on a crane when the juice was turned on by a machine and he was stunned. Cox was a saloonist in the employ of the United Theatre Equipment Corporation. He leaves a wife and two children.

SPOKANE NEWS LETTER

By S. Clark Patchen, Speakerman-Review, Spokane, Wash.

Melcroom Leaves for New York.

RED K. MCBROOM, receiver for the Washington Motion Picture Corporation, has left for New York to join the Washington Motion Picture Corporation, with the idea of marketing "Fool's Gold," the picture produced by the company here. Mr. Trimble left for the East two weeks ago. Mr. Melcroom expects to have a picture ready which will pay off the debts of the company which he expects, will lead to a reorganization.

Liberty and Clemmer to Raise Prices.

With the opening of the moving picture theatres of Spokane, at the close of the influenza epidemic, the Liberty and Clemmer theatres will raise the admission price of the adult tickets 20 cents plus the war tax of two cents. Children will be charged 10 cents. The war tax on box seats will be 35 cents plus the war tax of four cents. This will make the admission prices 11, 12, and 15 cents as compared to 10, 20 and 35 cents which was previously charged.

Sam W. B. Cohn, of the Liberty, said he expected other picture houses and other Spokane theatres to follow suit and add the war tax to their present admission prices. "We are taking the responsibility for the Government," said Mr. Cohn.

Exhibitors in Eastern Part of Philadelphia Have Not Yet Agreed on Advancing Their Rates

By F. V. Armatto, 144 North Salford street, Philadelphia, Pa.

ABERT BROWN, of the Overbrook Theatre, and Charles Segall, of the Apollo and Fifty-sixth Street theatres, of West Philadelphia, are reported to be making plans for higher prices of admission, and have expressed their willingness to co-operate along equitable lines in the matter of agreement reached for the zone covering the eastern part of the city, owing to the lack of confidence displayed by the west side theatres in this section.

There is no doubt that if a special meeting were called more specific results would take place in the plan adopted which would conform with the ideas of those who are inclined to be agreeable. The plan developed for higher prices which is deemed essential at this time for the proper maintenance of the theatres by the the managing exhibitors are all in favor of higher prices to meet the growing taxes which are threatening to destroy the business."

Bradfield Dies of Influenza.

Charles L. Bradfield, who will be remembered as one of the pioneer exhibitors of Philadelphia, died last week in Wilmington, Del., where he resided during the past year, while the manager of the Grand Opera House. Mr. Bradfield was a victim of influenza, which had been raging in the city for several days before he succumbed to its deadly effects. Mr. Bradfield was one of the leading theatre owners in the city, and was a favorite with his patrons. He was a friend of many, and was a host of friends. Mr. Bradfield's enterprising career as a successul exhibitor was reviewed at length by the family in this column here not so long ago.

Philadelphia Breevities.

Harry Ertle, formerly manager of several Philadelphia theatres, has joined the Goldwyn forces, and is now one of their traveling representatives.

William Goldenberg, of the Stanley Company, is reported to have succeeded the late Bert Tichenor, and will now continue with the important duties assigned to this secretarial position.
EXCHANGES MAY MOVE FROM ST. JOHN

Canadian Picture Board Discusses Question as to Whether Distributors Shall Locate in Moncton

By Alice Fairweather, The Standard.

HAT is chiefly agitating the exchange men of St. John, N. B., is the proposed question, and whether the eight exchange offices here will receive orders to move to Moncton. This subject was discussed by the Motion Picture Board of Canada, with head offices in the Allen Theatre Building, Toronto. Local representatives were present at the St. John exchange, stating that a meeting had been held by representatives of the four largest exchange offices in the three provinces which pay a provincial license tax in each of the three regions.

Mayor Hays, of St. John, said that the tax was to become effective at the first of the year, and the new assessment act becomes operative.

St. John managers, when asked regarding the new tax, said that it was not discouraging, that the tax rests entirely on the business of the city and the city alone.

Several, however, indicated that at least two other places have offered special inducements to the exchanges to locate in the city.

In other places the use of a general building at a very small rent is offered, as is also the use of the business community, but none of the inducements is held out to the picture men. Moncton and Truro, N. S., Loth offered fine buildings, and both cities are anxious to have the business locate there.

The film exchanges located in St. John pay about $270 in taxes in addition to the personal taxes paid by the 150 employees of the exchanges. It was estimated that the various exchanges spend about $60,000 in the neighborhood of $100,000 in the city.

The theatre owners will not have to change, as they will have to spend something like $150 per year in exchange orders, on which there will be a distinct loss to the community if the film exchanges leave the city.

Hollywood Swaps Exchanges

A. G. Marrett, manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company, St. John, is back at his office after an attack of influenza.

Many of the staffs of the various film exchanges here were affected with influenza.

A whole page in a St. John paper was devoted to the advertising of the Victory Loan, covering six columns, and inciting pictures.

J. H. Romney, Vitagraph; H. G. March, Specialty Film Import; G. A. Marrett, Canadian Universal; J. Loveridge, Universal Film Corporation; E. H. Teel, Regal Films; A. E. Smith, Famous Players Film Service; and others.

Unusual theatre lie in American; H. W. Golding, Imperial Theatre; Robert J. Arnaud, Queen Square Theatre; Paul Edwards, Empire Theatre in St. John.

Those in charge of the Victory Loan campaign have realized, as have many other communities throughout the country, that the theatres have given in all patriotic movements. Now that the ban is on, all theatres are being used as a booth for the sale of Victory bonds, and evening meetings have been held outside the theatre. As it faces on King Square it is an ideal gathering place for such activities, and we are pleased with the results in this respect, as hardly any public movement takes place without the assistance of the theatre staff.

A curtain was placed on the outside of the theatre and the Victory loan tickets were sold from a booth erected on the square.

Pryor Brothers Buy Four Theatres.

W. Pryor, manager of the Greensboro, N. C. theatres on November 1, an important date comes to light, whereby Pryor and his brother, J. W. Pryor, being the local representative, have purchased from the R. D. Craver Amusement Company, the Charlotte, an entire block, and four local theatres, three picture houses and one vaudeville theatre.

Pryor and his brother own two of the local theatres, the other two being owned by the Craver interests, who obtained sole control of the theatres in question about six months ago. Mr. Pryor and associates now come into full ownership of the theatres, and will be in a position to supply a program in connection with their extensive interests elsewhere, including the Bijou Theatre, in Danville, Va., and the Piedmont at Charlotte.

May Lose Expense of Griffith Film Advertisements

Richmond, Va.—Three days before the date local theatre managers have been guessing the epidemic ban would be lifted, namely November 15, advertising authorities have given no intimation that any action will be taken to that end. Local theatre operators are prepared to open, as the epidemic is very much on the wane, and the City Auditorium management is using large display advertising bringing Griffith’s “Hearts of the World” to begin a week engagement on November 4.

Indications are not to be allowed before the eighth or ninth of November, and that “Hearts of the World” will likely be booked into the 350 seat board and newspaper advertising campaign.

Other cities throughout the state have a number of opened openings dates, some as far as ten days in advance, and local theatre managers are all put off with the idea that they should have advance information in order to enable them to book their houses in time for reopening.

Charlotte, N. C.—Local exchanges are buried under an avalanche of telegrams, telephone calls, etc., as the exchange offices, from which it will require several days of night and day work to extricate themselves, are all of the theatres in North and South Carolina to be effective November 4.

Local exchanges are kept intact, no fatalities occurring from the epidemic, and every effort is being made to give prompt service, as the large number of orders that are pouring in.

The Universal Exchange, E. F. Dordine in charge, is working a day and night to get bookings in shape, recruiting serials and reinstating canceled bookings, with all other local theatre productions, all of which are handled out of the one office. Manager Fuller, of the Liberty, is working to get the same epidemic of real work after four weeks of inactivity, and T. A. Brannon, of the Colonial, is cutting up the orders shaping his new booking sheets on the wide variety of independent subjects handled out of his office.

While news pours in from other sections of reopening, Charlotte is remaining dark, with little likelihood of an epidemic ban being lifted locally before the middle of November.

HELD OPEN AIR SHOWS TO AID LOAN
With Ban on Theatres, Toronto Exhibitors Screened Victory Drive Films Outdoors to Boost Bond Sales

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

SOMETHING remarkable in the way of moving picture presentations were the results obtained the other night of three Toronto theatres to boost the Fifth Canadian Victory Loan. The stunt, behalf of the local charities, for the local houses were permitted to reopen on Monday, November 4.

The Allen Theatre, second street east near College was the scene of a ball rolling on Holloween, October 31, by holding a free open air show. A number of houses in the area pictures which would have been screened in theatres all over the country if the theatres had been open during the first week of the loan drive. It is estimated that a crowd of 15,000 people were attracted to the presentation, and the pictures shown included Douglas Fairbanks in "The Maple Leaf Forever," Marion Davies, a special Canadian release, "Money Bags," showing how the Victory Loan is spent, and Liberty Bond posters, William S. Hart in "Nights of a Warrior," Lillian Gish and Dorothy Dalton. The crowd was held for two hours and the preliminary messages, and then the sale of bonds.

J. J. Allen opened the sale with a $5,000 purchase and the buying under a total of $30,000 of bonds were sold.

The show was repeated in front of the Allen on the following evening, with different films on each occasion. On Friday night, pictures made by Mr. Allen and Mr. Frolick, were shown. On Saturday night, "Ferguson, Norma Talmadge, Wallace Reid, Mack Bennett and Corinne Griffiths in "Fame and Fortune." On Sunday night, November 2, the Victory Loan pictures of Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, and the Lillian Gish, and others were shown.

The interesting stunt was taken up by the Beaver Theatre in second street east near Bloor, to which was also attended Messrs. J. J. Allen, on Friday night, when special inducements for the buying of bonds were held as the shape of passes for the theatre. Anyone in the crowd buying from $50 to $1,000 worth of bonds received a double pass for one performance; a double pass for one month to purchases of $20, and a double pass for two months for a $1,000 purchase, and a double pass for six months for a purchase of $5,000. These passes were also offered to buy $500,000 of bonds on both Friday and Saturday night, proving that the crowd bought more than $50,000.

On the Saturday night, November 2, free shows were staged in front of the Park Theatre, second street west near College, under a similar arrangement, while the local Victory Loan Committee provided an outdoor free film show of its own in front of the committee headquarters, where loan cards and several comedies were screened.

The outdoor film performances became the order of the day in Toronto during the week, and the special loan pictures were put to excellent use after the picture sets announcing the shows were published in all the newspapers, and the space for use was bought by W. H. Wrigley, Jr., Company, Limited, gum manufacturers, as a contribution to the Victory Loan campaign.

Laurie Boosts Fifth Victory Loan.

Manager Archie Laurie, of the Regent Theatre, Guelph, Ontario, took advantage of his position as manager of the Regent to make the position of the Regent much stronger in the community. Laurie was the first exhibitor in Ontario to start an open air moving picture show to boost the Fifth Victory Loan, and he received lots of space on the front page of the Guelph Mercury on the following day. Laurie followed this advertising policy up with a second presentation of his choice in the local newspaper in which he thanked the many people for their attendence at the first show and incidentally told that another performance would be held on the following evening.

The festival theme of the presentation of five Victory Loan pictures and a number of slides about the reopening of the theatre and other details. One slide emphasized the need for water holes and tings closed voluntarily to safeguard the people of the community, while another slide announced that the Regent would be "Better than ever" when it was reopened.

Laurie used sixteen Victory Loan posters on the front of his house while it was closed closed in addition to two large painted signs which also boosted the loan. On the posters the words was a sign to the effect that the theatre had been closed voluntarily but that the management was always ready to do business. The Regent Theatre is operated by the Paramount Theatres, Limited, of Toronto.

Regent Boosts Fifth Loan.

When the Regent Theatre, one of Toronto's downtown palaces, was reopened on Monday, November 4, after a lay off of two months on account of the epidemic, under the new management of W. M. Elliott, formerly of Detroit, a number of changes were made. Regent signs and the loan cards and a number of large permanent sign frames had been placed above and below the iron marquee over the entrance. The theatre a glass windshiedl which had shielded the rear orchestra seats. All aisles were illuminated by small spotlights placed at every sixth row. The orchestra of twenty pieces had been taken from the stage and was placed on a special pit front. One of the orchestra's ancient drum sets had been taken out to give the orchestra plenty of room. The organ keyboards had been moved to the very side as well. New pictures and poster frames of next design had been placed on the mezzanine floor and a number of new ceiling lights replaced the old style. People and other attendants were garbed in brand new uniforms of quiet style. An entirely new lighting system and seating were installed. It will not arrive in time for the reopening.

Manager Elliott has devised a rather interesting method of advertising for current and coming attractions. The outside front is used exclusively for posters and pictures of the current features. The frames in the lobby will have advance notices studding the side as well. New pictures, while on the mezzanine floor will be found stills and cards for coming attractions. By this method, Elliott believes that he will overcome the usual confusion aroused by advertising both the current and future features in the same display.

Films Teach Hog Raising.

Texas farmer boys and farmer girls are learning how to raise hogs through the motion pictures. J. C. Hestand, chief of the live stock bureau of the state agricultural college, adopted the films as a method of encouraging the raising of thoroughbred pigs throughout the Lone Star State. He has been sending hogs to farmers from the humble barnyard shanty of the razorback variety to the bulging poundal of blue-ribbon Berkshire with the facial resemblance of Von Hindenburg and the disposition of Rip Van Winkle.

He shows the hog films to youngsters to demonstrate the right and the wrong ways to raise pigs. He declares that his pictures have been received by the peddling hog clubs throughout the state.

“LITTLE WOMEN”

William A. Brady Presents a Sympathetic Visualization of Louisa M. Alcott's Story.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A

 Earnest and intelligent effort has been made to seize and portray the matter, of a really true story of American home life, one widely read and enjoyed in the printed version, and by a talented author writing from the fulness of experience. If there is any serious fault in the foregoing, it lies with the Brady version, it must be ascribed to the original, or to the difficulty of setting forth on the screen a novel dealing with the characters and lines of action at the same time, for the release as shown to a considerable audience at Strand, was the author's purpose and evoked warm appreciation. In the very simplicity of this picture, that of a New England home during the Civil War, there is a fine and delicate art of accentuating the "atmosphere" so requisite to the home life and affection. Demure and sweet American girls are the "little women" of this family, and their struggles with the little affairs of existence, their pure-minded love stories, and their tendency to be other, even to the point of hard sacrifice, constitute the materials. All this is difficult to assemble in this form, a certain art of expression which ordinarily demands one or another situation of high suspense to hold popular attention, was needed to undertake it, but the logic and consistency of all that is shown compensation was ample. The situations were well developed and the narrative values. The Brady presentation is admirably typed, every character being taken with skill, most carefully set, to the minutest detail, and it is a highly finished product, one of the best of its kind.

“ROMANCE OF THE AIR”

A Story Featuring Lieut. Bert Hall and Released by Carl Carleton.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

That this picture is shown at the Rivoli gives it standing, and it contains nothing of the elements of a fine release, but it is all-too-obviously a public vehicle for Lieut. Bert Hall to be ranked with pictures of large public interest, and the story is on the regulation lines used by producers who enter the field without much knowledge of what has already been done to death, particularly the outcomes of the falsely accused hero condemned to die and saved at the last moment by the heroine, the most threadbare of them all. Lieutenant Hall, the son of a well-known American, but he does not take the intelligence of his fellow-Americans quite enough for granted. He is sent on a mission and comes down wounded within the German lines, along with a German airman who is killed. Hall changes clothes and identity with the dead German and is taken to a hospital, where he reveals an American girl warbound in Germany. They plan an escape, as "Dawn" one day in a German machine.

At dawn the American girl appears at the rendezvous, with an unknown foreigner, really the wife of a German spy, who has plotted to get into France this way. The German spy, believing the opportunity of escape has been discovered by the enemy and they are aiding him to make a desperate flight, gets him with gas he overlooked, sending back a dangerous American ace in order to get a woman left behind. Hall is then on a German machine and the spy is given every opportunity to be present when the value of preparing to attack. Her discoveries are promptly telephoned to the enemy and the attack fails. Hall is accused of being found in his room, and, in spite of a long and honorable record is sentenced for serious offenses. The circumstances enable the heroine to rescue the unjustly accused at the last moment. Lieut. Hall rings true, but his story does not.

“THE MASTER MYSTERY”

Houdini Serial Produced by R. A. Rolfe Promises Many Novel Thrills.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

Putting Houdini and his celebrated escapes into a serial of thrilling interest was a clever piece of showmanship. The Handcuff King himself is one of the best show men in the world, and has obtained more free advertising than any other enter tainer now before the public. His ready inventive faculty is constantly supplying him with a new sensation, and his skill in performing his feats of daring and mystery places him at the head of his class of wonder workers.

In the Master Mystery," written by Arthur Duck, directed by Charles A. Logue, and produced by B. A. Rolfe, there is every promise that its fifteen episodes will keep the movie fan on the edge of his seat throughout each number and leave him hardly able to wait for the time of installment to pass. A special showing of the first four episodes were given at the Strand Theatre, New York, November 6. Each episode contained one of Houdini's famous escapes. The Hands of the Master" was the part of Quentin Locke, an agent of the Department of Justice engaged in trapping a pair of patent medicine men to make it clear that business to suppress any invention that passes through their hands which might affect the public honest. Locke has been employed by the government as a chemist, and becomes an inmate of the home of Peter Brent, one of the firm. The suppressed inventions are hidden away in the Brent mansion. Among them is what is apparently a mechanical man of Frankenstein that travels about the house and uses his way through house breakers in the most mysterious fashion. It also has a index of thugs under its command. It has to make an escape, and all through the first four episodes, the bullies do their best to put Locke out of the way. He is imprisoned in a straight jacket, chained and hung head downward over a vat filled with acid, nailed in a box and thrown into the water, and the air pipe to his diving suit cut when at the bottom of the river. And each time the bullies try to end the adventures are all handled cleverly, and the events leading up to them are always full of the creepy mystery that Arthur B. Reeves knows how to invent. There is also a proper love interest, and Houdini tackles it with the same cool calm that in his private life he shows in risking his neck. To do him justice, his acting isn't half bad, and will receive but little adverse comment.

Burton King directed the production, assisted by William H. Fox. The result is excellent, and the first four episodes show an evident intention to give the serial generous financial support. The cast has artistic strength. Its leading members are William H. Fox, Charles Graham, Jack Burns, Edna Edron and Floyd Buckley.

“TELL IT TO THE MARINES”

Trick Photography Featured in Latest Little Kiddies Production from William Fox.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

The Kiddies are presented in a slap-bang comedy that uses a very popular catch phrase for its title—"Tell It to the Marines." An attempt of their screen accomplishments the kiddies have opportunity to do all the mischief they can in the here and now, and do it with speed. They will please their admirers and give satisfaction to those who have made these clever little ones their favorites.

The very important factor in the presentation is the incorporation of two or more reels of trick photography that has nothing whatever to do with the little plot itself. The main story carries. The film has been in the country for something like a year, having been imported from Italy by Harry Raver. Under the title "Outwitting the Hun," the subject was shown at the New York Strand, week starting July 31, of the past summer. Then it was reviewed at length in the World.

The Lee children are supposed to dream the "trick stuff," and while these scenes are screened they will be sure to create intense interest. Some of the most effective "stop camera" work the screen has ever shown is contained in the exploitation of the toy soldiers who accomplish some remarkable deeds. Exhibitors should pay special attention to exploiting these pictures in conjunction with showing of "Tell It to the Marines." The public should be told the same story to expect that the showman may get the full benefit of the offering.

The dosings of these toy creatures will create no end of comment. They constitute a remarkable offering.

The Story: It's the same old story of love's young dream and the cullf love of a callow youth, who is made to realize that a man of seventeen does not look as old as he feels to a girl of the same age. William Sylvyus Baxter even steals his father's dress suit to make a good impression upon his lady love, and in return gets "stood up" while she elopes with an older man, and has only his thoughts and a garage repair bill as souvenirs of his first love affair.

Feature: Louise Huff as Lola Pratt and Jack Pickford as William Sylvyus Baxter.

Advertising Angles: Offer this as a reissue and not as a new production. Recall his earlier success; a success largely influencing its later presentation as a stage play. Use the fact that Mr. Pickford is in Government service to explain his recent non-appearance and hook up with the popularity of the play and novel as well. For a special stunt hire small boys to chalk the numerals on everything in sight the day you open your advertising campaign, or have snipes printed hearing the figures.

The Story: Don Graham, ruined by the man who stole his wife from him, and sent to jail on false evidence, is known as the Grouch to the men in the surveying party he joins when he comes from jail. They turn him away when they discover that he is an ex-convict, and he gets a job as caretaker of a club house on the edge of the Okfeneke Swamp, once the hunting ground of pirates and their helpless women victims, and still populated by their descendants. One of the women appeals to Don for refuge from the tribe, and he shields her. His uncle, dying, leaves his fortune to Don, who marries Corinne, the Okfeneke girl, and goes to take possession of his heritage. When the husband finding of his wife and the man she married, and a double tragedy is narrowly averted by awakened love.

The war is over—and many other things besides!

Each capitulation means the opening of a new market.

The American film exporters have "carried on" during the war.

Are they prepared for peace?

Read the next issue of the International Section.
To see the characters of a famous novel come to life upon the screen is a tremendous thing!

There, alive, in flesh and blood, is the hero, or heroine, whose exploits you followed breathlessly upon the printed page.

The beloved characters of these romances find a new and rich lease of life in the talent of the equally beloved stars of Paramount and Artcraft, —foremost in their world as the fiction-characters in theirs,

—as superbly directed in their actions as were those they portray,

—and doubly fascinating because touched with all the warmth and light of life.
ALL SET FOR AFTER-THE-WAR BUSINESS

Robertson-Cole Company Completing Arrangements Which Seem Destined to Make Them Important Factor in Distributing Film, Not Only Abroad but Also in This Country.

"The American photoplay will dominate the world after the war ends," declared an official of the department of moving pictures of the Robertson-Cole Company. "The motion picture made in the United States leads the world in artistic and entertaining qualities—and has led for a long time. It has simply needed good business methods to bring our films to the world.

"Believing this thoroughly, we are laying our plans for a tremendous business in Europe and Asia to follow the cessation of hostilities. Our plans are not based upon idle speculation. The Robertson-Cole Company has long been one of the biggest exporting concerns in this country, and for years has maintained offices throughout the Far East and Europe—in London, Sydney, Calcutta, Bombay, Singapore and Rangoon. The demand of photoplays led the Robertson-Cole Company to enter the film exporting business. Then, finding that, in order to obtain pictures of established value, it was necessary to be able to handle them for the entire world, including the United States, Robertson-Cole added a domestic department. This was another step in preparing for the after-the-war avalanche of business. Thus the Robertson-Cole Company now handles the world market."

"It can safely be said that no organization has caused such widespread discussion and interest in the cinema world as has the Robertson-Cole Company. In rapid succession within the past few weeks have come announcements that Robertson-Cole will handle for the entire world, including the United States, the National Film Corporation's eight Billie Rhodes pictures and series of Henry B. Walthall features, besides looking after all National Film Corporation interests. The National is to make a big super-feature, which the Robertson-Cole concern is to distribute next spring. Deals have also been closed whereby J. Warren Kerrigan pictures and twelve Scenario craft productions will be sold by them throughout the world, except the United States, while Robertson-Cole have secured for the entire world, including this country, the series of eight William Desmond pictures to be produced by Jesse D. Hampton, and Martin Johnson's remarkable "Cannibals of the South Seas."

The first Billie Rhodes picture for foreign distribution is "The Girl of My Dreams"; the initial Walthall photoplay is "And a Still Small Voice," while the first Scenario is "The Prodigal Wife." Of the eight subjects starring J. Warren Kerrigan, five are now being distributed in foreign lands by Robertson-Cole. These are "A Burglar for a Night," "A Dollar Bill," "103-X Gordon," "Prisoners of the Fines" and "The Drifters." Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" is expected to create a sensation abroad, particularly in England and Canada, because of the British ownerships of the savage South Seas islands.

Robertson-Cole Company is pre-eminently planning for after the war, its splendid organization is proving itself a world possibility to the successful marketing of productions in foreign territory in these troubled times. War-time conditions make efficient service an absolute necessity.

Robertson-Cole announce that their plans for a big after-the-war expansion will result in even further connections throughout the countries of Europe than are at present enjoyed by the organization.

RECORD DEAL FOR SOUTH AMERICA

David Wark Griffith's production, "Hearts of the World," pronounced the greatest of all cinematographic propaganda, is just reaching the Latin-American public. Though all of the other parts of the world with, of course, a few exceptions, have seen this feature, it was not for the Spanish and Portuguese-speaking nations of the western hemisphere to enjoy this spectacle until now. Indeed, when it was sold for the lower Americas, it was sold in one lump, and has since been parceled out on the territorial basis by the export house which secured it.

Gillespie Bros. & Co., of New York City, were the purchasers. A deal had been on for several months between Joseph M. de Aragon, department manager of the film of this large export house, and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which conducted the foreign selling activities of the Griffith feature; and the price stands as a record for any one film in Latin-America.

Never were the exhibition rights to a feature more eagerly contended for between various Latin-American territorial buyers than for "Hearts of the World." The news that Mr. Aragon was about to close for the selling rights of this production had not only become familiar to resident Latin-American buyers in Manhattan, Griffith found his way to film producers of South and Central America, the Antilles and Mexico. As a result, Mr. Aragon closed out the bulk of his territory the day that he took over the picture.

Marcel Morhange, the general manager of the New York Film Exchange of Buenos Aires, Argentina, who happened to be in New York city on a buying trip, purchased this production for Argentina, Uruguay and Paraguay. As a matter of fact, before Mr. Morhange arrived in the United States, L. H. Allen, his New York representative, had been on the job and made the necessary deposit with the Gillespie firm almost in advance of their having closed their contract with Famous Players.

Within an hour after closing the Argentinian deal, Mr. Aragon had also entered into a contract with Sr. Bernardo Herrera, member of the film of Pairoa y Herrera, of Chile, for a vast stretch of territory, including Chile, Colombia, Venezuela, Costa Rica, Honduras, Guatemala and Salvador. Mr. Herrera has been in New York on a buying mission for nearly a half year, and would have returned to his Chilean office long ago, had it not been for his desire to secure the projection rights for the Griffith production before returning to his headquarters.
UNION THEATRES, LTD., GET HOUSE

Suits Between Big Operating Companies and the Spencers Finally Settled by Defendants’ Withdrawal by Satisfactory Agreement—Wins Copyright Action—Australian Notes.

By Thomas R. Imrie.

Sydney, N. S. W., Australia, Sept. 25.—During the past four months the owners of the lease of the Lyceum Theatre, Sydney, had been involved in litigation in the courts, and in both cases judgments were delivered against Australasian Films, Ltd. and Union Theatres Ltd., the former holding the leases of the house. An appeal against the judgments came before the court again this week, and an interest in the case has been very great.

Australasian Films, Ltd. and Union Theatres, Ltd. alleged breaches of agreements with Cozens Spencer and his wife, Mrs. Spencer. The plaintiffs charged that Spencer, acting on behalf of his wife, had become interested in picture theatres in Brisbane and Newcastle, thus making a breach of a contract with the plaintiffs that he would not within ten years after September, 1911, at any place in the Commonwealth, or in New Zealand, be interested in or be interested in any picture theatre business. The defendant, Spencer denied that he had ever entered into any agreement, as alleged on behalf of himself or his wife.

At this stage it was announced in court that the case had been settled, the formal announcement being: “That Mr. and Mrs. Spencer have given up any of their respective interests to Union Theatres, Ltd., on terms satisfactory to all parties, and have agreed to withdraw from the film business for a long term of years.”

Mr. Hammond Miller, general manager of Union Theatres, Ltd., interviewed after the case, said: “We are all glad everything is settled amicably. If the case had been fought out in court the cost would have been enormous. Whichever side had won, the result would have been a very little to the benefit of either. The point has been, I think, been settled to the satisfaction of all the parties concerned.”

Judgment has been given on the appeal of the defendant in the suit of Edmund Finn against Humbert Pugliese. The suit was brought in the Police Court, Chief Judge in Equity, was one to restrain the alienation of a copyright in a cinematograph film portraying scenes which, it was alleged, were taken from the work. He had done so under an arrangement with the defendant, who subsequently exhibited the film in the course of his business under the name of “The Church and the Woman.” His honor granted an injunction restraining the exhibition of the picture and directed the forfeiture of the film.

Justice Gordon, who delivered the judgment of the court, said that upon a comparison of the two films it was clear that there was no resemblance between the films. There was no action for infringement of copyright. The order of the court was applicable to the question of infringement of not infringement was decided upon by Justice Street in the previous case. The court was therefore of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed.

H. G. Musgrove, general manager of Australasian Films, Ltd., disclosed that the present film position, denied the current rumor that there was any possibility of shortage and that further improvements were being made early in September. The trouble had been caused by congestion in the United States, and the Government enforced an inspection of every foot of film before export. The inspection naturally took up a good deal of time, and it had occurred, everything had been adjusted.

The Else Forsberg-Arcturus production, “The Statue of Liberty,” presented by the Elise Frozen Artcurs, Ltd., and held up by the Censor Board, who have not yet decided as to whether they will allow the picture to be shown.

A local film comedy, “Algie’s Romance,” produced by Leonard Doogood, is nearly ready for screening and will be released in a few weeks. To date Australian comedies have been somewhat of a failure, and, so far, at least, “Algie’s Romance” will not follow in the wake of its predecessors.

J. A. Lipman, chief of Quality Features, announced that his firm has secured the Australian rights to the Mutual film, “Damaged Goods,” which will arrive this month. The picture will be released during October the first of the Pyramid comedies, and will introduce them to Australian exhibitors on their arrival.

The news that J. C. Williamson, Ltd., had obtained the Australasian rights to D. W. Griffiths “Hearts of the World” caused satisfactory comment among exhibitors.

The following films have been announced for release:

By R. L. (Snowy) Baker, who made a very successful motion picture debut recently in “The Enemy Within,” again appears in pictures in a local production, “The Lady of the Picture House,” like its predecessor, is a “stunt” subject. Australasia’s noted athlete shows his abilities to great advantage. While the pilot is familiar, it has been given several new twists, and, altogether, the production is highly satisfactory, viewed from all points.

The Fox Film Corporation special feature, “Geopolitical Pictures,” released in Sydney this month, and is doing excellent business in several metropolitan theatres. Cecil DeMille has employed Madge Moore in her original part of Lizzie Stel- fel and Harry Thomas in the chief male role. The production opens here November 19, when the film will be presented at the Sydney Town Hall.

Australasian Films, Ltd. are doing some advance advertising for “Florence’s Crusaders,” which will open up in Sydney Town Hall for a special season under the auspices of the local Federation. They have found very enthusiastic audiences here, and, in view of the interest shown in Australia, there is every reason to assume that “Florence’s Crusaders” should be popular.

American Carbons in Isle of Malta.

The little island of Malta has just received shipment of Speer carbons, said them through the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, who control the foreign distribution of this well known motion picture product. This shipment is said to be the first one of American carbons that has ever been received in Malta.

GOVERNMENT CENSORSHIP IN CEYLON

British Crown Colony to Appoint Official Board in Which Educational and Police Departments Will Be Represented—Interesting Film Notes from India.

By B. S. Banerjee.

The Government of Ceylon, a British crown colony, has at point iles to establish a board of censorship for cinema films. The Edu- cational and Police departments will be representatives of this censor board. The censorship boards should be similarly repre- sented. I would also have independent Indian gentleman on them.

A fire in the godowns of the Asiatic Cinéma Co. of Calcutta recently destroyed films to the value of 5,000 Rupees.

At the Albion Theater, the serial story, “The Secret of the Submarine” has been released. The second episode in this serial will be started very shortly. At the moment of writing its not certain whether further chapters in this serial will be released. The serial, “The Square Girl,” “The Blind Man,” “Blind Man’s Bluff,” “The Queen of the Desert,” and “The Last of the Mohicans” have been released. The serials are not of the order of the more popular serials. The authorities of the Cornwallis Thea- tre have exhibited “Heart of Gavroche,” “Tragedy of Morro,” “Jealous of Tomor- row,” and “The Tramp.” They have completed the exhibition of the serial, “The Voice of the Wind,” and are now screen- ing “The Tyndale House.” They have also screened two Hindu films, viz., “Karna Varna and “Jasmine.” These two films are very truthful and do not enhance the reputation of a respectable house.

Mr. E. D. DeCarle has recently opened the Picture House of Calcutta, of which Messrs. B. D. Brothers are lessees. He has remodelled it in parts and introduced various innovations. The pictures are now being projected on a pupa wall screen, and the four anna seats have been abolished. Mr. DcCarle has opened his house with the sensational Drury Lane drama, “The Whip,” which drew crowded houses for several days in succession. Among other films, which has been screened, we may mention “Jean the Woman,” “Com- edy of Nature,” “The Mischief Maker” and “The Fire.”

In this connection I should state that Mr. Ducas has just issued a rather coloured exploitation of “Bijou” Theatre incident, referred to in a previous letter. I quote the following from his letter of opinion, “The ‘Kayak,” a vernacular daily of Calcutta: “This prohibition was made by the man- ager of the ‘Kayak’ Theatre, a week or two before I had resigned my control of that house of amusement. There is no such prohibi- tion, in fact, in the ‘Kayak’ Theatre, the Picture House, and I am always pleased to see my Indian patrons there in their thousands. They delight in the theatre, and object themselves—and indeed they have always done—with propriety. This explana- tion is based on the fact that I have no such intolerable in my house. There is already so much misunderstanding. In this connec- tion, I should state that many of my Theatre Royal, of Calcutta, continues to pursue its modest course along. Among the films, we have seen there, mention may be made of "The Flash of Emerald," "Will Power" and "Temper." The official war films were screened here for several days in succession.

The authorities of the Calcutta Empire have arranged to screen "Winning a Continent," shortly.

The Lahore Empire people have shown "Vendetta," Pathe’s History of Great War and "Old Folks at Home," and are screening "Crimson Stain Mystery," to huge crowds.

The Madras Wellington is screening "Panopla." I trust Mr. Madan will arrange to screen it in one of his theatres in Calcutta.

The Arya Cinema of Poona has shown "The Hidden Hand" and will screen "The Married Wife" shortly. The following films have been shown at the Bombay Imperial: "The Unknown Woman," "Streets of Illusion," "The Little Patriot," and the serial "The Hidden Hand." The Bombay Empire people have screened "Crooked Romance," "An Artist’s Honour," "Bijou Romance," "The Barrier," "Convict 993," "Over the Hill" and "Romeo and Juliet."

The Cinema Precious (Bombay) is screening "The Secret Kingdom" to crowded houses.

At the New Alexandras, "Sirens of the Sea," "Tide of Life," "Her Soul’s Inspiration," "Torment" and "Eagle’s Nest" have been screened.

The authorities of the Kohinoor (Kara-chi) have shown "Straight Shooting," "Sunshine Bride" and "26,800 Leagues Under the Sea."

War loan rallies have taken place in all the leading theatres of Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Lahore, and Delhi and elsewhere, and huge sums have been realized for a good cause.

The little bioscope theatre of Murree Hills, the Kohinoor of Benares, the Paladium of Jubulpur, and the Secondrabad Cinema are doing well.

The following extract from the report of the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, concerning the year 1916-1917, will be read by my readers with interest: "All theatres and bioscopes were regularly visited. The exhibition of sixteen films was prohibited in and twenty films objectionable portions were deleted. During the year a bazaar of censors was established by each separate management showing cinematograph films is Calcutta. I desire to acknowledge the courtesy and assistance given me by the European Association and by the Calcutta Trades Association in forming these bodies. The censors are all due to those gentlemen who have given so much of their time to the task of censoring." Comments on the foregoing are superfluous.

Foreign Sales Record

Below appears a partial list of sales which indicates the American productions disposed of from New York City and the exclusive rights in purchases. As this tabulation is a new idea among exporters, many of these folk were inclined to indifference in respect making these announcements in this issue. Such reports as appear, however, will unquestionably serve as the crystal around which all future exporters’ monthly sales activities will precipitate, commencing with our

The Export Business Gallery

The exporters of the moving picture industry are the globe-trotters of the industry. That familiarity with conditions in countries other than the one which they may be calling home for the present, which is so essential to their business success, gives them an added interest to the observer who is examining the personalities behind any enterprise, since the personalities, after all, are the things which make for either success or failure in any undertaking.

The Export & Import Film Company, Inc., is the name on the entrance door at the spacious suite of offices in the Godfrey Building at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York.

Ben Blumenthal and Lou Auerbach are the men who keep the wheels going round. Theirs are the personalities back of the business which have made it for its present success and are the promise for its future. Both of them are almost as well known in film circles in London, Paris, Rome, Barcelona, Petrograd and South America as in the United States.

Mr. Blumenthal's connection with the moving picture industry dates back to the early days, and some of the developments which he has not only witnessed but in which he has played an important role are very interesting. Under his direction, it is claimed, moving pictures were first played in legitimate theatres in Europe, a policy which antagonized the American plan of exploiting big features which is now so common. With these big pictures in Europe, for the first time in the history of the industry, pretentious musical settings by big symphony orchestras were provided. Some time later, when big reel features of American manufacture had become popular in the States, Mr. Blumenthal pioneered with these pictures in a number of the European countries where productions of this nature had to be almost rammed down the audiences' throats. In a similar manner Mr. Blumenthal also introduced cartoon moving pictures throughout the whole foreign to the United States.

Mr. Auerbach, whose white hair and big-rimmed glasses are his marks of international recognition and association with Mr. Blumenthal in these earlier days in Europe when the firm's principal offices were in London, Paris, Rome, Berlin, and their film careers have run pretty closely together. He was with Mr. Blumenthal and other exhibitors abroad long before the present war when their biggest enterprise, the one that placed moving pictures in European legitimate theatres for the first time was undertaken. The picture was "Quo Vadis," that remarkable Cines production which, immediately following its European success, made a fortune for the American film operator who handled it in this country.

The story of this deal, insofar as it involves Mr. Blumenthal, is a bit of film romance. Mr. Blumenthal very frankly confesses that at that time he knew little or nothing about moving pictures. "Quo Vadis" was shown him by Cines officials after vain attempts had been made to place it throughout the world at prices very much lower than the one at which Mr. Blumenthal quickly bought. In an effort to get his money back, the well-known American film man then operating from Paris, set territorial prices which buyers laughed at as absurdly high.

Confident that the public demand would prove strong enough to justify the prices asked, Mr. Blumenthal undertook to exhibit the feature in important cities in each territory in the best legitimate theatres obtainable, either on a rental or sharing basis. Agents were sent to the larger cities in Europe and South America, and the picture was exhibited with tremendous success, with the result that territorial rights were sold later without any trouble.

Barcelona, Spain, proved a gold mine. More or less obscure cities in the Balkans showed a picture strength that was surprising, and in South America, after the picture had played a remarkable engagement in Buenos Aires, the rights were purchased by a big operator, still in business, at many times the price at which it had originally been offered him—and even at this advanced price. "Quo Vadis" established a record for this buyer which has never been surpassed, and probably never will be.

Because of their experiences in the foreign fields, it would seem only natural for Messrs. Blumenthal and Auerbach and their associates to achieve a full measure of success when they transferred their activities from foreign film centers to New York when the time had arrived that the American-made pictures, because of their technique, had established themselves as the most popular in the world. Their dealings with buyers, exchange men, and exhibitors everywhere—whether in France, Spain, Russia, the Balkans, or in South America—have been practically the dealings of one buyer, exchange man, or exhibitor with another, since Mr. Blumenthal and his associates have faced the same problems as each of these classes in their previous operations.
French Production Seems in Grievous Condition

IN the issue of October 4 of Le Cinema, a trade paper published in Paris, there is a very interesting story of a meeting that took place in the Chamber of Commerce of Graphite Francaise, a body resembling our National Association of the Moving Picture Industry. The meeting was held in Paris, and its purpose was to devise ways and means to keep the French industry alive.

Charles Pathé was the principal speaker, and he took a very gloomy view of the situation, going so far as to declare that French production was showing a tendency to disappear. "German films," he said, "thanks to the large amount of capital invested in its moving picture enterprises, is controlling the exploitation in practically all European countries, while competition with America and Italy has become so keen that it hinders the production of French films."

Mr. Pathé believes the only way in which French producers can overcome their present difficulties is by getting the government to impose prohibitive duties on all foreign negatives and by establishing a percentage basis of renting.

Edmond Benoit-Lévy, on behalf of the League of Cinematography, declared that it was impossible to accept the disappearance of French Pictures from the home markets and the markets of the world, and that all means should be used to bring them back on a commercial basis.

"Our League would fail to do its duty," said Mr. Benoit-Lévy, "if it did not come to tell you that French films must live! At all costs, we should prevent the movement being discontinued until the end of the war, a possibility that some producers have already admitted; moreover, we fear that if French film production is allowed to fall into a lethargy, it may not be possible to awake it again later on."

"It is true that in these times a good production of average value and importance cannot repay its cost of manufacture and expense of exploitation? Is the fault that of waste and extravagance in the handling of the essential negative costs not reduced by means of a unified local control? Is it true that everything has been done and is being done to promote the distribution of French films in England and the United States?"

We protest emphatically against a report we have received to the effect that some theatres no longer intend to handle French films, though the American public are demanding American features. This is a heresy!

"We are willing to resign ourselves even to some American exploitation and to be given more American than French screen entertainment, but we cannot permit that no market whatever be retained, for our purpose no one is satisfied with the present French picture industry.

The via crucis of the French motion picture industry during the past four years has been felt and deplored throughout the world, and particularly in the United States.

Until American productions reached the present high pinnacle of merit, the presents of the American films were generally looked upon by the French as a kind of stimulus in the world, and particularly in the United States."

The Foreign Sales Record published in this issue of the International Section, and which will be one of its features during the month, is bound to be useful to the exporters in this country and the buyers abroad. It represents the only practical way of keeping the foreign dealers informed of the selling activities of the New York market and in touch with the firms controlling the rights on brands and pictures, so that they may steer away from wild offers and unscrupulous traders here and abroad.

We hope the New York exporters will see that it is to their advantage to keep this record as complete and up-to-date as possible, and that they will cooperate with us by furnishing all the necessary information.

* * *

Now that the war has been concluded, every reason to believe that the war has been brought to a close, the exporters should start without delay an agitation to secure their position, which they have been laboring during the past year, particularly in matters relating to countries outside of the zone of war, such as the Orient and Latin America.
GIVES DETAILS ON PLAZA TRANSACTION

Inter-Ocean Film Corporation Also Acquires "The Transgressor," Second Production by "The Victim" People and Make Record Territorial Sale With It—British Sale of "Inside the Lines" Through London

Paul H. Cromelin, president of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, the largest of the present-day producers of subject-length subjects, has recently acquired from the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, from E. O. Horkheimer, the following: "The Angel Child," with Kathleen Clifford; "The Law That Divides" (Miss Saunders); "The Locksmith" (Miss King); "Playing the Game" (Miss King); "Mistaken Identity" (Miss King); "Petticoats and Politics" (Miss King); "The Girl Angelic" (Miss King); "The Locked Heart," with Gloria Joy; "I Wanted, a Brother," starring Jov; "Midnight Burglar" (Miss Joy); "No Children Wanted" (Miss Joy); "Miss Mischief Maker" (Miss Joy); "Miss Grow-Up" (Miss Joy); "Sunny Jane," with Jackie Saunders; "Wild Cat" (Miss Saunders); "Betty Be Good" (Miss Saunders); "Bat the Fixer" (Miss Saunders); "Sugar" (Miss Saunders); "Jackie, the Hayden" (Miss Saunders).

Inter-Ocean has also acquired "The Transgressor," the second production by the makers of "The Victim," now scoring a great success in the London theaters where it was placed by Inter-Ocean. It is of special interest to Catholics, as was "The Victim," and buyers are urged to get it before audiences of that denomination come through the local churches.

The Inter-Ocean expects "The Transgressor" to meet with the same popularity its predecessor, "The Victim." The special is in nine reels, from the story by O. E. Goebel and Conde B. Pollen, under Ludwig G. B. Erb's direction. It has been twelve hours after the Inter-Ocean had signed the contract for the foreign distribution, that Miss King has now reached London. Miss King, of the Inter-Ocean sales staff, has sold the production for Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, and Mexico, establishing quite a record for speed. The sale also took in the following Inter-Ocean subjects: "Wishing Miss Boss," "Hunting Big Game in the Frozen North," and "Eight Bells."

John H. Taylor, managing director of the London Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, who recently returned to the English capital after a visit to this country, has just reported to the headquarters in British rights, to Granger's Exclusives. Some time ago this sale was announced as being under discussion. Schlesinger, of the Inter-Ocean, has been buying quite a few pictures recently, and this sale, which was reached by Schlesinger, will probably be the first of many to be made by this branch of the Inter-Ocean office, but this statement was in error.

HOWELLS GETS NEW PICKFORDS

Super-Productions Made for First National Under Latest Sensational Contract To Be Distributed by Well Known Exporter—To Take U. P. T. Output and Anita Stewart Series as Well

News of such tremendous importance, from the commercial angle, that it vied with the announcement of practically ending the world war, has been "breaking" daily in the export film colony in New York for the past week. And most of this important news has concerned the activities of David P. Howells.

Saturday afternoon Mary Pickford left New York City for Los Angeles to sign a contract with First National for the exhibition of the first of the three super-productions which she has contracted to make for First National under its exclusive Exclusives' distribution during the ensuing twelve months, in consideration of the fact that she has been paid a moving picture star, if, indeed, it is not the largest salary which has ever been offered in any line of endeavor for personal services. Before Miss Pickford left she also became a party to a contract, by virtue of which David P. Howells will handle these three big pictures—as well as any others which she may make for First National on later contracts which may be signed—in all markets other than the United States and Canada.

A few days before Mr. Howells had contracted with the United Picture Theatres of the United States for the exhibition of its productions in countries other than the United States and Canada for an extended period. And at the same time, the same American exporter had secured the foreign rights on all of the new Anita Stewart pictures, which are to be made under the supervision of Louis Mayer, the well known Boston moving picture operator.

Because of the importance of this new arrangement whereby Miss Pickford transfers her allegiance from the production company to which she has been identified to the new organization which has announced a policy for exhibiting the film—of American moving picture productions, Mr. Howells' contract for the Mary Pickford productions may be the most important he has ever signed. The first of these Mary Pickford productions which he will be able to offer his patrons in the foreign markets will be a picturization of "Daddy Long-Legs," which, it is believed by Mr. Howells, will be a tremendous hit. Marshall Nellan, with whom this foremost star has made some of her most notable successes, is promised for delivery in New York sometime next February.

The United Picture Theatres' output which Mr. Howells' company is esti-ated to amount to about forty productions the first year, and will include features from all of the foreign territories, was turned over to Florence Reed and other well known screen stars. The first feature, entitled "The Long Legged Doll," which is being directed by Dustin Farnum in a powerful story by Zane Grey, is ready for the American market. Howells is now offering it for sale in the foreign territories. Indeed, the sale of Argentine, Uruguayan, Paraguayan and Chile for all the United P. T. product through the Howells office has already been announced.

The Anita Stewart pictures are to be eight in number, four of them to be directed by Lola Weber, "Virtuous Vixen," the first picture directed by George Loane Tucker and is being splendidly received at advance trade showings. "In Old California," the latest version of the American play by the same title, which was responsible for two hundred fortunes in the show business in the earlier years, has been chosen as the second picture of the series.

A Long Time Reputation for Reliability

OUR SAFETY and SATISFACTION in your dealings in the export field, whether the commodity be steel rails or moving picture film, are guaranteed by the integrity and reliability of those through whom you deal. The exporter is verily as important an arm of your enterprise as your auditing department. A mistake in selecting the wrong exporter is a more serious handicap than a defalcation on the part of your bookkeeper.

ONE COMPELLING FACTOR that we can justifiably lay stress on is our experience in the domain of export which has extended over four score years—eighty and one to be explicit.

Indeed we have been specializing in our line—in your line, if you'll allow, ever since we were

FOUND IN 1837

Each year since has brought its train of individual developments. We have incorporated them all, adapted each in turn unto our special requirements and converted them into advantages for our clients. Accordingly, as our patrons desired, we installed a motion picture department into our organization. We offer service plus—a service, the like of which no other exporter can undertake to give.

Just What You Want
Just the Way You Want It
Just When You Want It

Ours is the business of assuming responsibility for the profitable distribution of motion pictures in markets foreign to the country of their manufacture. And we believe that to profitably distribute, the producer must profit, the territorial rights buyer must profit, the exhibitor must profit, and we must profit.

The one-time sale merely for the purpose of “getting out from under” can make no real money for any going business organization that hopes to continue to go!

That’s why we aim constantly to provide “just what you want, just the way you want it, just when you want it.”

That’s why the big end of our business is the buying, and not the selling, end.

The prospective customer’s needs and the requirements of his business were carefully considered before our product was assembled for his inspection!

THE NEW MARY PICKFORD SUPER-PRODUCTIONS about to be made for the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit will be available for the world, exclusive of the United States and Canada, through this office as the result of a recently signed contract of tremendous importance.

ALL OTHER FIRST NATIONAL PRODUCTS

(Excepting the Chaplin releases) numbering about twenty-six a year and comprising only such subjects as have been prejudged sure-fire successes by the foremost American exhibitors are also embraced in the Howells catalogue.

You can make these pictures the backbone of your business!
ANITA STEWART IN EIGHT NEW PICTURES

Big pictures of established value

Eight de luxe features will be produced by the National Film Corporation of America, his coming year, with Billie Rhodes, christened by T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles, "the screen's daintiest star." The initial picture has just been completed, "THE GIRL OF MY DREAMS," of which the Los Angeles "Examiner" said—

Motion picture historians will chronicle the debut of Billie Rhodes as a full-fledged film star at Tally's yesterday as a complete success, historically, pictorially and financially. There has been greater premieres in this city, perhaps ("The Birth of a Nation," and "Hearts of the World", for instance), but none more enthusiastic from the audience's viewpoint, or more laudatory to a screen luminary.

Henry B. Walthall, the undisputed premier dramatic artist of the screen, will appear in a series of eight special photoplays produced by the National Film Corporation of America. The first "AND A STILL SMALL VOICE," contains every element that made Walthall famous in such productions as "The Birth of a Nation" and D. W. Griffith's picture "The Great Love:" No portrayal before or since has so endeared a player to the American public as Walthall's "little Colonel" in "The Birth of a Nation."

The Cannibal pictures, photographed at the risk of life, according to Frederick James Smith, in the October issue of the Motion Picture Classic, have "ten times the grip of an average photoplay," S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres in New York, says "The Johnson pictures will be welcomed by any intelligent exhibitor as a break in the terrible rut and routine of the so-called dramatic or comedy feature and besides will be a good tonic for any first-class theatre, and if properly exhibited will bring a big financial return."

They are an extraordinary feature attraction.

William Desmond

Eight new and distinctive pictures are to be produced by Jesse D. Hampton with William Desmond in the stellar roles. The first of these big productions will be ready for release in January. No screen star has the youth, the magnetism, the virility, the force, the romantic charm of Desmond. All these qualities will shine out of his new subjects.

J. Warren Kerrigan as a young versatile player portrays the best in American life. His new pictures produced by Jesse D. Hampton, from big stories by prominent authors, will all be clean in conception, clean in production and powerful in theme. Five of Kerrigan's latest triumphs of the screen are ready for immediate release. They are "A Burglar for a Night", "A Dollar Bid", "Prisoners of the Pines", "Three X Gordon" and "The Drifters." All territory including Canada, except United States.

"The Prodigal Wife," a feature of distinction, is the first of twelve annual exceptionally dramatic photoplay productions to be released by Screencraft Pictures. "The Prodigal Wife" is from a story masterpiece by Edith Barnard Delano, published by Harper's and has been produced with a notable cast headed by Miss Lucy Cotton and Miss Mary Boland. All territory, including Canada, except United States.

GERMANY SIGNED THE ARMISTICE but not on November 7th, as most of the newspapers erroneously announced. It all reminds me of the reports that come to Inter-Ocean about new films released on the American market. Ninety-nine per cent. of them are declared to be "just the thing for the foreign market" but Inter-Ocean doesn't recommend, much less buy, them until its entire staff has had a chance to look 'em over at the Inter-Ocean Building projection room. When Inter-Ocean does buy a picture, you may be sure it isn't on the strength of premature information, but because our staff of world-market experts have decided that the film WILL MAKE MONEY FOR YOU. If you are a genuine buyer of American films for export, I would advise you to write me to-day for "THE INTER-OCEAN GLOBE," the only monthly bulletin about films published by any film exporting firm. Projection Lenses have long been considered standard equipment by the leading motion picture machine manufacturers. The product of America's greatest lens specialists, who have been producing high grade lenses of one type or another for 65 years, they are unexcelled in the clear-cut, evenly illuminated pictures they produce on the screen.

Because of the demand made upon our resources for some of the Government's most important military needs, we are unable to make projection lens deliveries for the present. While proud to be of such service in this world crisis, we shall expect to serve our other patrons even more efficiently than before, when the world is again at peace.

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship
Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as odious to the Exhibitor's audience as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening
Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

Specializing on quality instead of quantity is our unvarying policy adopted years ago.

And yet, our enormous capacity, and splendid organization, permit us to handle millions of feet—perfect developing and printing—with great dispatch.

While others talk “cheap” we prefer to emphasize “quality” and render reel service.

All prints screen-inspected and known to be as good as the negative permits, before shipped.

There are reasons—Come and see them.
Projectionist Ray says

"If things don't seem to break right for you—if you're drawing deuces instead of aces—if there's no 'tin' in the tin box and, worst of all, your patrons are likely to make you shut up your shop 'cause they've shut down on it, why just buck up and take stock.

"You'll probably find that you are shy a POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH. The sooner you get one, the sooner you'll be projecting pictures RIGHT and having the town folks crowding through that door of yours.

"What's that? Why do I say POWER'S CAMERAG-GRAP H? I've worked 'em for years and I never saw one fail on this ACID TEST.

Your new serial, "The Iron Test," which I am now running in my theatre, appears to be the best yet. And it will have to go some, too, to beat "The Fighting Trail," Vengeance and the Woman," "The Woman in the Web" and "A Fight For Millions."

The public has learned to expect something big when Vitagraph serials are announced, and as a result my audiences from the first episode of "The Iron Test" have been large and enthusiastic.

Seven Great Patronage Builders

George K. Spoor went to great expense and unusual care to produce seven of the most artistic as well as most humorous comedy-dramas on the screen. Every one is an ultra feature starring the popular comedian, Taylor Holmes. You can’t afford to miss one of these. Have a Taylor Holmes night once each week and watch your patronage grow by leaps and bounds. These are not war pictures.

This Double Page Announcement, the most important announcement ever made in the entire history of animated news reels, conveys the biggest message of consolidation ever printed. It heralds the consolidation of the popular UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY—UNIVERSAL CURRENT EVENTS—MUTUAL SCREEN TELEGRAM and HEARST INTERNATIONAL NEWS, making by far the most gigantic combination of news gathering forces and animated news reels the World of motion pictures has ever known. The forces of the former HEARST-SELG NEWS—plus the former HEARST PHOTOGRAPHIC forces of the HEARST PATHE NEWS news reels backed by the huge forces of the

November certainly was typically record-breaking thrilling Parisian after and released. Parts of this, in its battle ablaze with a vibrant, colorful, spectacular production that is in full color. the children, the fights between gangs of water rats and the regeneration of the hero. You will recall the success of this picture when it was first released—and book it with the assurance of turn-away business.

The Great Nine

William Farnum in "FIGHTING BLOOD"

This picture has played a greater number of days in all parts of the world than any other that William Fox has released. It is a thrilling lumber camp and mining town story of a battling clergyman—the man who came back after unjust imprisonment. It has swift, tense action and a popular theme and is typically Farnum. It has done a record-breaking business and will repeat.

Theda Bara in "THE SERPENT"

It is Miss Bara’s opinion that this is her greatest picture. Hundreds of exhibitors are of the same opinion. The big battle scenes—the bear hunt—the surprising climax—all contribute to its wonderful popularity. The production was directed by Raoul A. Walsh, and among those in the cast is George Walsh, one of the greatest favorites in film land today.

Raoul A. Walsh’s First William Fox Picture "THE REGENERATION"

A great, vibrant, colorful, spectacular production that is ablaze with thrill, action and romance. You will recall the big scenes of the steamboat fire, the rescue of the children, the fights between gangs of water rats and the regeneration of the hero. You will recall the success of this picture when it was first released—and book it with the assurance of turn-away business.

The Great Nine

William Farnum in "THE BROKEN LAW"

Love, romance and conquest are the themes of this colossal picture of the free and easy life of the highway. It is a thoroughly typical William Farnum subject and has a truly great cast, ranking in all respects among the most successful and satisfactory pictures that William Fox has released. It will be one of the biggest revenue producers of THE GREAT NINE.

Theda Bara in "UNDER TWO FLAGS"

The picturized version of Ouida’s most famous novel. The most popular production in which Theda Bara has appeared in a role not of a vampire. It is a rapid-fire picture with a 100 per cent. record for box-office hits. Undoubtedly the best photographic version ever made of a big stage success. On past performances alone it should be played to win in a walk.

"INFIDELITY"

Based on George Ohnet’s Novel "Dr. Rameau"

A great melodrama, throbbing with sobs and tears, rippling with comedy and tense with human interest—a wonderful all-star cast, including Frederick Perry, Dorothy Bernard, Jean Sothern and Kittens—admittedly the best production of its sort ever released by William Fox or any other producer.

Valeska Suratt in "THE SOUL OF BROADWAY"

The GREAT NINE would not be complete without this remarkable picture with its wonderful aeroplane scenes and fashion parade at Atlantic City, and its exposure of the night life of Broadway. It was one of the box-office sensations of three years ago and will be as great a sensation today, because it is the type of thrilling picture in which public interest never wanes.

Theda Bara in "THE DARLING OF PARIS"

This, perhaps, is the most gorgeous, costly and spectacular production of THE GREAT NINE series. It is based on "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the world-famous novel by Victor Hugo, is Parisian in atmosphere and notable for the thrilling action and scenes of breathless suspense that spell profits.

William Farnum in HOODMAN BLIND

Like "Infidelity," this production has been revised. It is founded on the famous stage success of the same name, "Hoodman Blind," by William Barratt. It is one of the most powerful, thrilling and dramatic photoplays ever produced. It certainly shows William Farnum at his best, and will be one of the foremost box-office successes of THE GREAT NINE.

Reasons to Book Now

They are the biggest box-office successes that William Fox has produced in the last five years—and he has many record successes.

They are the pictures on which William Fox's reputation as a producer was founded.

They are known to exhibitors and the public everywhere as the biggest and the best stories shown on the screen—the pick of the great stock of 250 Fox negatives.

They will attract millions of persons who did not patronize picture houses when these pictures were first released.

They present in minor roles more of the famous stars of today than now are seen in a year's average pictures.

They can be rented reasonably—in them you don't have to pay the top rental based on new stars with inflated reputations.

7 They are re-edited and retitled, shortened to 4,500 feet, crowded with action in every foot, and newly printed—are 1919 editions of big successes.

8 They have swept the world by storm—hold all records for big box-office receipts—are proved, unquestioned box-office successes.

9 They are released as a group on an independent basis—first come, first served!

There will be a tomorrow and it is being made today.

That’s the Fox Idea—that today has achieved its purpose only when it has become a successful yesterday.

And this Fox Idea is backed by a lot of successful yesterdays,—in five years it has become the dominating Idea in the moving picture business,—because it has been made YOUR Idea—at your service.

William Fox is planning for your tomorrows with far-seeing judgment and exact knowledge of what the public wants,—of what the public, by liberal paying, has proved it wants.

But the Fox Idea does not stop at giving the public the productions it wants—it goes further in its service to you—much further.

For the Fox Idea includes also a system of Fox offices covering the wide world,—a vast distributing system that reaches out eagerly to serve you through personal representatives of William Fox, who always are at your instant call.

Thus William Fox INSURES service to you. Through these service offices, and the wealth of resources these personal representatives possess, you are promptly provided the pictures your public wants and given unstinted assistance in developing their box office possibilities.

Attractive lithographs that are the work of America’s ablest designers and painters,—elaborate press books that present profitable advertising and publicity campaigns,—an infinite variety of cuts and mats that carry your picture’s appeal wherever they are printed,—artistic lobby displays that attract swarms of willing dollars;—it is service such as this—and more—service to you and, through you, to the public—that constitutes the Fox Idea.

Profit today from Fox pictures and Fox service.

Martin Johnson

Really the most interesting movies of our month weren't dramatic at all—but Martin Johnson's fascinating tour of the Cannibal isles of the South Pacific. Aside from being an intelligently photographed study of the various races of the remote Pacific isles, where meatless days aren't observed, the pictures have the lure of a Joseph Conrad tale. Here romance and adventure stood beside the camera-man. Johnson and his wife cruised alone among the islands, once almost meeting their death and finally getting away with a remarkable series of films. Mrs. Johnson, by the way, can go 'round to the movie studios any day and get a regular position. She is the dramatic suspense of the series, which we guarantee to have ten times the grip of an average photoplay.

OFFICE OF THE MANAGING DIRECTOR

Mr. Martin Johnson,
249 W. 40th St.,
New York City.

My dear Mr. Johnson:

It has just come to my attention that you are about to release your Cannibal Island pictures of the South Sea as a whole feature instead of serially.

I want to assure you that I think this is a very wise move, first because it is really a feature in itself and will be welcomed by any intelligent exhibitor as a break in the terrible rut and routine of the so-called dramatic or comedy feature and besides will be a good tonic for any first class theatre, and if properly exhibited will bring a big financial return and furthermore will do a great deal for the exhibitors' institution. The possibilities that lend itself for both publicity and general interest have not been surpassed by any offering in the past year.

Wishing you every good luck. I am

Very sincerely yours,

When Distress Calls the Red Cross Answers "HERE!"

NOW the Red Cross calls! The annual Christmas Roll Call of members will echo throughout the land the week of December 16th to 23rd.

Membership in the Red Cross now is more than duty—it is an honored privilege, and an evidence of loyalty. When that Roll is called, your conscience, your sense of right and justice, your love of country and your devotion to the highest ideals of unselfish service all suggest that you answer "HERE!"

All you need is a heart and a dollar—these entitle you to membership for one year.

When you wear your button, signifying that you are a member, you will not be asked to join again this year—it means that you have answered the Roll Call.

Join—be a Christmas member—but just join once.

Our soldiers and sailors look to the Red Cross for comforts. They have never been disappointed.

The Red Cross looks to you for the moral support of your membership. Answer "HERE!" when the Roll is called.

Gentlemen:

The Members of the Institute appreciated the opportunity of viewing your great film Picture entitled "Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief." Every chair in our Hall, seating about 2,400, was filled and many were unable to secure admission.

The Picture is an interesting and vivid portrayal of the History of Belgium and of her period of devastation and suffering.

In the course of the hour and three-quarters that the Picture was on the screen, I saw no one leave the Hall, a striking tribute to the interest aroused.

We are glad to be able to announce to our Members that two additional presentations of the Picture will be given.

Yours very truly,

To Our Patrons

It is not often that I permit myself to become enthusiastic to the extent of endorsing a film production, but the beauty and novelty of Mr. Maurice Tourneur’s latest spectacle, entitled “Woman,” compels me to proclaim it one of the most remarkable motion pictures I have ever seen.

It gives me pleasure to announce that this masterpiece will be shown at the Rivoli for the week beginning Sunday, October 27th.

The production will be given a musical and scenic setting worthy of its superlative merit.

Owing to the length and magnitude of the work, no additional pictorial feature other than the current release of the Creel Committee’s official allied war review will be shown on the program.

I earnestly urge every devotee of the motion picture to witness this latest example of Mr. Tourneur’s art.

Faithfully,

In a recent issue of an esteemed contemporary appears the statement that the leading exhibitors of Buenos Ayres are in the habit of passing a borrowed copy of their publication down the line until all had read it.

We happened to look up Buenos Ayres on our own subscription records and discovered that within that city were 30 picture men who could not wait for a borrowed copy of the WORLD, but had subscribed in order to get individual copies fresh from the mails.

We will gladly show this list of subscribers to any genuinely interested party. We don't print the names for obvious reasons. The Argentinian market, and every foreign market to be exact, is still a deep and dark secret to most American moving picture publications.

Even on the railroad trains of Argentina the MOVING PICTURE WORLD can be found.

HOW FOX ORGANIZED THE WAR DRIVE

What Head of Theatrical Team Created in a Fortnight in the Way of Human and Other Machinery to Extract the Dollars from New Yorkers’ Pockets

Just two weeks prior to November 11, the date set for the opening of the drive for the United War Work Campaign, John D. Rockerfeller, Jr., paid a signal tribute to the “infant” of amusement enterprises—the motion picture industry—by requesting William Fox to accept the post of chairman of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team. This, however, is not the first time that Mr. Fox has distinguished himself in connection with welfare work for our boys in the service, as his magnificent work in connection with the Red Cross, Knights of Columbus and Jewish Welfare drives is already well known.

With characteristic energy, Mr. Fox immediately sidetracked his private business and started to work wholeheartedly on the task of seeing that only the quota assigned to his team would be raised, but that it would be oversubscribed. George M. Cohen was appointed associate chairman, and headquarters consisting of about 15,000 square feet occupying one entire floor at 110 West Forty-second street secured.

An organization, which is a marvel of efficiency, was marshaled out and ready for business at the appointed time. About twenty-five different committees were appointed, consisting of men prominent in amusement circles, to handle the varied details of the work under the supervision of A. S. Kempner, who was appointed campaign director—such as auditor, treasurer, supply, war relics exhibit, victory ball, club activities, special features, exhibitors, co-operation, tickets, sports, benefits, outdoor advertising, publicity, speakers and reception committee.

Women’s Committee an Important One.

The largest, as well as one of the most interesting and important, committees, is the woman’s collection bureau. The duty of this organization, of which Miss May Upshaw, a woman of great executive ability, is the chairman, is the handling of the collections in 334 theaters and 185 of the principal restaurants in Greater New York. Enlisted in this work are over 6,000 women, who have been divided into squads consisting of ten to forty girls for each theatre. In addition, with each squad there is a bank clerk who assists in tallying the collections and arranging for their deposit in a designated bank.

Miss Upshaw has also selected a group of “Victory Girls,” who, clad in Grecian robes and with palms of victory, visit the principal hotels and theatres, as well as being present at the special affairs of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team, to assist in collections. This is practically every day during the drive, and includes a monster benefit at the Hippodrome, at which a notable aggregation of motion picture stars, vaudeville headliners and stage favorites appeared, and which netted $15,000; a concert at the Metropolitan Opera House in which Maggie Teyte, John McCormick and Jacques Thibaut appeared, and which raised $27,000, and in addition there was a football game at the Polo Grounds between Princeton and Camp Upton, a grand Victory Ball at the Hotel Astor, a boxing carnival at Madison Square Garden, with bouts between many of the most prominent, having in the ring a combined Friars’ Frolic and Lambs’ Gambol at the Metropolitan, which was notable for the large number of well-known actors of the speaking stage who participated. There were also during the entire period two great exhibitions of war relics at the First Field Artillery Armory in New York and Twenty-third Regiment Armory in Brooklyn.

Prominent Men Aid Mr. Fox.

In handling these special events, Mr. Fox was ably assisted by many well-known men who did splendid work, including Charles J. Harvey, of the special committee; Sam Harris and J. J. McCarthy, benefit committee; W. J. Moore and J. M. Welsh, outdoor advertising; Thaddeus Mitchell, publicity; Benjamm Kaye, treasurer; E. F. Albee, Hippodrome benefit.

To show what a tremendous organization was necessary for handling the various activities of this team, in addition to those previously mentioned, ten of the prominent officials of the Fox Film Corporation gave practically their entire time to this work. Altogether, nearly three hundred persons were busy at the headquarters, many working night and day in shifts, and, with the exception of some of the stenographers and clerks employed in clerical capacities, the work was performed entirely by volunteers. An idea of the scope of this organization may be gathered from the fact that it was necessary to install two telephone switchboards, with twenty-eight trunk lines and fifty extensions. The supply department sent out seventy-five thousand pledge cards, together with enormous quantities of reports, instructions and other literature to the theatres, and the office equipment of headquarters alone, not counting the district offices of the Women’s Collection Committee—forty in all—consisted of seventy-five flat-top desks and chairs, fifty typewriter desks and typewriters, together with several adding machines and comptometers.

All Reports Were in Triplicate.

An example of the thoroughness with which the entire work was handled is shown in the auditing department. In taking up the theatre collections after each performance reports were made in triplicate for each house. The captain of the team sent one to the auditor direct; the bank clerk assisting the captain sent the cash-collection to a designated bank, together with the duplicate report, and the bank the next morning reported the collection to the auditor, which was checked against the original report. Individual records were kept for each theatre, and by noon the previous day’s collection was tabulated and the total given to Mr. Fox, who reported it at the luncheon of the United War Work Committee at the Chamber of Commerce.

As an additional evidence of Mr. Fox’s effectiveness in war welfare work, at a dinner of the National Vaudeville Managers’ Association, after E. F. Albee had requested a subscription for a clubhouse for actors and secured $250,000, Mr. Fox made a short speech, and within five minutes succeeded in raising an additional $25,000 for the present war work drive.

After viewing this splendid organization an observer cannot help feel that the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team under William Fox’s leadership will not only reach its allotted quota, but that it will be greatly oversubscribed.

The Ball a Large Event.

One of the biggest events of the week’s war drive was the ball arranged by William Fox and his associate chairman, George M. Cohan, as the principal source of contributions from the theatrical section of the national movement. The Astor gold ballroom was packed from 11 o’clock Saturday evening until well into Sunday morning.

The stage contributed the entire entertainment, and from that branch of the profession came most of the crowd in attendance. Moving picture folk were there, and in plenty, contributing to the charm and colorful effect of the revel. The entertainment was furnished by a host of stage celebrities, Flo Ziegfeld, Jr., sending over from the New Amsterdam Roof two big “girl numbers” to fill the ballroom floor with action and pleasure. An attempt to mention those who were present, beside being out of all possibility, would present a roster of practically every theatrical person in the city last Saturday night. The dancing was frequently interrupted by “boosters” for the war fund, and the total result of the ticket sales at $11 “per,” plus donations and sales of flowers and favors, must have swelled the total for Team No. 28, headed by William Fox, by many thousands of dollars.

C. C. Pettijohn Host at Pleasant Noon Luncheon

T Rector’s Saturday noon, November 16. C. C. Pettijohn sounded the real note of the industry’s awakening when he re-established the very pleasant custom that had previously prevailed of giving luncheons to representatives of the trade press. When the lay-off came luncheons were submerged, and action and pleasantry was the first of what may be an indefinite series of “feed” complimentary to the newspaper folk.

The first meeting of Mutual with the Affiliated, as set forth in last week’s World, formed the occasion for Mr. Pettijohn to sound the dinner call. H. A. Bruk, who is still the still unnamed organization, and W. J. Clark, president thereof, expected to reach New York in time to join Mr. Pettijohn and the others at luncheon, but they were delayed, reaching town Monday, with the prospect of a busy and important week before them at Mutual’s former quarters, 1600 Broadway. W. A. V. Mack, who is to be general sales manager for the new organization, was on hand, and John Manheimer also was present. William A. Brady pulled up a chair and joined the party to the gratification of all concerned. Mr. Pettijohn gave a sincere and comprehensive talk, forecasting some of the plans he, himself, and his associates have resolved to work out, but voluntary censorship might better be called in that the authoritative announcements may come from Mr. Pettijohn when he is ready to submit them for publication.

Allan Rock, publicity promoter for the new organization, was also in the offing, “making” the tables in his stead to be welcomed by the members of the party in cordial acclaim. The Pettijohn luncheon was in every manner a success.

New York Exhibitors Hold Executive Meeting

T HE New York Local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League held an executive meeting at its offices, 727 Seventh avenue, on Friday afternoon, November 14. The all-important topic of discussion was the raising of funds for the operation of the League’s treasury, which is very much in need of finances to meet current expenses.

It was decided to hold a beefsteak dinner at Castle Cave on December 11 or 16, where final plans would be submitted for the holding of an entertainment and ball in combination with the exhibitors of Brooklyn and some other branch of the industry, by which a large reserve fund can be secured to finance the organization.

A committee of arrangements was appointed, consisting of Charles Steiner, Sol Coleman, William Hilkenmier, Charles Harris, E. Hartstall and Morris Needles, with power to act. The ball will probably be held at the Hotel Astor sometime in February. Lee A. Ochs will sit up chair and join the committee, to act in an advisory capacity, and promised to lend his assistance in any way he possibly can to make the affair a success.

The unexpected presence of Sam Trigger at the meeting was a happy surprise. He remained but a short time, and did not enter into any of the discussions.

The election in December for officers for the coming year was the next subject of debate. A committee was selected by the chair to prepare a slate for nominations. Strong pressure is being brought to bear upon Lee Ochs to accept the nomination for president, with Charles Steiner as vice president; William Hilkenmier, secretary, and Morris Needles, treasurer.

The question of the League’s exact status was again broached, and again they were informed by Mr. Ochs that all exhibitors’ organizations were independent bodies without any national affiliation, and that of the A. M. P. I. until they became members and were officially notified of their admission.

Mitchell Lewis Now a Select Star.

Select announces the acquisition of Mitchell Lewis as a series star. Mr. Lewis, who has become popularly known to photoplay fans for his wonderful characterization of Poleon in “The Barrier” and for other creations, has already begun work upon the production of a series of pictures for Select, the first of which, “Code of the Yukon,” has been filmed and is in process of preparation for distribution by Select and Exchange.

Mitchell Lewis productions will be made in series and marketed in the same manner as the series productions of the other Select stars. The series for the first season will include six features.

Interest attaches to the news that Mr. Lewis has been taken into the Select fold, by reason of the fact that Select Pictures has up to this time exploited only the work of women stars. Naturally Mitchell Lewis’ Select Series Pictures will offer him roles in which he can be seen to greatest advantage.

While Influenza Elsewhere Is Gradually Coming Under Control—Sunday Closing Agitated in Some Localities

THE gloom cast over the nation by the plague of Spanish influenza is being penetrated by rays of hope and brightness by which the outlook for the future. The epidemic is, generally speaking, within control may be accepted as applying to the greater section of the country.

Several strains of the germ which comes to us from our correspondents. For the first time gauze masks are mentioned—San Francisco opened November 16 with these protectors exacted as necessary in addition.

In some places, Richmond, Va., in particular, churches and theatres are closed open in Boston. As a side issue, the demand for Sunday closing of picture theatres is agitated. Showmen in other sections will have a “Sunday closing” fight upon their hands because of the opening the epidemic made for such discussion.

St. Paul, Minneapolis, and the whole of Minnesota under strick ban. In St. Paul most drastic regulations have been adopted, the “closed shop” extending to saloons, shooting galleries, and fountains.

Kansas City and vicinity are open under restrictions; Greensboro, N. C., having once opened, is again closed. And so it goes all over the country. Thus entirely with the demand that is being pointed to a release from the plague. We present herewith the reports from our correspondents:

Richmond Theatres Open;
Churches Remain Closed

THE ban has finally been lifted in Richmond. Although the State and municipal health boards had staged all manner and kind of dramatic climaxes and had kept the public on their toes. Nothing happened during November 2, decisive action was promised—and was not forthcoming. Saturday night another meeting was staged and patrons stayed up late to learn whether they would have to prepare a sermon for delivery Sunday morning. Again the vote was a tie and there was no way in which a definite decision could be reached. Meanwhile theatre managers prepared advertising for Sunday’s newspapers with the line in parenthesis (Health Authorities Permitting). Another meeting was held Monday morning at ten o’clock at which it was decided to lift the ban effective immediately. The meeting has been much characterized as the action of the health authorities.

Then came the ministers. They were much wrought up over the fact that permits had been unadvisedly denied, and then the ban was lifted on theatres the following morning, and in lengthy communications decried the fact that secular places of amusement and theatres had got the better of the deal, and charging the authorities with “rank discrimination against the churches and an utter disregard for the spiritual forces in the life of our people.”

Meanwhile “Hearts of the World” at the Auditorium, “America’s Answer” at the Strand, and other big attractions at the “legitimate” theatres are playing to capacity business and the battle goes merrily on.

Ask Boston’s Mayor to Close Theatres Sunday

MAYOR A. J. PETERS, of Boston, has under consideration the proposal of eight property owners living in the Dorchester District against Sunday night moving picture concerts. The party appeared at a public hearing given Thursday by Mayor Codman Square Theatre management to conduct Sunday night concerts. Objection was based mainly on the ground that the concerts attract young people away from regular church meetings and that such concerts result in financial gain to other interests than those of a charitable nature. Most of the party were members of the Second (Congregational) Church.

The Rev. Martin D. Kneeland, secretary of the Young Men’s Day League, loudly opposed the proposed Sunday concerts. Mrs. Charles W. Sprague protested as “a mother, leader of a girls Bible class and one who has tried to use the motion picture theatres ought to be able to restrict their performances to six days a week and even then have a surplus fund for the Red Cross and other charities. She deplored the fact that “Boston is becoming cosmopolitan.” Mrs. Alfred E. Isaacs created a stir when she charged that Mayor Peters was bound up to all kinds of promises as the result of his election and that everything had been fixed for the Congregational Church.

William J. Patroon, attorney for the theatre, lauded the photoplay as an educational institution. Mr. Patroon read letters from a number of residents of Dorchester indorsing the Sunday entertainments. Captain J. J. Walkins, of the Mattapan police, testified that the theatre had always been well managed and the quality of the performances high. Mayor Peters then took the matter under advisement.

Oklahoma Released from Influenza Quarantine

THE state of Oklahoma with some four hundred theatres was released from quarantine, by order of the governor Sunday morning, November 10, and business among motion picture exhibitors and film men in Southwestern territory is soon expected to return normal. Practically every theatre in Texas and Arkansas has been open and doing a flourishing business since November 1.

A few of the larger Texas cities which were slow to establish a quarantine rule were late in opening. The last large cities to open their picture shows were San Antonio and El Paso, where conditions in regard to influenza were for a while particularly bad. Dallas film row is in a rush and flurry of business coming out of the necessity of a complete rebooking.

In all parts of the three states exhibitors are more optimistic than ever believe that they will recoup their loss sustained during the closed period before the winter season is ended.

San Francisco Opened November 16.

Latest reports from San Francisco indicate that the Health Board authorized the opening of the Strand, Auditorium, and others December 16, with the exception of a few in the residential district. The ordinance with reference to wearing masks, however, still remains in force and all are held responsible for its enforcement during performances. Net receipts for the first four days were donated to the United War Work. Further advice indicates that a majority of the theatres throughout the state of California will reopen during this week.

Indianapolis Ministers to Agitate Sunday Closing

WHEN the health authorities of Indianapolis agreed to the ban a short time ago and the motion picture theatres opened their doors again after an enforced closing of three weeks’ duration last Sunday, the local church leaders thought their troubles were ended for some time to come. But now come the ministers of the city with an announcement that they are soon to begin a concerted effort to try to close up all commercialized amusements on Sundays.

Members of the Indianapolis Ministerial Association, composed of practically all the ministers in the city, at a meeting during the week of November 4, arranged the meeting of Mr. E. church, who voted to begin immediately a determined drive to close the motion picture houses and other forms of amusements on the Sabbath. A committee of the association was appointed to begin an investigation of the subject at once.

It was first decided at the meeting that all of the ministers of the city will be requested to deliver sermons against Sunday amusements on a specified Sunday, the date to be named later. A motion to set aside the first Sunday in December for that purpose was withdrawn after several ministers suggested awaiting the report of the investigating committee before laying further plans.

Mayor a Friend of the Exhibitors.

Mayor Charles W. Jewett is to be visited by members of the committee and urged to enforce laws governing Sunday activities. Mayor Jewett is known as a staunch friend of the local exhibitors and is generally known to be an advocate of Sunday amusements, so it is believed that the ministers will not have much luck in endeavoring to prevail on the mayor to put the old “blue laws” into effect.

The fact that the laws as they now stand do not provide for the cessation of amusement enterprises solely have caused the local exhibitors and theatre managers to view the proposed efforts of the mayor to reinstate his closing order as a modicum of optimism. The laws cover street car service, taxicabs and certain kinds of stores that now keep open. That makes the situation a mighty big one to deal with and comprises the strongest argument in opposition to Sunday closing. It is the general belief of the exhibitors that the announcement by the ministers was made in order to begin preparations for combating any kind of legislation that may come into being, when it convenes in January, in regard to the legalizing of Sunday opening in Indiana. The matter was brought up at the last session of the legislature without through if it had not been for an error discovered in the bill during the closing session.

St. Paul Health Authorities Issue Sweeping Closing Ban

The St. Paul city health department on Sunday, November 4, imposed an order closing all places of amusement, schools, churches, soda fountains and saloons on account of the influenza epidemic. Retail stores and other business places not actually dealing in necessities are left within the closing order and only the prescription counters in drug stores will be operated. The closing order is to remain in force until the city has been carried out to the letter, and has resulted in shutting off the influx of theatre patrons from Minneapolis who had been going to St. Paul for their amusement. This move was made necessary, it is explained, by the unexpected increase of the disease in St. Paul, where there is now more than 12,000 cases. Nearly 50 per cent of the 27,000 school children of the city were absent from school on account of illness prior to the order, physicians said.

Minneapolis May Modify Closing Order.

In the meantime a steady decrease of the disease in Minneapolis continues and exhibitors are preparing to resume business. The threat of the influenza closing ban in Minneapolis will be ordered by the city health department November 16, provided there is a decrease of 50 per cent, in the daily number of deaths from influenza and pneumonia as compared with the situation at the present writing.

The move to the earliest possible lifting of the local closing orders rigid adherence to the present health restrictions is urged by Dr. H. M. Guilford, city health commissioner. The present situation is clearing up rapidly and the malady will soon be eradicated if crowding in public places does not occur within the next few days, Dr. Guilford said.

Urge Opening to Relieve Employees.

The decision to rescind the closing regulations was announced by the health department, after a conference with Minneapolis theatre and moving picture house proprietors and exchange managers.

C. H. Ruben, chief spokesman for the theatre men, urged that the theatres be opened for business to relieve the condition of 1,000 men employed in the Minneapolis theatres who have been out of work since the influenza ban went into effect. Robert B. Scott, manager of the Metropolitan opera house, said theatre employees had been kept waiting for four days without work and they might be taken back to work.

Dr. Guilford said the epidemic of influenza would be considered on the wane when the number of deaths did not exceed seven. At present, he said, from twelve to fourteen deaths are reported daily.

Kansas City District Opens With Limit on Admission

The Kansas City territory started the week of November 10 fairly free from restrictions and preparations were made to open — but still subject to restrictions as to the number of patrons that might be received. In many localities the authorities maintained inspection of theatres to see that no more than half the capacity of the houses was utilized.

In Kansas City the end of the severest form of restrictions is near as the declared emergency was brought about through the inability of officials to find a happy medium between complete shutting down of business and effectually closing the real sources of contagion. The original ban was against theatres and public gatherings and against overcrowding of street cars, and limited the hours for stores, 9 to 4, applied to only the large stores until November 6, when the restriction as to hours was extended to all stores in the downtown district. The following day, because of hosts of complaints from downtown merchants, this restriction was extended to suburban stores. The downtown places of business—notably saloons—and many outlying merchants did not strictly observe this order, so on November 8, the mayor issued a proclamation removing the larger part of the restrictions. Exception was made of theatres and public gatherings, from which the restrictions were to be mostly removed Saturday at midnight, so that Sunday services could be held, and theatres open on that day. On churches and theatres, however, the order was extended, that only half the seats should be occupied—every alternate one.

Worked for Just Regulation.

The moving picture men of Kansas City had kept right hand the job throughout the furore of the restrictions—trying to secure an equitable adjustment of the burden. The chief feature of the burden was that the theatres were the easiest to regulate and therefore were the most stringently regulated. Representatives of the industry tried zealously to make their points known to the officials in order to cover other sources of spread of the disease, or else to remove the restrictions altogether. The alertness of the industry is sufficiently indicated, when it is said that no meeting was held to discuss restrictions, at which moving picture men were not present, and heard.

A public meeting was called at the city hall on Wednesday, November 6, where the largest representation of moving picture men was present. Frank Newman, temporary health commissioner, and Joe Donegan, proprietor of the Century Theatre, a burlesque house, was permanent chairman. This meeting was emphasized to the board of health that the restrictions were ineffectual and failed to control some of the most important sources of contagion; and the meeting was largely responsible for the imposition of more stringent regulations. As it is now, picture men realized the lack of cooperation in their own ranks, but did not seem able to bring about the desired harmonious action.

Wants Co-ordination of Effort.

"We see what co-operation is, and maybe now we can proceed to get it," was the comment of several men of the industry. Lee D. Balsly, manager of the Metro, was present at all meetings that any other one man of the business; and he is now seeking to bring about co-ordination of effort, using the experiences of the past month as illustrations of his point. He points out that when several exhibitors appeal to various officials, on the ground of business being lost because of restrictions, and the apparent discrimination against the industry, the officials cannot avoid the impression that the exhibitors are appealing for his own personal interest.

Some Counties Still Closed in Indiana.

The ban against theatres and public gatherings because of the influenza epidemic in Indiana still remain tight on a few counties in different parts of the State. Dr. R. F. Kramer predicted that conditions will soon be so improved that it will be lifted everywhere in Indiana by the latter part of the week. For the present, there are 154 cases and so have some of the cities in Dearborn, Gibson, Noble and Randolph counties.

Dayton Lifts Ban on Children.

When the Dayton theatres were given permission to reopen recently by the health board, it was with the understanding that children under sixteen were not to be allowed admission until further notice, as the influenza was more serious among the children than older people. This ban served to decrease attendance to quite an extent, some of the neighborhood houses being barely able to operate at all in the face of the situation. Downtown managers fixed the loss at one-fourth, this being a conservative figure. The ban on children was officially lifted Monday, November 12.

No Date Set for Cincinnati Opening.

After having been closed continuously, on account of the influenza epidemic, since October 5, a total period of nearly six weeks, Cincinnati moving picture and other business proprietors were given the arrangements to reopen for business sometime during the week of November 16, although the precise date has not been disclosed. The publicity that these houses have reached its finish, however, and the opening of the schools has been set for November 13, it is virtually certain that the theatres have been opened by the end of the week.

The closed period has been utilized by the managers of the hundred odd houses to close around Cincinnati for a thorough cleaning out, in order to remove any possibility of further infection, and they are now in better shape in this respect than ever before. State health officials have reached a difficult to estimate, but it has been tremendous. Employers, exhibitors and film exchanges have all suffered together. An application by the exhibitors...

for permission to open the week of No-Vember 3 was turned down by the Board of Health, which thought the time was not sufficient having down the bars on the restrictions.

Cleveland Ban Lifted.
Cleveland picture houses opened Monday, November 11, the day the armistice was signed. The ban in the state was lifted in the city of Cleveland. The picture houses that open this week will be reop erated, with the exception of the influenza ban, the Miles. Theatre a vaudeville house, changed to pictures.

November 17 Meets Portland Opening.
The closing ban was lifted from Portland, Ore., theatres Sunday, November 17.
At meeting of the theatre managers, the mayor and health officers held Sat-day, November 9, it was so decided.
Many of the smaller cities have already opened, and the opening of the Portland houses will likely be the signal for the lifting of the ban in the state.

All the houses used the time to reno-Vate and make improvements and a new atmosphere prevails. All the theatres held shape shows, the change of programme was no delay. Though some of the employ es have sought other employment during this time, it is anticipated all will return in due course.

Ban Lifting in Northwest.
The influenza ban is beginning to lift generally in this territory and moving picture houses in many cities of the northern peninsula of Michigan, North Dakota, North Dakota, Wisconsin and Iowa opened during the past week. Exchanges in Minneapolis report better business during the past few days than at any time since the epidemic became general. Ralph Parker, manager of the Sunbeam Theatre, Duluth, who was a visitor in Minneapolis the past week, says business is at a complete standstill in that city, but that moving picture men are expect ing that business will be resumed there within a few weeks.

Hamilton, Ohio, Opens.
The board of health of Hamilton, Ohio, somewhat in advance of similar bodies in other Ohio cities, raised the ban on public gatherings effective No-Vember 10. The ban was ordered in November 4 that the epidemic of influenza had about run its course. Churches and schools were first permitted to open, moving picture houses being next on the list.

Greensboro, N. C., Closes Again.
After remaining open for ten days following the epidemic of influenza, hegemonic Greensboro, N. C., once again descended upon the theatres of the city on November 14 and ordered immediate closing. At the same time an order was issued closing the churches, public schools and other places of assembly indefinitely, a sudden re appearance of the scourge in aggregation of numbers bringing about the action.

So far as known, this is the first city to be closed again after opening.
Greensboro was invaded by the influenza epidemic with such force that it was at its crest, and remained closed only a little more than two weeks the first time. However, it is doubtful whether the city has licked the beast, for it is feared that efforts to keep them to open until the last vestige of influenza has disappeared from the city. The five theatres in Greensboro are under the same management, Pryor Brothers having recently bought the R.
D. Craver interests here. Mr. Pryor controls theatres in other cities in North Carolina and Virginia, all of which are now open.

Charlotte, N. C., Opened November 7.
Picture theatres in Charlotte, N. C., allowed to open here on November 7, action of the health authorities being abandoned of a short session the afternoon before, and coming as a sur prise to the theatre men who had re signed themselves to waiting until at least the middle of the month. The epidemic was checked as suddenly as it began, and there is hardly a case in Charlotte now, although there is the fact that the streets and all public places are constantly visited by soldiers from Greenboro. Charlotte probably escaped with a light epidemic of influenza, the second epidemic in the South of its size, a matter on which the theatre men are congratulating themselves.

PICTURES ARE SOLDIERS' THIRD REQUISITE

Only Food and Sleep Outrank in Importance—Screen Girl in Gingham Makes the Hit

I T HAS BEEN the experience of those of us in the field that our troops overseas want three things. These three, in the order of their importance, are: Food, sleep, and movies.
Food comes first. A soldier's mind is never far from his stomach. Then comes sleep, and after that the movies. Motion pictures are the big thing in wars in keeping the men in the field contented. They do not mind putting their bayonets where it bells if they know that William S.
Hart is going to be there at 8.

We are often called upon to close hundreds of shows for our troops in France alone, with similar work in England and Italy. We are effecting this by means of several hundred revenue sources. These films are distributed by the Community Motion Picture Bureau, operating through the Y. M. C. A., which is the largest consumer of film in the world.

William A. Brady, Carl Laemmle, T.
S. Tall and some of the rest of them would get a good laugh if they could see the primitive conditions we have for showing our films to the men. It would bring back the old days. We climb our ladders to a loft in a small canopy, put in our storage battery, tie on our curtain and hit it off in the direction of the line. I suppose we are the only showmen in the world to perform to a packed house every time we put on a show.

Every Seat Always Taken.
We call the performance a failure if every seat is not taken and the rafters filled. Every night a thousand men in France see the pictures from the roof, and if any show on Broadway got half the house a single film ever here does, it would double the price before morning. The men hang on with one hand and whistle through their fingers with the other.

Sometimes it isn't inside; it's out in the open! Our wagon arrives, a screen is stretched between two trees, the staging is finished, and heaven is among them. And when the villain blows smoke through his nose and does the girl wrong, it is all the more intense because the boy is out of sight, from drawing on him. And then at the end when the hero takes the girl into his arms and strolls off down the leafy lawn with his arm around the throat, and half an hour later you can see them sitting under one of the lights looking at a picture in a locket, and if one of the cinema men comes up they will sidle up to him and say:
"Here, 'Y,' is a picture I brought along with me. She lives in Maryville. I just wish you could meet her once. You know that cooking dress the girl had in that picture! We, mine wears one like it sometimes—only my girl don't have to make up to be good looking. She's just naturally that way."

William S. Hart is the favorite, with Douglas Fairbanks a close second.
Among the women Mary Pickford is first.
The night a Pickford film is on the aters play to capacity.

Vampires Unite to Make Screen.
Vampires are not the fashion in France.
The boys want a picture that reminds them of the girl they left at the railway station. Riding, athletics and shooting is what they want among the men, and sweet wholesomeness among the women. It is a good sign.

This is the third year, it is true. They get all of that they want in the trenches.
When a civil war pictures go on they begin to think about the letters they have not written. This is the third year of the war. They have a good laugh and go out and get in a crap game. A war play may stand them up at the Rivoli, but here it sends them out behind the mess tent to roll the bones. A producer planning on putting out a play that will thrill the boys over here may get better comfortable just a girl in gingham. The last thing they want is an army recruited from an employment agency and drilled behind the crew. Every day they get up, throw his arms and dies in front of the camera the boys gasp with laughter and shout for more. They would almost as soon see an American-made war play as they would Charlie Chaplin.

Each week the grip of the movies grows on the boys. We who are con nected with the cinema work in France sometimes wonder what the legitimate productions after the war is over will do with the patronage.

Give us movies and more movies. We can not get enough. They have helped to win the war.

HOMER CROY.

Ray Bagley Dies Suddenly.
Raymond Bagley, of Wid's Daily staff, died suddenly November 13 from heart failure brought on by overwork.

The body was taken to Detroit, Minn., on the 15th. Ray was twenty-eight years of age, and was born in Minnesota. He had been associated with the moving picture industry for several years, and came to Wid's from the Triangle's Western publicity department.

During the time he worked for his last employer he made an excellent impression on the film men and the picture reviewers with whom he came in contact.
CAPTAIN WILLIAM E. BLAISDELL KILLED

Elder Son of George Blaisdell of the World Falls After Breaking Into Hindenburg Line

The many friends of George Blaisdell in the moving picture industry will be shocked to learn that his eldest son, Captain William E. Blaisdell, of the 106th Infantry, was killed on September 29 while leading his men against the Hindenburg line between Cambrai and St. Quentin. A letter from William Pease, Machine Gun Company, 106th Infantry, to his sister, Laura Pease, who is employed in the office as Roland E. Blaisdell, the only brother of the captain, tells the manner of Captain Blaisdell's death:

"You mentioned Major Blaisdell in your letter. Yes, he was in charge of the battalion to which our platoon was attached, and every man was proud to fight under such a splendid fellow."

"He led us over the top and started the taking of an important line that some people thought impregnable. We took the line and went a comfortable bit the other side, but our good major was wounded. While being carried back he thought his men needed him, so he ordered the stretcher bearers to let him down to the bottom and he, himself, returned for the men."

Leaves Stretcher and Returns to Front.

"He got up and forced his way back after the men. Unluckily a stray shot hit him for the second time, this time fatally. Every man mourns the loss of this good man, but there is one consolation—he got it in one of the hardest fought battles of the war and he got it with a smile on his face."

"This letter should never be forgotten when New York and Brooklyn hear the details of it."

Captain Blaisdell was a Brooklyn man and a member of the Fourteenth New York Infantry when he was mustered into the United States service a year ago last July. The Brooklyn Daily Eagle of November 3 published this heading: "Brooklyn Troops First to Pierce Hindenburg Line—106th Infantry Won Undying Fame, at Terrific Price, at Bellicourt."

An extract from the article follows:

"It was at Bellicourt, fronting on the Sambre Canal, the key to the whole German position, that the 106th pierced the Hindenburg line. It made its way through a maze of wire, it stormed strongly held trenches with an utter disregard of fierce machine gun fire, and it pressed into service cooks, orderlies, clerks, teamsters—anybody who could hold rifle and bayonet—in order that the attack might go on. Brooklyn was represented there, at the Hindenburg line, by a unit that would not be denied—by a unit whose valor must tug at the very heart of every Brooklynite!"

William E. Blaisdell was born at Gloucester, Mass., 31 years ago, and had lived in Brooklyn since his fifth year. When William E. Blaisdell joined the state guard and rose to the rank of first lieutenant in the Fourteenth Infantry before he was twenty-three. He resigned at the time of his marriage, but rejoined his regiment in July 1915, when the Mexican situation was acute. The following winter he was placed in command of Company L, and on June 27 was commissioned captain. After being mustered into the United States service he was named to command and to organize Company M of the 106th Infantry, at Spartanburg, being the senior captain of the battalion. At the beginning of the year he was transferred to the supply company to equip the 3700 men for overseas service.

The dead officer possessed a powerful physique and remarkable endurance and had an extraordinary capacity for hard work. He loved things military and was a strict disciplinarian. He also had the knack of winning the affection as well as the respect of his men. They seemed to sense his fearlessness, and the letter of Machine Gunner Pease indicates they had correctly estimated him.

He leaves a wife and two sons, and was known and esteemed in film circles, having joined the Screen Club shortly after its organization. Both of his grandfathers were in the Civil War. In civil life he had been for nine years with Hayden, Stone & Co., bankers.

Captain Blaisdell had been formally nominated for major, had taken his physical examination for that rank six weeks before his death, and shortly after September 1 he had been placed in command of the Third Battalion. He was serving in that capacity when he fell.

The writer had the honor of shaking his hand and conversing with him for a moment, before the United States entered the war. Quiet efficiency was his most impressive characteristic. No matter how slight the acquaintance, every person who ever came in contact with William E. Blaisdell knew that he would "carry on" to the end.

Government Will Continue to Release Its War Review

CHARLES S. HART, director of the U. S. Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, makes the authoritative announcement that, despite the close of the war, the Official War Review releases will be continued indefinitely, and that all other Government pictures now issued or being assembled will be released according with public demand. "It is only fair to exhibitors and the motion picture interests generally," says Director Hart, "that they should know just what to expect in regard to the war pictures that have been announced by the Division of Films. The progress of events in Europe—the evacuation of the various invaded territories, the reconstruction of devastated France and Belgium, the ferment in Germany, the meeting of the peace commission—these are all matters of tremendous historical and news interest, and they will be fully covered by the Official War Review in order that the American people may keep in pictorial touch with the improvement and disasters that mark the remaking of the map of Europe. The necessity for its continuance is obvious."

"Under Four Flags" will probably be the last big feature war picture to be issued by the Division of Films, but several two-reel pictures are now being assembled—notably those included in the U. S. Series. The work will be announced as announced. The present activities of the Division of Films carries its work up to June 1.

"Under Four Flags" Shown at Both Rivoli and Rialto

The latest of the big films made by the United States Government was promoted to run at the Rivoli and Rialto Sunday, November 17, for a week's run at each house, marking an event in local film annals. Never before has the same feature been "hot," but much more should be kept in view in their opportunities to behold Uncle Sam's Victory Army pictures authentically in the very act of winning the war.

"Under Four Flags" appears as a record accomplishment—the nation's picture story to its own people recording the great deeds of the brave Yanks. S. Rothapfel, who edited the picture for the Division of Films and supervised the musical accompaniment, Kenneth C. Beaton wrote the titles. Mr. Rothapfel has been praised for his work in assembling the film. Elsewhere in this issue there is a critical review.

Despite the rain which began to fall just before the show, the Sunday crowds at both the Rivoli and Rialto were of remarkable size, weather considered. The downpour continued unceasingly after the show, nevertheless, and the Rialto has arranged special days for the whole week, and the third U. S. Official War Feature will doubtless be witnessed by thousands at the two Broadway theatres.
“GLAD” TIDINGS FOR PICKFORD FANS

Mary, Mary, Quite Contented, Has Gone Back to Los Angeles with a First National Contract in Her Grip and Rights to Two Record-Breaking Stage Successes

Wishing to obtain Mary Pickford’s views on one or two phases of her new contract, and learning that she had left for Los Angeles immediately after signing the document, the writer sought the office of the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit and suggested the personality. An official of the company, qualified to speak for the highest-salaried woman in the world, consented to the proposition. Most of the subjects touched upon during the interview had been gone over with Miss Pickford and her mother. The official’s individual views of the new order of things were also well worth recording. No time was wasted in starting the string of interrogations.

So, Mr. Proxy, your latest independent star, has paid $80,000 for the screen rights of two famous stage successes. That’s hanging up a new record right at the start, isn’t it?

“Yea. But Miss Pickford figures correctly that they are cheap at the price. Both stories have had at least two hundred thousand dollars’ worth of advertising charmed to them, and on the stage and the titles are a household word like Tarzan of the Apes and other celebrated stories that the public was eager to see pictured on the screen. ‘Daddy Long Legs’ and ‘Pollyanna’ have a following that will act as so many advance agents for them in their new form. It was this fact that came second in influencing their purchase.”

“What was the principal consideration?

“The perfect adaptability of the heroines of both plays to Miss Pickford’s line of work. Recognizing that the general run of her screen admirers would rather smile than weep and that the ‘glad’ play has won a place for itself that can never be taken away, she is content to give her public what it wants. And, I may add, what it needs—the healthful relaxation of innocent mirth and youthful sentiment.”

Specializing on the Screen.

“Mary Pickford believes, then, in specialization for the screen star?”

“Yes, indeed! The history of the amusement world shows clearly that humanity never tires of seeing its favorite actors in the parts best suited to their personality. Our audience is very desirable, of course, but it is not the most important quality. By taking time to make each picture as nearly perfect as possible the Pickford screen star will maintain a standard worthy the position and personal ability of the star.”

“Do you, Mr. Proxy, believe that fiction is to remain the leading activity of the screen?”

“Everything points to that conclusion. Although the scope of the moving picture is much wider than the spoken drama, the screen theatre is essentially a palace for the entertainment. The news reel, the scenic, the propaganda picture and the historical novel all have their place in making up the theatre programs; but fiction of the tried and true sort—stories of a make-believe world that are none the less convincing because the endings always come out right—is bound to predominate. It is this fact that narrows the range of stage successes every year and keeps such skilled producers as Winchell Smith continually presenting the same old story in a new dress. Three Wise Fools is the latest addition to the Smith brotherhood of plays, and all the New York critics had to admit the charm of the old theme when decked out with fresh trimmings. Smith is a specialist who does one class of play better than any one else. The screen will tend more and more to develop actor-producers who, like Mary Pickford and Charlie Chaplin, will work along these lines.”

Washington City Managers to Meet.

A meeting of the Washington City Exchange Managers’ Association is scheduled to be held at the Fox Film Corporation exchange on Ninth street at 12 o’clock noon, November 24. At this meeting a tentative draft of the constitution and by-laws which will thereafter govern the work of the organization will be gone over and other important business will be discussed.

Valentine Grant a War Worker.

Valentine Grant, whose latest appearance was with Walker Whiteside in “The Belgian,” produced by the Sidney Olcott Players, has been busy with war work for the past several months on the West Coast. The engraving shows Miss Grant with the members of the British Mission at Camp Lewis, Washington. In the party, reading from left to right, are Captain Cross, Lieutenant MacWatters, Captain Forbes and Captain Ross. Everybody will recognize Miss Grant in the center.
ASSOCIATION WOULD AMEND BY-LAWS
Proposes at Quarterly Session to Give Equal Representation to Exhibitor League Officials

THE regular quarterly meeting of the board of directors of the National Motion Picture Industry was held in the association rooms Thursday, November 14. The meeting was called to order by President Wylie, at 11:15 o'clock. Among those present were P. A. Powers, Arthur Friend, Paul Brunet, Ricard Gradwell, J. E. Brulatour, W. L. Shearer, P. J. Scheller, Alfred Black, H. C. Hespe, Ernest Horstmann, Julian Solomon, W. W. Irwin, J. F. Coufal, Paul Gulick and J. L. Hoff.

The most important action taken was the agreement to amend the by-laws of the association so that the recently amalgamated exhibitors organizations could receive a 50 per cent. representation in the board of directors and all of the standing and special committees of the association.

As the by-laws can only be amended by a meeting of the members of the entire association on receipt of a twenty-one days' notice it was moved that Peter J. Schafer be empowered to submit the proposed amendments and which on approval would be submitted to a general meeting of the association to be held on or about December 10.

The first business transacted was the election of the following companies to membership in the association: Triangle Film Corporation, Picture Play magazine, Actors Study, Inc., Ono, John Olsen & Company, Robertson-Cole Company and to reelect to membership the Triangle Distributing Company.

To Attend Reconstructed Convention.

It was decided to send a committee of five representing the association to the reconstructed convention of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States which is to be held on December 4, 5 and 6. Mr. Brady appointed the following committee composed of a representative of each division of membership: Adolph Zukor, Peter J. Scheller, Ricardo Gradwell, Jules Brulatour and James L. Hoff. All of these accepted the appointment and agreed to attend the convention.

plans for the organization of the exhibitors' branch until the by-laws of the association shall have been amended providing for this 50 per cent. representation.

To Call Meeting for December 10.

As only the members of the entire association can amend the by-laws on a twenty-one days' notice it was decided that a meeting of the members of the association be called for on or about December 10. The motion covering the above action made by Arthur Friend was as follows: 'That it is the opinion of the board of directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry that to equitably provide for the inclusion in the National Association of the exhibitors of the United States, that the president of the National Association be requested to obtain from Peter J. Schafer, representing the exhibitors' branch, the names of all exhibitors with a view to drafting such amendments to the articles of organization of the association and its by-laws in order to effect an equitable arrangement along these lines.'

Mr. Schafer then read a report of the action of the Ohio exhibitors and the resolutions which they had adopted for the inauguration of a Sunday opening campaign in Ohio during the coming session of the legislature. On the motion of Mr. Sherrill the report was referred to the Sunday opening committee of the association.

Alfred Black, of Maine, then requested that the association go on record as being opposed to the action of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in discriminating against the motion picture theatres of the country in favor of the legitimate theatre. Mr. Black described the history of the action of the society in this respect, and was empowered to draw up a resolution denouncing the action of the society. Following is the resolution:

WHEREAS, The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has published a resolution that it proposes to stringently enforce its arbitrary practice of demanding a yearly license fee from motion picture theatres; and

WHEREAS, said society has entered into an agreement with the Vaudeville Managers Protective Association whereby no tax is charged in the vaudeville theatres owned and controlled by the members of said association, be it therefore

RESOLVED, That the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry go on record in opposition to the action of said American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in attempting to enforce a license tax upon the motion picture theatres of the United States, and be it further

RESOLVED, That the association discrimination against the motion picture theatres in favor of the vaudeville theatres, from which discrimination no license fee is collected, is neither fair nor just, and, in fact, is against the spirit and letter of the agreements between said societies; and be it further

RESOLVED, That the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry believes that with the vast interest involved it should not only demand the enforcement of the license tax, but should further endeavor to prevent the imposition of such license tax, and that a committee of three be appointed to investigate the situation as it exists and recommend such action as may seem advisable in the interests of the legitimate theatres of the United States against the imposition of any license tax; and be it further

RESOLVED, That a copy of this reso-

Miss White who is known wherever films are screened for her absolute lack of fear and her willingness to perform any feat ever doped out by a scenario writer or director, interrupted the making of her next serial 'The Lightning Raider,' in order to come to New York and do this stunt in the interests of the Combined Lanterns and Friars' drive for the United States War Loan Campaign. Each day of the week the two organizations held a parade on Fifth Avenue and two blocks of the famous thoroughfare were roped off by the police, and the best talent of the two clubs gave an entertainment while other members armed with tins dispensed for change. Miss White climbed the ladder for the Lanterns Club and over $1,000 was gathered in on the day she did the stunt.

World Pictures Installs Heating Plant

During the temporary lay-off at the World studio at Fort Lee a large heating plant has been installed. This indicates that the World will be active in the making of productions at its Fort Lee plant during the coming winter. In the past few weeks the studio department has been able to turn out a sufficient number of continuities that will keep them sufficiently in advance of the needs of the stars, so that a director will be able to give his script several weeks' study before actual operation of filming his story, all of which will result, it is expected, in a betterment of product. It will also give the working staff more time in getting scenery props and other accessories ready for the director's call.
Galveston, Texas, October 24.

In spite of the pressure of war economy, higher prices for help, pictures and overhead, and the piling on of nearly the last straw, influenza, the exhibitors of Southern Texas are still smiling and right on the job. This is achieved by the way in which these men took the recent epidemic which caused them to close for over two weeks. Not an exhibitor grumbled; not one seemed to kick and snort because the health boards saw it necessary to put the lid on public gatherings. On the other hand they tried to co-operate, and instead of three-sheeting their houses they bent their best efforts in selling Liberty Bonds and aiding the city and health authorities.

Just prior to the spread of the disease business was quite satisfactory. Galveston, where I spent more time, was teeming with activity, both military and social. Business was not up to the standard, but it was good enough to cause advertising, competition and the usual propaganda of pictures. Galveston is primarily a seacoast city, and when the submarine war started it dropped to below zero, hence business followed commerce, and likewise the theatres found patronage on the wane. Then the military activity came and stimulated business. No one can complain, in the face of war, and they all do their best and keep smiling.

Houston, the Kyle in Beaumont, the Hippodrome in Waco, the Old Mill, Hippodrome and Grand in Dallas. They also control the Grand in Galveston, a combination house, now running big vaudeville. The Dallas Exchange is also run by Mr. Hulsey.

Until recently Jean Finley, an aggressive young advertising man, had charge of the Queen publicity work in Galveston; but he was promoted to the managership of the Hippodrome in Dallas, then the military service grabbed him, as he turned twenty-one, in time to get into the new draft.

At present Mr. McDonald is running the Galveston end of the Texas interests, and is kept quite busy. He is a pleasant man, an able manager, and a fine fellow. You never can judge the business barometer by his face, for he has one of those smiles that knows no retreat. His grin barrage goes over incessantly. He believes in advertising in the papers, maintaining constant publicity, and advertising the picture rather than the star. He is a member of the First National, and runs in addition the big features put out by the larger producers. Business changes here with the seasons; in summer it is light on account of the beach, which is a counter attraction; and winter brings the folks downtown away from the cool beach winds. The Queen is a modern, well-equipped house, with heating and cooling plant, large pipe organ, excellent fittings, and uses Power's 6-l projection on a Gold Fibre screen. It seats about 1,200.

The next house in importance here is the Dixie Number One, a 650 seating capacity theatre, modern and well equipped, and run by one man who has risen from the ranks, A. M. Martini, who came over twenty-nine years ago from Italy. He landed in this city with $4.80, and today his investment is over $80,000. He laughs when he speaks of his rise, telling how he had no friends, no kin, no job—nothing. He worked, entered the grocery business, then the show game, and now the name of his theatre is a household word.

Making a Dollar Bring Full Value.

Mr. Martini's policy is to give the most possible for the money, treating his patrons as a storekeeper would; and "keeping the American dollar worth one dollar," which is a rather wise idea. He aims to suit the more popular purse, as his prices indicate; yet the show is high class and worth every bit of the money. Mr. Martini is a regular man and a regular exhibitor. His friends believe in him, and his standing with competitors shows that his policy to the world is that of the good old golden rule. I enjoyed thoroughly my interview with this man. In addition the Dixie Number Two, a smaller and near-by house is run by him. Lately he has taken over the Crystal Number One—here they seem to name the houses the same and then number them. His object in having three houses is to suit the purse of all, and he is doing it regularly.

Mr. Martini is a true patriot of America; yet a staunch Italian. He has two sons in the service. His Dixie No. 1 is the only house to display the picture of President Wilson in place of a one-sheet in a handsome brass stand. He regrets that he has not a dozen sons to send across to enter Berlin and spread liberty there.

The Palace, Strand, and Lincoln houses are run by the Bell Enterprises, of which G. W. Bell, Jr., is manager, assisted. There operate other houses nearby and are engaged also in the exchange business.

Business Good in Dallas and Houston.

I made a trip to Houston and one to Dallas, and in both places business was good. Of course it is not up to standard by any means, but it is getting by. Everywhere the theatre is greatly aiding the sale of liberty bonds, the purposes of the government, and everything that is patriotic should be said if anything happened to the picture indus-yury to close, stop, or even modify business as it is. The film industry is hereafter and the Congress must not be hampered in the least. The recent closing of the theatres has shown beyond a doubt that the pulse of business is regulated by the theatres.

CALLS AGAIN DOES PEDIGO OF OKLAHO

Hardly Know Old Highland Now, Says Exhibitor in Telling How He Has Fussled Up His Show House

Guthrie, Oklahoma, Nov. 7.

OU would hardly know the old place now. Will wonders never cease? Can one believe his own eyes? Miracles are performed at this day and age, and it has always been so. Our Show House, the Highland Theatre, has for several years been in failing health. Its constitution had become weakened by the hand of mother time.

The last of June, the gales, cloudbursts, and the frisky cyclones, with a firm determination to stick to the finish.

It has long needed the tender care of the plaster man and the skilled hand of the noble painter to bring back the bloom of its childhood. These things are now and for certain taken over by the two terminal walls that are being scraped and given the once over; its system being renovated; its back and front being patched up, and when we last noticed the sally, the workmen were going over the top.

We charged and captured every living microbe, caught them red handed, alone and unassisted. We gained the victory, and boosted them bag and baggage out into the cold and cruel world. At this writing we are not ashamed to look back on the fight we have won and say, in the face, and dare him to return.

Microbes, be-ware—you enter at your peril. No kidding. It would be suicide. A hundred thousand dollar a year man, his wife and his life in his own hands that would dare come here. We have thoroughly fumigated and stinkmigated the massive structure from within and without, and we now claim it is fit for human beings.

Patrons Now May Sleep in Sweet Repose.

It has always been our high aim in life and our great desire to have a place of sublime comfort, a show where you could sleep in sweet repose, and forget your troubles while you snore gently on your backs, and then be transported to having cold, dry, wet water trickle down your spinal column, playing Johnstown flood up and down your vertebra while you were reading the village newspaper. The railroad or run off with the farm. So we discontinued this part of our program.

We knew you detested falling through the holes in the floor, where you would silently erase several square inches of nice juicy cuticle from your slender shin. Of course you were embarrassed; we do not blame you, and will not even repeat what you said. They all heard you, this thing is no more. We conninue the discussion on this.

Bars Are Up for the Brindle Cow.

No more will the neighbor’s brindle cow meander in through the cracks in the wall. These things are closed to her forever. It is better so.

No more will the village stock find a haven out of sight in its sacred walls. Nay, nay! This cannot was.

I dare say we could fill our Show House full of great characters that would not blow it out. Yea, verily. It would retain corn in the ear. Did you hear this?

We had hurried over this, and had sighted signs of different size. We were almost persuaded to turn our show shop into a lively stable. One reason for the letting of the Barn Stormers in here, and the change would have been easy. Foolish boy! We knew not what we wanted.

Even Pedigo Couldn’t Duplicate House.

Alas, the old place is on the road to recovery. One can’t place it. This place will be a work of art, and I trust a joy forever. This building could not be duplicated by the hand of man. I am not saying that I could make one like it myself. It is the collection of a lifetime. Boards from everywhere; some of them from boxes of groceries which I have never paid. But we are strong-headed and determined to put her in proper shape, even though it costs us sixteen dollars. We have men and women working like mad, looking over the place. We have been working like mad, looking over the place. We have Pictorializing the Allied Spirit.

The Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information has adopted as the pictorial background for its publicity for "Under Four Flags," the third Official War Picture, which had its first Government showing at the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, in New York City, Sunday evening, November 17, the stirring military group which has adorned the uptown front of the "Flatiron" building at Twenty-third street and Broadway for several months. It is called "The Allies" and the four heroic figures represent the fighting men of America, France, Great Britain and Italy. The idea of the group was conceived by Edward Wise, president of the United Cigar Stores Co. It was designed by Nelson Greene, private in the Ninth Coast Artillery. The sculptor is Philip Martiny. The group has attracted a great deal of attention and embodies the spirit of "Under Four Flags" in a surprising degree.

Indianapolis Preparates for Next Loan.

Indianapolis has discovered a way to anticipate and stir up interest in the fifth Liberty Loan drive, which is scheduled to take place in January, and at the same time it has secured larger audiences for "Under Four Flags," the third Official War Picture, issued by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information.

"Under Four Flags" will be shown at the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, during the week of November 24. The Marion County branch of the local war loan drives, has circulated its 6,- 000 lieutenants, urging them not only to see this new Government war picture, but to call to the public in their districts to attend the presentation at the Circle. The showing of the picture will be utilized to call to the public for the next loan drive and to urge the public to prepare for it.
WEISS TALKS SENSE TO EXHIBITORS

First National Manager in Chicago Outlines His Views on the Best Way to Advertise Motion Pictures and Says Many Things Well Worth Reading

By HARRY WEISS
Manager First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange, Chicago

Early to bed
And early to rise;
Work like hell
And advertise.

The exhibitor's creed, if ever there was one, is embodied in this slang saying. A close study of the conditions attending the activities of any successful exhibitor will result in one outstanding, unmistakable result; that he is a convert to, a student of and a practitioner in advertising.

No matter from what angle you view commercial success measured in dollars and cents, no matter what product you have to think of, no matter what the word "success" calls to your mind, you will find that back of every known, recognized individual, brand, business or product stands the butt mark on which rests its prosperity: Advertising.

Why do people ask the grocer for Uneeda Biscuits in packages of eighteen costing eight cents when, for the same amount of money they could buy twice the number of crackers in bulk? It is because Uneeda Biscuits are advertised. These same crackers, in bulk, are not.

There is a popular association in the public mind—the result of advertising—between the ads and the street cars, on the billboards, in newspapers and in magazines, and the package crackers on display in grocery stores. The relation is obvious, and advertising makes it so.

Advertising as an investment is one thing, and advertising as it is practiced by some exhibitors is another and different story. To be successful, returning a profit to the exhibitor, advertising must be continuous; it must have just as much common sense and appeal in its text and physical appearance as the exhibitor would have in his conversation and personal appearance if he journeyed to Los Angeles for the express purpose of meeting Charlie Chaplin or Mary Pickford.

He wouldn't make the trip in overall or a suit three years old. Nor would he have any mental doubts about whether he should say "I ain't" or "I am not." Yet he will contract for space in newspapers, and then throw a heterogeneous mass of copy together to fill it, and little white spots showing in the first proof they are promptly filled with type. Isn't he buying the space? Why shouldn't it be filled?

Always Something New in Pictures.

Advertising can be applied to motion pictures more easily than to any other thing of which I know. The motion picture business is a changing product. There is always a new picture to talk about in advertising. It offers new angles, different from those that have gone before. It has its own individual characteristics, a product, once made and copyrighted, becomes established and remains unchanged for years. There are advertising men confront a real task in thinking up new arguments for it, in extending its fields of usefulness, in getting sufficient variation and change into their copy appeal to avoid monotony of repetition.

Consequently, no exhibitor can complain of a lack of material for advertising purposes.

The first principle of successful theatre advertising is to select or originate a slogan or a trade mark which can remain standard. Show me a prosperous theatre and I will show you a manager or an owner behind it who has done that very thing. They impress this trade mark or slogan upon the public in all of their advertising. It is like the theme in a story. Descriptions, dialogue, divergence from the main track always center back or refer to the theme on which it is written.

After there has been an amount of advertising sufficient to make the trade mark or slogan known, the next thing for an exhibitor to do is to advertise what he has to offer the public. It is in this second phase of theatre publicity that the slogan or trade mark begins its usefulness. If it has been impressed upon the public as an emblem of quality, the mark of merit, or the stamp of confidence, it imparts immediately to whatever production with which it is associated a thought or purpose for which it exists.

A Theatre Nothing but a Store.

A theatre is nothing more nor less than a retail store. Its picture offerings are like the merchandise in a dry goods store, meat in butcher's shop, or foods in a grocery. But there is one particular distinction between a theatre screening films and other kinds of retail stores. The latter handle nationally advertised brands of merchandise—things that are brought to public attention week after week the year round. The majority of motion pictures do not have the benefit of either national advertising or national publicity. It is therefore up to the live exhibitor to do his part in the progress of the average picture from the manufacturer to the public.

Local conditions must govern to a great extent just what advertising is necessary. The capacity of his theatre, the quality of the particular production and local conditions must combine to govern the amount he spends, and the kind of advertising on which he spends it.

Light Up and Let Heralds Work.

It is better not to advertise at all than to use carelessly gotten up copy, poorly placed for public consumption. If you want to get real patrons in who attend your theatre, then advertise exclusively in your theatre. Slides are always effective, if not too many are used. Heralds passed out to patrons when they enter will invariably be read during an intermission, even if they are not taken home. And it has always appeared to me as a good investment for exhibitors to arrange their shows so that there is a three or five-minute intermission, with full lights, so the heralds can get in their work on forthcoming productions. If intermissions are not possible, a neatly lettered sign, preferably illuminated, placed where the theatre owner, or his man, can see it, will have the desired effect. But it has been my experience that heralds put out properly, with personal supervision, are one of the best methods that has ever been devised for sure results.

Manufacturers spend fortunes on press and publicity men, and the results open up big possibilities for exhibitors who want to install small publicity and press departments of their own. Scarcely any production is sent out today without a full complement of press sheet, publicity matter, specimen ads and other adjuncts for exploitation. It provides a nucleus for material for a neat little house magazine or weekly program; it gives the basis for a newspaper campaign, and it opens up the possibi" local conditions, and hand it to the newspaper editor.

The lobby is one of the most important of the physical advertising assets a theatre has. Properly treated, it can be turned upon to give big results. The main thing to remember is that variety is the spice of life in advertising as well as in playing else. Too much advertising is done along one line the attraction advertised lose their value and individuality. For instance, if an exhibitor advertises one attraction over and over again, in the same ad, or at the same time in the lobby, neither one will profit by it. There is a division of interest and a dilution in the ad which does not leave him impressed with any one particular thing. The average exhibitor will realize a better result by playing up other ad, and using a smaller amount of space on other pictures booked for the same week.

Don't Advertise Heavily for One Day.

It is money thrown away to feature a production heavily in theatre advertising if it is to be shown for only one day. Anything that is worth advertising well must have merit, and any production that has merit will surely pay receipts for two days or more. Meritorious features advertise themselves. Patrons talk about them, and word-of-mouth publicity is the most valuable and productive of all advertising. In many instances where features like "My Four Years in Germany" have been played for two days or more, business was invariably greater on the second and succeeding days than it was on the first day. The reason was that the people who saw good performances went home and talked about it.

Advertising, in its last analysis, is sameness of a high order. To sell any product, whether it is pictures or soap, one must advertise. For an exhibitor to sell a patron an admission ticket he must first reach that patron through advertising, whether in the lobby, slides, window displays, and posters. To reach the public the exhibitor must advertise something that appeals to them.

Why is it that hens' eggs are bought universally to the exclusion of duck eggs? Because the hen lays an egg she is heard all over the lot, and she cackles so loudly that she arouses the enthusiasm of every other hen, with the result that her own little advertisement becomes a chorus. After a duck lays an egg she waddles silently away, without a sound to announce the fact. And still scientists claim that duck eggs are possessed of a great deal more nourishment than hens' eggs.

Vitagraph Engages George Chester.

George Chester, a well-known author of the "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" stories, has been engaged by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company, to assist in the production of the Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn. Mr. Chester assumed his duties last week and is now actively concerned in giving "out-liners" and sories of an unusual and remarkable type, which have made the Chester writings so popular with readers during the last few years.

Mr. Chester will not treat them as new goslings when he takes his place as literary counselor for Vitagraph, because he has been a frequent visitor there since the production of his novel, "The Enemy," and "The Message of the Mouse." The latter was an original story written by Mr. Chester and his wife and was produced by Vitagraph with Mr. Chester in the leading role. Ever since the production of his first story on the screen, Mr. Chester had been a keen student of motion picture construction and production and henceforth he will divide his time between fiction writing and motion picture work.

Lehr Institutes Reforms in Management of Studio.

In full charge of the Goldwyn studios in Los Angeles, is a man who, some time ago, had never been behind the scenes in a motion picture manufacturing plant. He is Abraham Lehr, vice-president in charge of production for Goldwyn Distribution Corporation, which has just moved its studio and producing staffs from Fort Lee to the coast.

J. A. Quinn, owner of the Rialto Theatre in Los Angeles, is making preparations to put what he calls his house-cleaning plan into practical application by forming producers and exhibitors into a league, which will seek to eliminate bad acting, bad stories, bad direction, inflated stories, and regulate rentals and films from sources.

Mr. Quinn says that the exhibitors, being vitally interested in the success of each picture, should have competent representatives as members of the shape of committees collaborating in advertising in an advisory and supervising capacity at the studios during the production of all films. These representatives should be in a position to pass judgments, cast, direction, attend preview as the picture progresses, watch the cutting and editing, and at the end be able to guarantee a picture that the producer can rent to the exhibitors at a figure that will give him a conservative profit and which the exhibitor can show at his regular scale.

Quinn says that the time is ripe for such a campaign and that he has the assurance of cooperation from exhibitors and producers, and feels sure that the plan can be put into successful operation to the satisfying and ultimate good of the industry.

The Theatre Owners' Association of Los Angeles and Southern California indorsed the campaign at a meeting held on November 4, by the passage of the following resolution:

"Whereas, the exhibitors of this association have in the past felt the burden of overproduction and excessive waste in the motion picture industry, and whereas J. A. Quinn, a recognized authority on production and exploitation, with a wide and varied experience as a producer and exhibitor, is determined to launch us a movement for the regulation of production and elimination of waste, and whereas, said movement has been found to possess the support of all exhibitors throughout the country; "Therefore, be it resolved, that this association indorses the Quinn house-cleaning movement and full support of his plan for the betterment of the conditions now existing."

THE DETAILS OF SUCCESSFUL EXHIBITION
With Bernard Depkin, Jr., of Baltimore, the Hero of Dwight S. Perrin's Interesting Contribution

NAME: Bernard Depkin, Jr.; address, Parkway Theatre Company, Theatre, McHenry Theatre, Wizard Theatre, Strand Theatre; City, Baltimore, Md.; Occupation, Motion Pictures; height, eight hand inches; weight, 175 pounds; manager of Baltimore's chain of leading motion picture theatres; Age, about 29; Hobby, hard work.

When some enterprising person compiled a book on "Who's Who" among motion picture exhibitors, the above description is going to fit snugly over the photograph of young Depkin, which is hand written by his "everybody's friend." Dwight S. Perrin, of Goldwyn, takes up the story from here:

The writer had occasion to visit Baltimore this week, and Depkin is an old acquaintance. He is in a position to know the Baltimore story better than almost anyone in the city, and is one of the big exhibitors of the year.

Mr. Depkin is a typical Baltimorean in every respect. He has been in the motion picture business for a number of years and is a success. He is a man of energy and hard work, and his success is due to his ability to handle the business properly.

Mr. Depkin is a man who is always ready to help others. He is a generous giver, and is always willing to lend a hand to anyone who needs it. He is a man of integrity and honesty, and is respected by all who know him.

The Baltimore story is one of success and growth. The city has a large number of motion picture theatres, and the business is doing well. The exhibitors are working hard to keep their theatres going, and are doing a good job.

In conclusion, Mr. Depkin is a man who is worthy of the highest praise. He is a success in every way, and is a credit to the motion picture business in Baltimore.
PARAMOUNT TO RELEASE DREW FILMS
Famous Couple Will Resume Making of Delightful Domestic Comedies—To Issue a Two-Reeler a Month

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will distribute the Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew Comedies to be released once a month commencing with March. This is known as Paramount-Drew Comedies. The contract between the distributors and the V. B. K. Film Corporation, producers, was arranged through W. E. Shallenberger.

Through mutual friends, Amedee J. Van Deuren, actively connected with the Van Beuren Bill Posting Company and in control of various motion picture theatres and places of amusement in the United States, was brought in touch with Mr. and Mrs. Drew, with the result that a contract was executed, the V. B. K. Film Corporation was formed and the production of two-reel ultra-comedies was commenced.

Thus with the signing of the contract for distribution through the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, it is also announced that three attractions are already finished for release. They are "Once a Mason," written by Albert Wynson Terhune, an adaptation from a story published in the Green Book; "The Amateur Liar," by the same author and published in story form in the same magazine, and "Romance and Rings," by Emma Anderson Whitman.

These productions, as is the case with all the pictures in which the Drews have appeared, have been directed solely by Mrs. Drew and edited by her. The interiors were screened at the Biograph studios, the exterior locations having never before been used in photoplay productions.

In connection with the future producing plans of the two popular screen stars, Mrs. Sidney Drew said: "Comparisons are oftentimes odious, but I want our host of friends to know that we are doing bigger things than my fondest ambitions ever hoped to realize. The pictures to be released through the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will be of the utmost possible quality and will be released to the public without delay. The color pictures to be released in the near future will be of the utmost possible quality. The pictures will be of the utmost possible quality, and are arranged to be produced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Sidney Drew. Mrs. Sidney Drew.

Drew's comedies includes the foreign as well as the United States' production. The two-reelers will be booked on our star series plan, and our agreement, which calls for a minimum distribution of one hundred prints in the United States, gives an idea of what a great circulation these films will have. A big advertising and exploitation campaign, prepared along novel lines, is already under way, based on the widely established popularity of these splendid artists. The two-reelers will be issued one a month, starting in January."

Tefft Johnson Outlines Defects in Picturemaking

TEFFT JOHNSON, the director who lately finished the production of "The Love of Paris," which June Elvidge is the star, for World Pictures, having had experience as a distributor covering a number of years, is in a position to speak authoritatively on the subject of making pictures. Mr. Johnson says:

The most material defect in the present method of making pictures is to my mind the haste in putting out the film, the story as outlined to the so-called director in the continuity. On the legitimate stage the director is given the manuscript several weeks before the company is called for rehearsal, and this gives him plenty of time to study the play, both as regards the nature of the distribution to the audience and the manner in which it must be conveyed by the actors, through interpretation under the guidance of the director.

With picture production it is different. In ninety cases out of one hundred the director is given his script a day or two before he begins his work, and it is impossible to get only the barest notion of the general idea of the story and then to go to work with a company that is selected overnight. On the legitimate stage the company rehearsal scenes over and over again until they are thoroughly familiar with lines, business, and general connection of their roles with every other part of the play.

Screen work as practiced compels the director to group his people as quickly as possible, and they shoot each scene without much more than a few minutes' instruction to the actor of just what is expected of him. This makes the actor an automaton and the director nothing more or less than a human signpost. One method is the result of deliberate concentration, while the other in a way represents the efforts of an orator who is not given his subject until he mounts the rostrum.

No appreciable improvement in the making of pictures can ever be attained until the producers so shape their affairs as to secure scenarios and continuities weeks in advance of production, and thus give the director ample time to study and digest his script. The scenic accessories of pictures will also be improved if the working staff is given plenty of time to get their end of the picture in shape before actual shooting begins.

Eddie Polo in New York.

Eddie Polo, known as "the Hercules of the screen," arrived in New York this week and had a triumphal visit among the exhibitors. The circus stunt man, who has just completed a thrilling serial entitled "The Lure of the Desert" for the Universal, was called to Gotham from the Coast by requests of the War Work campaign officials and exhibitors to put his prowess back of the recent drive. He stopped off on the way in Chicago and other cities, and aided the campaign with special performances.
News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By A. H. GIEBLER

CHARLIE MARRIED

Because R. S. "Cupid" Sparks, our business editor, of the city of Los Angeles, says it is so, we feel that it is safe to say that Charles Chaplin is married.

Before the wedding, according to Sparks, Chaplin's secretary, Thomas Harrington, appeared at the marriage license bureau to see what the prospects were for keeping quiet the matter of procuring a marriage license for one Charles Spencer Chaplin and Mildred Harris. Later Chaplin himself conferred with a deputy clerk and obtained his promise to keep the news of the wedding from the public as long as possible because neither Chaplin nor Miss Harris desired any publicity.

Sparks arranged for the wedding to take place at 7 o'clock in the evening of October 23, in the living room of his home at 266 South Normandie Avenue; and the license was issued just a few minutes before the ceremony was performed by the Rev. James I. Myers. Harrington and Sparks were witnesses to the marriage, and the newly wedded pair left immediately for the home of the bride's mother for the wedding supper, at which only the immediate members of the family were present. Chaplin gave his age at 29, and Miss Harris as 1.

Both appeared at their respective studios the next day as if nothing had happened, and they have been working ever since. Since their marriage has leaked out, it is thought that they will go away for a short honeymoon.

The Chaplins have taken a house in Laughlin Park, a very beautiful residence district of Los Angeles.

Theatrical Man from Australia.

George Smith, a leading exhibitor and theatrical man of Melbourne, Australia, who came to the United States several weeks ago in company with "Snowy" Baker, Australian athletic promoter, is now in Los Angeles after a lengthy stay in New York, where he has booked new vaudeville acts for his circuit. Mr. Smith is interested in an even dozen playhouses in Melbourne and its surrounding district.

"Australia is ripe for live wire picture people," says Mr. Smith. "The people over there are movie-mad, and just as soon as matters can be arranged, Mr. Baker and I plan to launch a producing unit. The country is rich in romance, and the atmospheric conditions are much the same as in California." Mr. Smith sails from San Francisco for Australia on December 3.

Parsons Engages Walthall.

William Parsons, who has just returned from New York, announces that he has signed up Henry B. Walthall to star in a number of productions to be filmed at the National Studios in Hollywood. These features will be released through the Robertson-Cole Company.

The National studio is being enlarged, in the meantime, for the accommodation of the three companies that will exploit the Senate, where, the Parsons Company, Billie Rhodes and Henry Walthall.

According to Mr. Parsons, the Billie Rhodes pictures were enthusiastically received by a large number of editors and critics to whom they were shown in New York.

Metro Plant Started.

Work has been started on the new Metro studio that is being built at Romanis and Cahuenga Avenue in Hollywood. The new plant will occupy an entire block, with a frontage of 280 feet and depth of 605 feet, and will represent an outlay of $180,000. The buildings alone will cost approximately $150,000.

As Metro is to transfer all studio activities to the west coast within a few months, space and equipment for eight or ten companies must be provided in the new plant.

The three large stages, two of which will be open and one enclosed will be ultra modern in design and equipment. The enclosed stages will cover 70 by 100 feet of ground, and the inclosed stage 70 by 195 feet.

At present May Allison is the only Metro star in the west, since Bert Lytell has joined the army, but Mme. Nazimova is expected soon, and other stars, including Ethel Barrymore, Emily Stevens, Lou Tellegen, Nola Dana and Emmy Wehlen, are looked for by the first of the year.

Haworth Wants Film Stars.

The Haworth Pictures Corporation, which was organized to produce and exploit the Sesquale Hayakawa productions, is now looking about for two feminine stars to add to its roster. The success of the two Hayakawa pictures already released under the Haworth plan, decided the company to increase the organization to the extent of two more stars for the time being.

Pannie Yard, whose contract with Pathé expires in a short time, may affiliate herself with the Haworth Corporation if suitable arrangement can be made.

Gish Sisters Contract Flu.

Lillian Gish, star of D. W. Griffiths productions, was stricken with Spanish influenza while working in special scenes at the Sunset Studio on Sunday, November 3. The actress had been working all day, when suddenly she complained of a severe headache, and was taken home. A physician was sent for. On Tuesday, Dorothy Gish came down with the same malady, and by night the sisters were encased in pneumonia jackets as a precaution against threatened pneumonia.

Marjorie Daw, another popular film ingenue, contracted the disease at the same time. Miss Olga Baclanova, who has been ill for some time, was also threatened with pneumonia. However, all three of the girls were well on the way to recovery within a few days.

Eltinge Comes Male Impersonator.

Julian Eltinge, who is getting ready to begin on a film production entitled "The Fascinating Widower," declares that his entire wardrobe in this picture will feature masculine wigs, poutre de riz and high heeled pumps, will all go into the discard for that one production, at least as far as he is concerned. He will appear as a man all through the play, for once! June Mathis has written the scenario for the coming production, and Robert Thornby is said to have been selected as director. Sylvia Ashton and Charles Butler have been engaged for important roles.

A New Griffith Star.

Sarol Dempster, a popular Ruth St. Denis dancer in the West, has been given one of the leading roles in the forthcoming pictures that are to be filmed by D. W. Griffith for the Artcraft program. Miss Dempster has never been seen on the screen, but the fact that Mr. Griffith has cast her in an important part in his picture speaks well for a promising future for her. Other well known players in the Griffith cast are Clare Seymour, who has graduated out of comedies into drama; Richard Bar thermalness, Robert Carson, Kate Bruce, George Fawcett and Syn de Conde.

Camp Kearney Entertained by Film Playhouse.

In spite of the flu and the closing orders of the Health Department, the 20,000 soldiers at Camp Kearney did not have to forgo all theatrical entertainment during the quarantine. In response to an appeal made to the Motion Picture War Service Association, that organization agreed to provide a nightly show, lasting an hour and a half, the players leaving Los Angeles in the late afternoon in motor cars provided by the association, until the ban is lifted.

A stage was built at the camp on the exact limit of the quarantine reservation so that the players remained out of quarantine, while the audience was within the limits. The soldiers wore masks, but the players remained unmasked.

The first entertainment was given by a company from the Lasky studio in charge of Jeanie MacPherson. Each studio agreed to give a show for the soldiers.

High Society Doings.

Kitty Gordon no sooner arrived in Los Angeles than she became the rage in society circles, and has been indulging with invitations to all sorts of social events. Last week, however, Miss Gordon took it upon herself to give a party, in honor of Mrs. T. M. O'Brien, a friend from the East. Most of the film notables were invited, including Julian Eltinge, Charlie Chaplin, Fannie Ward, Mae Murray, Bessie Barriscale and many others, besides a number of society figures of Los Angeles. A few evenings later Fannie Ward entertained almost the same persons who graced Miss Gordon's affair. Dancing and a film entertainment of the evening at both parties.

Film Folk to Aid War Work.

The motion picture people of Los Angeles have pledged themselves to raise $50,000 toward the support of the campaign. The Motion Picture War Service Association will handle all subscriptions from the film industry to the theatres and exchanges for the purpose. On account of the quarantine by the Health Department the money will necessarily have to be raised by personal subscription instead of through entertainments, which have been so profitable in the past.

Arbuckle Rents Space at Sennett's.

When Fatty Arbuckle gets over the spell of tonsillitis from which he has been suffering for some time and the flu ban is lifted he will begin the production of some of his pictures for Famous comedies at the Sennett studios, where he has arranged for space and the use of the studio equipment.

Double Trouble for Mix.

Tom Mix considers that he saved a large variable time by leaving the flu during the time he was in the hospital convalescing from the operation of having a fifteen-year-old bullet taken from his spine. He had been in the hospital the same time that his doctor and several nurses got it and made one big spell of it, and by the time he was well of one trouble the other had developed in both.

Sister of Robert Harron Dies.

Anna Harron, sister of Robert Harron, the Griffith film star, died of the influenza at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Harron, in Hollywood, on November 8. Comedian Dies in Camp.

Private Chester Ryckman, 21 years old, a former comedian with L-Ko comedies, died of pneumonia on Nov. 8, four days after he had contracted influenza. Ryckman had been sent to Camp Rosecrans only two weeks before his death. His body was sent to Los Angeles for burial, his parents coming from their home in Portland, Ore., to attend the funeral. Ryckman was the third L-Ko comedian to die of influenza.

Photoplaywright Succumbs to Influenza.

W. Blaine Pearson, author of a number of photoplays and one time director at Universal City, died of influenza on Nov. 8. He had been in Los Angeles, but returned to his home in Sacramento, but became interested in the film industry and came to Los Angeles to make it his profession. One of the last productions with which he was connected was the film version of "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," which he edited. His wife, father, brother and two brothers survive him.

Clune a Member of United Theatres.

W. H. Clune, proprietor of both Clune's Auditorium and Clune's Broadway Theatre, has joined the organization of the United Picture Theatres of America, which controls the productions of Dustin Farnum, Kitty Gordon, Florence Lawrence and others. The pictures featuring these stars will be shown at one of the Clune houses, though whether at the Auditorium or at the Broadway, has not been decided.

James W. Anderson, manager of the Broadway, has been supervising the general housecleaning and renovation that has been going on in the theatre during the health closing period. He will offer Dorothy Gish in "Batting Jane" as the Broadway's first attraction, when the theatres are permitted to reopen.

California Organ Installed.

No less than seven experts are working to install the big organ that will form part of the orchestra in the new Calibrator, and the booking office has been designated with the task of the job. Fred Miller, one of the officials of the California, is in correspondence with a number of notable organ manufacturers, with the object of securing one to manipulate the complicated instrument.

Theatre Owners Protest.

A meeting of some fifty prominent film exhibitors was held at Quinn's Kiltaloo Nov. 8 to discuss the influenza situation. Theatrical men and picture producers were present, and all agreed that the influenza epidemic has been borne entirely by the theatres and the churches and that unjust discrimination had been shown. A protest at the Theatrical Owners Institute was that all exhibitors were glad to co-operate with other businesses in an effort to stop the spread of the disease, but that when the restricted rulings that now prevail. A committee was appointed to confer with the health officers the morning after the meeting, to the Health Department, calling for a general closing or a general opening of all business houses, was signed not only by the members of the Institute, but by representatives of the large studios in the Los Angeles district. D. W. Griffith, the Lasky organization and Metro are actively co-operating with the theatre owners.

Goldwyn Advance Guard Arrives.

Several of the Goldwyn officials have already arrived from the East to take up their winter quarters at the former Triangle plant at Culver City. Among these are Mason M. Linton, producing manager; Hugo Ballin, art director; Reginald Barker and Clarence Badger, directors of Goldwyn's production office.

Studio Shorts.

DIEGO POLO left Universal City for his first feature film. His final screen test in "The Lure of the Circus" were finished. Polo will appear in several New York productions with California stars (California being made by automobile, making personal appearances in many of the cities through which he is coming). Polo will play in playing in Roy Stewart's new western picture.

Franklyn Farnum has lost his case in the automobile collision suit, which was tried recently in the court, and was to pay $575 damages to the other fellow.

The National studio has gone way over the top in its donations to the United War Fund by 9 o'clock in the morning of the first day of the drive.

Mary Pickford is boosting Canada's Sixth War Loan this week. She has been a propaganda film to be used during the campaign.

Eugene B. Lewis, associate scenario editor of Universal City, was married last week to Miss Grace L. Brown, formerly of Danville, Ill.

Mrs. Ted Browning, wife of the film director, has gone to Portland on a visit.

Sergeant Anderson Dies from Wounds.

Official confirmation has been received at the headquarters of the famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Eighty-fourth Company, Sixth Regiment, United States Marines, from wounds received in action. Prior to his enlistment Sergeant Anderson was employed in the Philadelphia and Pittsburgh offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Immediately after this news he severed his connection with the company and enlisted. The death of Sergeant Anderson places the first gold star on the honor roll of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Impeccable Was the Word.

An error in the article "The Greatness of Woman," printed in the issue of November 23, changed the meaning intended and robbed the production of its due. The incorrect sentence should have read, "The Heloise-Abelard and the Cyrene-Fisherian episodes are well-nigh impeccable."

Soldiers Depend Upon Films for Recreation

GEORGE BALSDON, who resigned as manager of Vitagraph's New York branch to become active in Y. M. C. A. work in the war zone, has written an interesting letter to the Moving Picture World, from which we quote in part:

I am very busy on a man's sized job here, but the work is so interesting and the soldier boys appreciate our efforts so much that it is a pleasure to work fourteen to sixteen hours a day. The Y. M. C. A. does wonderful work here for the boys. They provide the link between home and the front. No matter where the boys move to, there they will find the Y. M. C. A. with canteen supplies, books, periodicals and some sort of recreation for them in their hours off duty.

I have just been to a place where a lot of heavy fighting is going on. After a spell in the trenches, our boys are marched to rest camps just back of the lines. The Y. M. C. A. at this point is in part of an old monastery. The place is all shot to pieces, but we took a trailer with a Delco gasoline engine mounted on it to generate electric current (which is stored in accumulators) and rigged up some electric lights for them to read by and write letters home. Also set up a Power's portable projection machine and gave them pictures.

"It would do your heart good to see how pleased the boys were, after their long grind in the trenches, to find real comfort and recreation right up at the front lines. We also sent a small suitcase machine with battery right up to the trenches and gave a show in dug-outs to about a dozen boys at a time. It's a risky business, but the boys are entitled to it and they run bigger risks. My term with the Y. M. C. A. was up on September 5, but I cannot drop the work here. It is so vitally important to keep the boys in good spirits and give them recreation. There is nothing that can fill the bill or that the boys so much desire (except mail from home) as the motion picture. It visualizes home and things American. I was the trade to know what an important item pictures are to our soldiers, and no one knows better or had more experience than the boys' old friend, the Y. M. C. A."

"I've been from one end of the fighting front to the other and have lived with the boys under every condition, good or bad. I am sending a photograph of my outfit and 'home.'"

U. B. O. to Program All Red Cross War Films

A deal is announced by which the United Booking Offices, the dominant source of vaudeville attractions, will program the American Red Cross war work films in hundreds of theatres. This arrangement is dated to begin generally at once. It means that the Red Cross films will receive immediate and distinctive exhibition in all the big cities through the foremost vaudeville theatre circuits and the most prominent independently owned vaudeville houses.

It is due to the active interest of John Murdock, manager of the U. B. O., in Red Cross aims, that this arrangement was possible. Mr. Murdock and E. F. Albee, of the U. B. O., have joined in the co-operation with the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures, after a similar action a few weeks ago when the U. B. O. accepted the initial release of Red Cross film, "The Historic Fourth of July in Paris."

W. E. Waddell, director of the Bureau of Pictures of American Red Cross, reports that there are over 20,000 American Red Cross members, and the purpose of the war work film distribution through motion picture and vaudeville houses is to secure the most direct, effective and prompt contact with this membership.

Charles Burr Marries.

Charles C. Burr, assistant general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's distribution department, on November 14, deserted the bachelors' union without giving notice to his friends. Mr. Burr is one of the popular men in the industry and has become a factor in the distribution affairs of Paramount and Artcraft pictures. The bride was Miss Clemence Amy of Westfield, N. J., where the wedding took place in St. Mary's Church. The marriage of honor was Mrs. Herbert MacDonell and the best man Jack Eaton, president of Town and Country Films, Inc., producers of the James Montgomery Flagg comedies.

CROY WRITES MOVIE PICTURE HISTORY
Well Known Writer Tells of Moving Pictures in a New Book and Gets His Facts Straight

EVENTUALLY it was reasonably certain that someone would write a history of the motion picture that would be authentic in its facts and not a mass of glaring misstatement. For years the motion picture industry has tried to suppress information about various phases of studio life, but it has remained for Homer Croy to clarify the history of pictures and present the facts in a straightforward manner.

This has been done through the medium of "How Motion Pictures Are Made," which has just been published by the author in the past few years. The book passes lightly over the early days of the Wheel of Life and Zoetrope type, and after assigning them their proper place, the camera turns directly to the origination of motion pictures by means of the experiments of Dr. Coleman Sellers of Philadelphia. He does not, however, mention that the Sellers or plate, which was of the peephole type, was apparently enlarged into a projection apparatus, as is shown from an old Philadelphia photograph.

From Sellers he passes on to Muybridge, Marey, Edison, Armat, Paul and Lumierre in their proper order, giving to each his credit for the work he has done toward the development of pictures in motion. It is the first work to deal accurately and exhaustively with these facts, and as such should become standard.

Mr. Croy's work is not impeccable but in his history he is in exact accord with the facts as they have been developed in the past few years. He gets back of Muybridge for pictures motion, where Talbot apparently had never heard of that investigator.

It is in his military history that Mr. Croy fails slightly in that he does not present his facts in chronological order. He speaks, for example, of the good old days in the service camps, using camp as a mask, but puts this before the formation of the Patents Company, whereas most of this trouble accompanied the growth of the independent companies. The same way he fails to give other happenings their proper place in point of time, evidently having failed fully to digest the facts he gleaned. It is to be regretted that he does not include the late William T. Rock in the formation of the Vitagraph company, and he fails in his military history to the real pronounces 114 Nassau street the birthplace of this company. Vitagraph's first address was 140 Nassau street, and it was on the roof of this building that its success was discovered. The street was named to 114-116 Nassau street was not made until the studio was removed to Flatbush. Just in passing the first Vitagraph plate used in their films was a successful one. The Edison Black Maria, but was merely a board platform.

Coming to the actual making of pictures, there are a few points on the ground. He covers this more clearly than his predecessors and gives information more up to date, including chapters on moving pictures of weeklies, though, unfortunately, he does not go into the history of the latter. He does not apparently know that in England and France the news weekly and later methods of news were brought to America and that for years the racing classics have been shown on the screen of London theatres the same night they ran. In Germany L. and Ernster, with the Epsom course, or at Liverpool, developing and printing being accomplished in a special car on the way to the race.

On the other hand there are chapters on advertising and talking pictures and full and interesting chapters on cartoons and photography in the section on talking pictures he decides upon the light ray as the best source of speech for the picture, bringing this feature into a book for the first time.

Mr. Croy's work is not the final word in motion picture literature, but it is the first of its kind. It is the most authentic, and a few changes and rearrangement in the second edition will give a book that will be the first to give the facts correctly and without any romance upon any subject. A hitherto produced and shows care and labor in its fabrication. It is lavishly illustrated, and the illustrations are germane to the text and not merely put in to fill up. Each illustration has a direct bearing upon some portion of the text. As a recital of early history is a bit chronic and leaves a feeling of criticism. It is only in dealing with the period between that Mr. Croy fails to speak with full authority, and here he fails in that he does not follow chronological order.

WINNIPEG EXCHANGE MANAGERS FIGHT PROPOSED FIRE MEASURE

THE film exchanges of Winnipeg, Manitoba, were given some encouragement, in connection with their fight against the proposed civic by-laws, which state that all exchanges must be housed in one-story buildings of fireproof construction and also provides for various appliances for the purpose of extinguishing moving picture films, when Mayor Davidson announced that he does not expect the measure to be passed by the city council. When the series of winter and light committee. It will probably be late in November before the proposed law will reach the city council, and in the meantime the local exchange managers are using every method to block the passage of the measure. They have already notified the city and all local theatres that they will close up the Winnipeg branches if the law becomes effective.

LAW WOULD DRIVE EXCHANGES FROM CITY.

A strong delegation of the local exhibitors waited upon the Winnipeg of Control in November 8 with a request that the by-law be not approved, as it would force the exchanges from Winnipeg and would put smaller theatres out of business. The delegation also asked what the city intended to do toward granting theatre employees financial relief because of the closure of the theatres. Winnipeg theatres were closed on October 12, and there was a likelihood that they would continue closed until the end of November. The controllers declared that they were waiting for statistics which the local exchange and theatres had prepared as to the number of people affected by the closed theatres and their financial position, etc.

TRADE BOARD INTERCEDES.

The Board of Trade of Winnipeg has also interceded in the matter of local exchanges, and a circular letter has been sent out to all members of the board regarding the objectionable features of the proposed by-laws, stating that such a law would force the exchanges from Winnipeg, and that such a move would throw 800 persons out of employment. The annual payroll of the Winnipeg exchanges is $500,000, it was stated, and the local exchanges expend $37,500 annually for office supplies, $25,000 for repairs and additions to offices and buildings, $40,000, for electricity, $50,000 for advertising, and $37,000 a year for expressages. It is also mentioned that a local film exchange manager has provided the information that Winnipeg exchanges and picture theatres pay taxes to the city, province and county amounting to $85,000 annually at the present time. The Board of Trade has interest itself in the matter because it believes the subject vital to the public interests of the community.

MRS. TURNBULL'S BOOK.

Harper and Brothers have published "The Close-Up," a novel of motion picture life by Margaret Turnbull, of the Famous Players-Lasky scenario department. The book is obviously an effort to make use of a technical term in order to gain interest, but the story is commendably free from any effort to fabulously exploit the studies. The color is full and accurate, but it is merely the background to a well-planned story, not overdrawn, of the making of a star. Through clever plotting the interest is well sustained and keeps the reader in suspense until the last chapter. You know the man in the picture, and you should believe by no means that the story will end as you anticipate. The volume is interesting not only as a glimpse into pictureland, but as a red-blooded romance.

CANADIAN GENERAL FILM MAN PRaised.

At a meeting of the Area Committee of the Y. M. C. A. military service department in Toronto, a special vote of thanks was passed for the hearty cooperation of Manager T. S. Cooper, of the General Film Company, in the entertainment of soldiers at various camps and hospitals. Booker T. E. Bedard, of the Toronto exchange, was also mentioned in the resolution.

Stephen W. B. Cowles was present at the meeting and was congratulated by Mr. Cooper on his efforts in connection with the film work. Mr. Cowles was present at the meeting and was congratulated by Mr. Cooper on his efforts in connection with the film work.
Everybody Feeling Better, the Flu Is on the Wane, and Horrurous Stage of Epidemic Is Reached

By Giebler

But Dave has a good time with it just the same. Outside of this jokemaking tendency, the colony is about the same, and as normal as ever it is.

I heard that Smiling Billy Parsons and Isadore Bernstein had got back from New York and went out to look them over.

We had heard several reports that Mr. Bernstein had died while in New York. I asked him about this, and he declared there was not a word of truth in the reports.

Billy Parsons smiled his usual smile and told me a lot of good news about our own Henry Walthall, who we all feared had lost to the legitimate, coming back to the screen to work at the National Studios, and about the big new stages they were going to build for him and Billie Rhodes to act on.

Sees Wilfred Lucas on a Bust.

After this I went down on the lot and saw Wilfred Lucas on a bust. It was a good bust, too, because Technical Director M. J. Doner, who knows all about busts, was making it.

The bust was to be used in a play called "Gay," that Mr. Lucas was making with himself and Cleo Madison as the stars. Lucas as "Terry," a bad gambler with a good heart, is supposed to die in the play, and the bust is to ornament a monument erected to his memory by his friends.

Lucas told me to stick around a while and I would see a good fight scene, and I stuck. Frank Brownlee was the heavy of the piece, and I thought maybe he and Lucas were going to do the fighting, and as they are pretty well matched as to heft it would have made some fight.

But instead of that, Brownlee and Cleo Madison went to the mat together, and still it was some fight. Of course Brownlee got the best of it, because it was written down that way in the scenario, but that little "Gal" surely did put up some scrap.

Lucas bolstered "Cut" at just the proper time to save Brownlee a good sized bunch of moss from the part of his head where he hasn't so very much hair to spare.

Mary Has Her Little Joke.

Speaking of jokes, Mary Talbot is the official joksmith of the Lucas company. Here's a sample of her work. Everybody remembers the H dropping cockney who said, "It's not the 'oof's, but the 'ammer, 'ammer, 'ammer on the 'ard 'ighway."

Well, Mary would recite that, only she would wind up with "'ard pavement" instead of "'ard 'ighway." Then, of course, some one would "call" her, and say: "That's not right, it's the 'ammer, 'ammer, 'ammer on the 'ard 'ighway."

And then Mary would smile sweetly and say, "But this didn't happen in Iowa, it happened in St. Paul, which is in Minnesota."

Some of those who fell for it said it was pretty bad, but a lot of us fell, including Vera White, Harry Rattenbury, B. Johns, who is an Englishman himself and told me how to pronounce "Tra-talgar Square" just like a regular Britisher; Harry Fowler, the cameraman, and M. S. Goldaine, who was helping Lucas direct the picture.

Has Been a Villainous Week.

This was certainly a villainous week. After I left Brownlee and his heavy work I went over to the Hampton studio, where they are making a play called "The End of the Game," with five villains in the cast.

J. D. Hampton lined them up all in a row. "Look 'em over," he said.

I did, and a worse looking lot of plot-

TO BUILD $2,000,000 PICTURE HOUSE

Stanley Company's Philadelphia Theatre Will Be One of the Most Beautiful in the Country

WITH the modification by the United States Government of the rules laid down for building operations during the war, architects, contractors and builders are getting plans into shape for millions of dollars' worth of new work in Philadelphia, and one of the biggest contracts to be awarded as soon as conditions permit will be that for the new Stanley Theatre, which will be erected at the southwest corner of Nineteenth and Market streets.

This announcement was made recently by Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Theatre, and he further stated that had it not been for the war the erection of the new theatre would have been begun two years ago and completed by this time. When the Government made its call for labor and materials of all kinds the St ley company felt that it was its patriotic duty to postpone the building until the war was over, Mr. Mastbaum stated. Now that the conditions are changing, plans for the new house, already prepared, are being gone over to the most minute detail, and as soon as matters are settled in the labor and material fields the contracts will be awarded and the erection of the new Stanley begun.

The new theatre, according to the plans which were prepared under the personal supervision of Mr. Mastbaum, will be one of the most elaborate motion picture houses in the country. It must cost $2,000,000 and will be modern in every respect, occupied with all the latest scientific appliances for sanitation and also for the comfort and convenience of patrons. The plans call for no stairways in any part of the building, approach to the balconies and the main floor being by ascending and descending inclines. There will be a seating capacity of 4,000 and an innovation will be a roof garden for patrons during the summer.

The new Stanley will follow the policy of the present popular house at Sixteenth and Market streets—that of being the headquarters in the East for first run of all photoplays. As at present, music will be an important adjunct to the picture—in fact, an ad-junct in itself. In the present Stanley there is an orchestra of twenty-five high class musicians. In the new theatre of the same class augmented to fifty in addition to the organists, and besides these it is the intention of Mr. Mastbaum to have from time to time vocal soloists and possibly choruses.

Brunet Makes Statement Regarding Pathe Weekly

THE Pathe News was never known as the 'Hearst International News.' It has always been identified with the name of Pathe since its inception over forty years ago, and it always will be." This is the keynote of a statement by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in reply to a recent announcement regarding the expansion of the Hearst and Pathe concerns.

"To clear up any misconception that may have been created by this statement," said Mr. Brunet, "it must be explained that I will be able to give a brief resume of the history of the Pathe News, which for the last forty-three years has been united with the International news film, the combination being known as the 'Hearst-Pathe News.'

"The first news film to be devised, assembled and released was the Pathe Journal in France some twelve years ago. The innovation proved to be so successful that the Pathe organization in this country about ten years ago started a similar news film, released weekly in one reel, called the Pathe News. Four years ago, in the spring of 1914, to be more permanent, it was changed in form and length to the daily short reel of 200 to 300 feet, and the name became the Pathe News. As the Pathe News it continued until January 1, 1916, when by reason of a contract entered into with International Film Service, Inc., the name of Hearst was added, and it was called the 'Hearst-Pathe News.' But though the Hearst name was added the Pathe News remained the sole property of Pathe, controlled, published, edited and distributed by Pathe. For reasons deemed good and sufficient by us, the contract, originally drawn for the period of two years and which will expire on December 24, has not been renewed.

Fox Closes Offices on Victory Day

In celebration of the end of the war, William Fox gave notice that the home office of the Fox Film Corporation, at 130 West 46th street, New York, be closed at noon, so that the employes could go out and celebrate. The stenographers of the various departments were hired a huge truck for the afternoon and joined in the festivities, the truck proclaiming the girls' exuberance with such songs as "Buckskin Cur Is in the Pound," "They've Knocked Old Bill to Holland Gone," "Closed for the Day—Me and Gott—Without Gott."
The collection has classed desert, the newly difficult case, one which appeared in a part which showed any of the work done in the month during his circus career. His character, the King of the Air, in "The Lure of the Circus," is, therefore, really his first attempt to perform any of his circus feats before the camera. His long experience in circus work, together with his prominence as leading aerial wonder of the Barnum and Bailey shows, leads one to expect a collection of feats of daring, of the break-neck type, never before seen in moving pictures.

Mr. Polo is an American of Italian descent. His father was a prospect for gold away back in the early days, and was always accompanied by his wife on his travels. This accounts for the fact that the subject of this sketch was born out in a desert, in the family wagons. When Polo was four years of age his parents joined a small wagon circus, his father being the circus performer before he came to this country. Eddie contributed his share to the family earnings by doing his little part. Mr. Polo has never touched a drop of strong drink in his life, and has always led an outdoor life. These facts account for his strength, agility and daring for a man of his years.

EDDIE POLO PAYS CHICAGO BRIEF VISIT
Universal Serial Star Interviewed—Will Make Motor Tour for Personal Appearances

EDDIE POLO, director and star of serials for Universal at the present time, arrived in the city Tuesday, November 12, from Los Angeles and stopped over several days before proceeding to New York. During his stay he appeared at a number of theatres, by arrangement, where he delivered addresses on his work in serials and especially on "The Lure of the Circus," which he recently completed and which will be released November 23.

This serial has eighteen episodes, of two reels each. Mr. Polo takes the part of the "King of the Air" throughout, and Eileen Sedgwick plays opposite him in the role of leading equestrienne of the circus.

As "King of the Air" Mr. Polo gives a real circus performance, which abounds in hazardous feats and thrills. Each episode has at least two or three thrills, and while talking to me Mr. Polo found it difficult to state which of these death-defying feats was the most dangerous, as nearly all of them can be placed in that class.

During the run of the first two episodes Mr. Polo also engages in numerous real, tough, fistic encounters, with an opponent worthy of his steel in each case, in addition to his circus stunts. One of these opponents is Duke Lee, a strapping six footer, who has a prize-ring record and is classed as one of the greatest fighters of this type in the game. In several of the episodes Mr. Polo is seen in a regular ring battle, and in each case his opponent is a man of reputation in the squared arena.

Miss Sedgwick, the woman star, is the subject of many exciting adventures and hairbreadth escapes during the story of "The Lure of the Circus," and in all these Mr. Polo arrives in the nick of time, in his character as "King of the Air," to rescue her.

Not a Tame Spot Anywhere.
"There is not a tame spot in any one of the episodes," said Mr. Polo, with much emphasis. "I broke two fingers in one episode, tore a ligament in my right knee in another, in addition to receiving sundry cuts and bruises all over my body, on various occasions."

During his stay in New York Mr. Polo will arrange to drive back to Los Angeles in his own automobile. He will stop at all important centers on the way, at the request of numerous exhibitors. He will appear at their theatres and give interesting talks at each concerning his part in "The Lure of the Circus." The trip will last about three months, beginning about November 21.

Mr. Polo left the Barnum and Bailey circus four years ago, having made up his mind to try his luck in moving pictures. Since that time he has been wholly engaged in moving picture work, but has never appeared in a part which showed any of the work done by him during his circus career. His character, the King of the Air, in "The Lure of the Circus," is, therefore, really his first attempt to perform any of his circus feats before the camera. His long experience in circus work, together with his prominence as leading aerial wonder of the Barnum and Bailey shows, leads one to expect a collection of feats of daring, of the break-neck type, never before seen in moving pictures.

Mr. Polo is an American of Italian descent. His father was a prospect for gold away back in the early days, and was always accompanied by his wife on his travels. This accounts for the fact that the subject of this sketch was born out in a desert, in the family wagons. When Polo was four years of age his parents joined a small wagon circus, his father being the circus performer before he came to this country. Eddie contributed his share to the family earnings by doing his little part. Mr. Polo has never touched a drop of strong drink in his life, and has always led an outdoor life. These facts account for his strength, agility and daring for a man of his years.

Manager Nehls, of American, Returns from Santa Barbara

R. NEHLS, general manager of the American Film Company, returned to the home office last week after a month's absence, during which the organization's studios at Santa Barbara were visited. On his ar-

Great Impetus Given Sales of American Productions

THE president of the American Film Company, Samuel S. Hutchinson, announces that great impetus has been given to the sales of his organization by a new arrangement recently made with Pathe Exchange, Inc. By this change more than 150 additional salesmen have been added to American's selling forces.

After conferring with Vice-President and General Manager Brunet, of the Pathe organization, a clause was added to that corporation's contract with the American Film Company to the effect that all Pathe selling representatives will also push the sales of "Flying A" productions. By this means the American product will be handled by nearly 200 active sales representatives.

Each of these salesmen, American and Pathe alike, will be equipped with the complete sales paraphernalia of the American, such as campaign books for exhibits (issue feature), the general pamphlet which treats of American stars, productions, etc., and a newly issued volume entitled, "One Hundred Years Flying A: The Book of the 'Flying A' Productions."

"Shoulder Arms" Captures Chicago.
"Shoulder Arms," Chaplin's latest comedy, has taken Chicago by storm, paralleling in its effects, in a way, the first reliable news received announcing the signing of the armistice "over there." Kitty Kelly, in the Herald-Examiner, wrote about it in part:

"Shoulder Arms' is very, very funny. Mr. Chaplin, with his sad seriousness, makes a delicious doughboy and gets into situations amazing even for him. Laughter, applause and loud applause when he bags the person who is seeking safety in Hawaii.

"It's a bravely jolly little picture, excellently done, and a concentration of brilliances, in a comedy way, like the light-shooting facets of a diamond."

Ralph O. Proctor Moves to Coast.

Ralph O. Proctor, formerly Pathe's district manager for the middle western states, with headquarters in Chicago, was recently appointed to a similar position for the Pacific Coast, with headquarters at Los Angeles. He was obliged to leave for the Coast not long ago on account of poor health, but the Los Angeles climate has completely restored him. Mr. Proctor is well known among exhibitors in the trade all over the middle west, and it is safe to say that every one of them will be glad to hear of his success in the new field. He has no doubt that he will repeat on the Coast the pronounced success achieved in this neck of the woods. Mr. Proctor accompanied him to Los Angeles during his illness.

Lightless Nights Lifted in Chicago.

Lightless nights for picture theatres in the city on Sundays and Tuesdays, were called off since last writing, the order taking effect Monday, November 11.

Federal Director Durham, of Illinois, issued the order November 9. He explained that a surplus of screenings, which is the sort of coal most used in generating lightless conditions, was the order possible, stating besides that indications are such as to exclude the possibility of there being a shortage of this kind during the rest of the winter. The order prevails throughout the entire state.

Mr. Durham said that four nights a week has been eight and two a week in Ohio and Michigan will continue lightless.

Chicago exhibitors should be, therefore, very thankful that the "lightless" ban, as well as the "lightless" has been lifted about the same time.

General and Kleine Officials Confer.

A conference was held Tuesday afternoon, November 12, in George Kleine's executive offices between M. A. Smith, general manager of the George Kleine system; Douglas H. Berg, personal traveling representative for George Kleine, and W. F. Rogers, sales manager of the General Film Company, from the home office, New York; Walter S. Reid, western section manager, and H. L. O. Rear, central western division manager of the G. F. Co. from Cincinnati.

The subject of discussion was the general conditions and future plans for the George Kleine chain, in connection with the distribution of its product through the G. F. Company.

Death of M. S. Ludick, Chicago.

M. S. Ludick, owner of the Melrose Park Theatre, and formerly owner of the Crystal Theatre at Milwaukee and Grand avenue, died Thursday morning, November 14, in his home at 2650 North Wright. The cause of death was anemia. Mr. Ludick had been ill for eight weeks, and leaves a wife and a daughter to mourn his loss.

The funeral service was held Saturday morning, at St. Sylvester Church, on Shakespeare avenue, and the interment was at St. Adelbert cemetery.

Mr. Ludick was an upright man and a good citizen. He was held in high esteem by a large following of exhibitors. He was a member for two years of the executive committee of Chicago and Illinois. He built the Melrose about three years ago and conducted it so skillfully since that no opposition has ever been attempted in that locality, which is considered a very fine one.

A committee of Chicago exhibitors, members of the League, attended the funeral and forwarded a set of resolutions deploring his death and extending sympathy to Mrs. Ludick and her daughter.

Health Conditions in Chicago Normal.

Health conditions in Chicago were declared normal Tuesday morning, November 12, for the first time since the influenza epidemic started. The death rate for the 24 hours ending the time mentioned was 101, from all causes.

On Wednesday, November 13, however, the number of new cases of influenza was 148 and the deaths 21; also the number of new cases of pneumonia was 79 and the deaths 69. City Health authorities attributed these conditions to the big Victory celebration on Monday, November 11, when many thousands walked the streets and with their hats off. He issued a warning to all who exhausted their strength on that day to take a good rest so as to restore vitality and consequent resistance to the "flu.

Dr. Drake Returns to Springfield.

State Health Director Drake closed his headquarters in the Hotel Sherman about the middle of the week, and returned to Springfield. This shows that in the northern section of Illinois the quarantine of lightless conditions was declared Friday, November 15, and the question of reclosing the schools was considered.

From what can be learned of conditions in the southern part of the state they are improving, but quarantine may be maintained in many communities for a week or longer.

Norbert Lusk Goes to Coast.

Norbert Lusk, for more than a year a member of Goldwyn's publicity staff, was sent to the coast to take charge of publicity at the company's Los Angeles studios. His duties there will include the preparation and placing of newspaper material in Los Angeles and the handling of special feature matter for the motion picture magazines. Headquarters of the Goldwyn publicity department will continue to be maintained at the company's home office, 10 East Forty-second street, New York City.

November 17 Attractions at New York Theatres

STRAND—Billie Burke in a Paramount production. "The Man I Believe Wife" was the screen star at the Strand Theatre the week of November 17. Most of the scenes are laid in the Adirondacks, and set the outdoor views are very fine. The picture was adapted from a story by Edward Childs Carpenter. David Powell heads the supporting company. The Topical Review, Allied War Review, a travel picture and an educational completed the film part of the program. The entire fifth act of "Coward's" "The Young Idea," Michot as Marguerite, Ralph Erole as Faust, and Yon Collognon as Mephisto.

RIALTO and RIVOLI—"Under Four Flags." The dramatization of the Picture, issued by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, which was assembled under the supervision of S. J. Rothapfel, was the exclusive screen feature at both the Rialto and the Rivoli. The musical setting was an important and elaborately carried out portion of the play. The Rialto Male Quartette at the Rialto and Greek Evans at the Rialto were the vocal attractions.

BROADWAY—Mildred Harris in "Borrowed Clothes" and Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms."

World Pictures Holds Open Places.

World Pictures has sent a letter to each of its employees now in service in the army, navy or marines to the effect that their former places with the company are being held open for them until they are mustered out of the service and ready to resume work in civilian life.

The World hopes that each of its former employees will return to its service when the nation's fighting forces are demobilized, and it is for the purpose of accomplishing this in an unmistakable manner to such employees that the general letter regarding this matter has been written.

From the beginning of the war to the present time the employment of the World in various capacities, either at the studio, at the home office or in the branch offices, are now in the army, navy or marines. While a few of the number have been wounded, not one has been killed, so far as the World is aware.

Rex Beach Suggests Goldwyn Title.

Because of the discovery that the title recently had been used for a motion picture, "Goldwyn," the name of Mae Marsh's next release, now completed, from "Southern Pride" to "The Racing Strain." The new title incidentally was suggested by Rex Beach, who was in the Goldwyn staff conference when the subject was under discussion.

"The Racing Strain" is a romantic story of the Kentucky and the race-tracks. It was written by Tex Charwater especially for Mae Marsh, and is said to give a scope to her unusual gifts not hitherto afforded. Many of the scenes were photographed in the South, others at New York's famous Saratoga track at the height of the recent racing season.
CONFIRMS CROMELIN'S CONCLUSIONS

American Motion Pictures Are Familiarizing Foreign Countries With American Habits and Customs

The spirit of "I-Told-You-So" seems to pervade the Inter-Ocean Building this week. The publicity, which the statement by President Paul H. Cromelin printed in the Moving Picture World last August, which Collier's single copy, in a special issue devoted to the international value of the motion pictures, sees fit to verify as it stands. Mr. Cromelin's August statement in this connection was made at the request of Chairman Hurley of the Shipping Board before the National Security League of Chicago. Commenting on this speech, Mr. Cromelin said in the world:

"Chairman Hurley declares that this merchant marine must not be allowed to go to rot in peace time. He told assembled business men that they must plant American wares so successfully in the foreign market that all the men would say, 'You know what I mean.' This is the reason that the American film is acting as a public agent for this super idea. It is showing in all neutral lands, familiarizing them with American supremacy thus and the orders for American goods will flow in. And what channels other than our films could get such a result? A paid advertising campaign that would attain anything like it would cost our manufacturers a billion dollars."

This point is taken in its entirety by Collier in its article dated October 19 and entitled, "Internationalizing the American Idea," even the Hurley statement being used in connection therewith. The extract follows:

"After the war is won, as we all know, America's overseas trade must be an overwhelming success. It is not only an opportunity but a necessity. As stated in this page not long ago, Chairman Hurley of the Shipping Board says we will have 20 million tons of shipping to be employed.

"Well, consider what the American motion picture is doing in other countries. It is familiarizing South America and Africa, China and Europe with American habits and customs. It is educating them up to the American standard of living. It is showing them American clothes and furniture, automobiles and homes. And it is subtly but surely creating a desire for these American-made articles. It is paving the way for the trade which must be developed when our factories and shops are no longer busy with war work. The modern version of 'Trade follows the flag' may very well be expressed as 'Trade follows the film.'"

The Inter-Ocean Film Corporation is sending copies of these remarkably similar World and Collier's statements to a list of prominent Government officials as part of a plea that increased shipping facilities should be accorded exports.

Director Hart Sails for England.

Charles S. Hart, director of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, sailed for England Tuesday, November 19. He will be absent several weeks, and during his sojourn abroad will visit France, Italy, Holland, Switzerland and Sweden.

Director Hart's trip is made for the purpose of looking over the film situation in England and on the Continent and studying the possibilities of the motion picture in working out President Wilson's idea of bringing the nations more closely together. It is believed that the films which did so much to arouse interest in the European struggle throughout the United States would be equally effective in creating a sympathetic interest between the various countries of Europe and the United States.

Outdoor Pictures for Ottawa at 3 A.M. on Victory Day

Undoubtedly one of the most unusual moving picture shows ever held in Canada was the outdoor performance held on Connaught Square, Ottawa, immediately after word was flashed to the Canadian Capital that an armistice between the Allies and Germans had been closed. Several pictures and slides were screened at this early hour.

Another incident of the early hours of the big peace celebration in Ottawa was the grabbing of balloons, flags and still photographs in the lobby of the Strand Theatre, which were being used to advertise the reopening attraction of the same house. The impromptu war feature, "To Hell With the Kaiser," and, naturally, this material proved to be highly desirable for the impromptu advertising. The advance advertising apparently made such an impression upon Ottawa patriotism that the dash of swatches of the picture, "To Hell With the Kaiser," was adopted for many benners and streamers.

Kashin Institutes Novel Light Effect at Broadway

M. Kashin, manager of the Broadmoor, has another strikingly original achievement last week. It was that of presenting the spectacle of lighting effects that merged the screen with its surroundings.

The lighting was handled in such a way that the coloring of the scenes in the picture seemed to be cast by reflection out of the screen upon the pit and the surrounding theatre sides. The result was an illusion that virtually brought the screen scene into actuality before the eyes of spectators.

Mr. Kashin conceived the idea months ago of devising light radiance that would act realistic in this fashion. Since he has been experimenting with his electrician on the subject. Finally they hit upon mechanical arrangements that produced the desired effect. The project was put into action for a remarkable scenic picture of the Yosemite Valley which was included on the program. The film shows scenes of zigzag, cascading trails, of tumbling waterfalls and surging rivers. The sun played beautiful rays of colored light through the mists that rose from the falls. The reflection served to illuminate the mountains and the leaves through the leafy foliage and the surface of the streams. As the scenes changed, the lights and colors changed and colored radiance seemed to extend beyond the limits of the screen, by reason of the mechanical devices that the theatre manager had employed. The illusion is declared to have been flawless.

No Delay on "America's Answer."

Dennis J. Sullivan, manager of Domestic Distribution for the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, is enthusiastic over the reception of "America's Answer," the official war picture, by exhibitors throughout the country.

"No withstanding the delay in releasing 'America's Answer,' caused by the influenza," says Mr. Sullivan, "the work of booking is steadily progressing, and indications point to an unprecedented show in America of the film." One of the most gratifying features of the campaign is the way in which local exhibitors have been getting together. The campaign is being ignored, and in scores of towns moving picture houses are arranging day and date exhibitions, in order to insure a simultaneous showing."
ONE of the first announcements following the modification by the Government of the restrictions on building operations is of the awarding of contracts for the construction of a two-million-dollar motion picture house in Philadelphia. The Stanley Company demonstrates its confidence in the business situation as it affects the motion picture industry. That confidence is bound to have beneficial effect on other theatre men who are contemplating expansion of their holdings. And Jules Mastbaum has the reputation of being a shrewd business man.

W HILE the action of Mary Pickford in determining to make pictures upon her own account is not new to this business the fact that one so promiient among the picture favorites has taken such action calls attention to a growing tendency among so-called screen stars. Chaplin was probably the first to take this step. Others have followed. Just where the movement will end is a question that is bothering quite a few producing companies that have large distributing forces under their direction. Under the new plan stars are privileged to make as few or as many pictures as they wish so long as the product is up to the mark in quality. To get a top price for their productions they have only to make them of the highest value. They have no schedule to work to, and they have full control of their actions; their good pictures will find a ready market, their poor ones—if they make any—will be shelved and not put on the market to plague them. We believe that distributing companies will find this plan to be an advantage.

TAKING the stand that the practice of reissuing old pictures in the guise of new ones is calculated to deceive and defraud exhibitors and the public, the Federal Trade Commission has summoned at least one firm which, it is charged, has practiced such methods, to appear before it in Washington on December 23. A decided stand was taken against the practice of reissuing old subjects under new titles by The Moving Picture World some time ago. Our contention then was that a deception was being practiced on the public. It is gratifying to know that the Federal Trade Commission holds a similar view, and that it will endeavor to put a stop to the deception.

EXPORT conditions should improve from now on.
While there is still a great necessity for ships to move supplies for our men in Europe, the cessation of war restrictions and the releasing of neutral shiping will provide bottom for the needs of general com-erce so that the embargo that has existed against motion picture film in particular should presently be raised.
There is great danger of serious trade loss if it is not raised at the earliest possible moment. Already New York exporters are receiving cancellations of orders from all parts of Latin America. This means that they will take their trade to London, where it was before the war, if we do not wake up. All such things as Navy and Army censorship, necessary in war times, should be abolished at once. To wait for the formal declaration of peace would be fatal to trade. Efforts are being made by the motion picture exporters of this country to induce Government authorities to take some action that will mitigate the present situation. One thing is certain, if trade with our South American neighbors is not facilitated we shall lose what little advantage we gained by reason of the war.
OPEN YOUR EYES WIDE
By Louis Reeves Harrison.

WHAT are we going to get out of this war, pestilence and famine in the way of social benefit and national betterment? In what particular way is the motion picture industry, its science, its artistry, its essentiality to be enlarged and improved? These are questions to engage our attention at all times, but especially now, when they are emphasized by tremendous changes taking place in ourselves and in our methods of living.

For the sake of better times let us shake off stupidity! It is staggering to realize how thick-headed we really are!

"It is an old and melancholy subject," says the Saturday Evening Post of October 26 in its leading editorial, referring to our density in the matter of modern education. "It is an old and melancholy subject—this scholasticism of most of our public school instruction, its obstinate detachment from life." The editor goes on to illustrate how children sit half stupefied while listening to colorless accounts of past history, expressing regret "that education must begin with the old stuff," whereas, when the subject matter is vital, "children sit breathless, there a boy with parted lips, his eyes rapt and shining, here a girl whose slim throat is contracted with emotion."

One would think he was talking of the effect of moving pictures.

He was referring to the receptivity of youthful minds.

It is keenest to grasp what is going on now.

So is the mind of the grown-up at the moving picture show.

The stories we are showing reveal an obstinate detachment from life.

Grown-ups sit half stupefied through most of the old stuff we are showing on the screen, just as children do through a dull lecture or a reissue of old stuff in a pulpil sermon. The vigor and life of this splendid young art of expression depends upon the vigor and vitality of what is expressed THROUGH it. It is a language. There must be ideas quite as well as means of communicating them forcibly and clearly to millions of others.

We are profoundly interested in changes taking place.

Our minds are occupied with what has occurred since 1914.

We are paying the penalty of being unprepared for events.

Why not prepare for conditions which must follow the war?

We are getting rid of erroneous conceptions of a few years ago; new forces are carrying us away from our old bad habits; we are giving up our pernicious practices as individuals and as social groups; we are being made over new. All this is taking place at a tremendous cost of noble lives and hard-earned fortunes, a dramatic series of incidents, covering a limited period of our history, that of four years, but so broad in its scope that a man must have wide-angled vision to comprehend its full meaning.

In the panorama being unrolled before our eyes are the events, themes and situations of drama for the next hundred years.

There are no proprietary rights in all this dramatic material.

A man may have the brain of genius, but he is a dolt if he does not use it.

So we are numb-skulls not to use the genius and material of our day.

The important thing is to make that genius distributive.

We have the greatest known medium of distribution. Open your eyes wide and look at this question from all points of view.

If we are not an intelligent people let us become so.

If we are, why not, in the name of common sense, address that intelligence?

Give the millions of people who love moving pictures the best that can be communicated through that or any other known medium. The degree of happiness they enjoy depends upon differences in condition, the more intelligent enjoying proportionately more, but we need not hold ourselves responsible to the shockheads and mental weaklings in an audience, as we have most religiously done in the past, but let all who can see light know through the pictured story and drama how to make the best of this new life as we find it, and even what effect it is to have on our future happiness and progress. The means near at hand, the end clearly in view, the easier we will succeed with large results—open your eyes wide—to achieve great results quickly the means must be within easy reach. Use the materials near at hand for the great drama of today and tomorrow.

PEACE AND RECONSTRUCTION
By Robert C. McElravy.

As these lines are being written the great siren whistles, built to warn New York City of possible air raids, are proclaiming the dawn of peace. Germany has signed the armistice terms. One by one her allies dropped away and now she herself has capitulated. The great war is over and merely to have lived through it, to speak mildly, is to have encompassed more than comes in the ordinary lifetime of man.

In these four years of unparalleled strife the moving picture has wonderfully developed. It has brought the war to one's very door, and generations to come will thank the screen for the record of these world events.

There is scarcely a phase of the struggle that has not been caught in some form by the screen. Brave men have carried the camera into the trenches and across No Man's Land to give civilization this priceless legacy. Their names should be blazoned high in the roll of honor, for their risk has been like that of soldiers in battle and they have served a great cause.

But it is not entirely as a purveyor of pictured events that the work of the screen is to be valued. Its work along the lines of special propaganda has been equally great. It has carried messages of hope and cheer into Russia, where the revolution has left its trail of darkness. It has inspired the fighting men of all Allied nations by its revelations of the work of preparation going on behind the lines. It has buoyed up the faith of small non-combatant countries, some of them clinging bravely to the hope of justice under the very heel of Germany and her allies.

People have come to look to the screen for an intimate delineation of all the news events of the world, and in this regard has come to be a tremendous educational force.

Now that the actual fighting is at an end, the work of the screen takes on a new importance. When peace is assured the world will enter upon a reconstruction period such as has never been seen in the annals of history. Prior to this there will be weeks, perhaps months, of peace preparations and deliberations, but the terms of the armistice may be taken almost as an absolute guarantee that there can be no further fighting.

American audiences are going to be greatly interested in this rehabilitation of the Old World. Our part in the great drama has been such that it gives us special rights; we are both participants and spectators. Many of our soldiers will remain on foreign soil for months and perhaps years. Our food and money will flow into the stricken countries for the immense relief work to be undertaken. Already the devastated regions of France are being rebuilt and those of Belgium will speedily follow.

It might well be said that the field of the moving picture has been immensely broadened by the war, but it would perhaps be nearer the truth to say that the conflict has broadened the outlook of our people. What home is there in America that will ever forget Chanos Thierry, or the second Sedan? What man or woman who went overseas during our part in the war but will have come away with a wider viewpoint?

There are interesting and important years ahead for the moving picture.

FETTERS AND SCREEN

By Edward Weitzel.

SOMEONE is continually attempting to put the motion picture in the straitjacket of his own limited information. It is time wasted. The motion picture escapes from all sorts of mental fetters with ease. What Houdini accomplishes through skill the art of the screen achieves by reason of its inherent and rapidly developing strength. It refuses to be restrained by any make of theoretical handcuffs. Every form of shackles is shaken off with a calm indifference that must be very irritating to the inventors. The gentry have only themselves to blame. They persist in not recognizing the variety of types that the screen owns in common with the printed or spoken mode of expression.

Screen Fiction in the Lead.

The term moving picture is generic and embraces every form of dynamic reproduction thrown on the screen. At the present time fiction comprises the greater portion of the product of the silent stage. The proper classification of this branch of the screen art has never been attempted. The news reel, the scenic and the educational have been recognized, but every form of story telling by the camera is classed under the head of photoplay. This is an error that becomes more apparent with every advance made in the creation of screen fiction.

With a clearer understanding of the difference between the screen novel and the photoplay and the proper division of the latter form of the moving picture into as many grades and degrees of intellectual standards as mark the fiction of the spoken stage will be born a wider freedom for the screen author, actor and director and a deeper respect for the efforts of all three.

Banishing the Half-Truths.

When the real truth is understood the half-truths will disappear from the daily press and the publications devoted exclusively to exploiting the moving picture. As a result of this most conspicuous forward stride such4-672; 412crowed opinions will rarely appear on the same page of a Sunday newspaper as those expressed by Haywood Broun and William Nigli in a recent issue of the New York Tribune.

Haywood Broun—"When the short film has come into favor, as it should and may, we will be rid of scenes in which the heroine feeds pigeons and does other perfectly meaningless things just to give the audience a run for its money."

William Nigli—"A good play could run for ten acts and not become monotonous. The majority of plays should run only ten minutes."

The first statement is the snap judgment of a man who has made only a superficial study of the screen; the second statement shows its author to be quite as poorly informed in regard to the stage. As to the Haywood Broun contention:

The five reel moving picture will become the standard drama form of the screen when a school of motion picture playwrights have been developed and the pigeon feeding scenes and other decorative but action-destroying interruptions are left to the screen novelists.

Motion picture director Nigli’s "wild and whirling" words about a play running for ten acts and not becoming monotonous is as misleading as his assertion that many so-called great stage artists fail before the camera because they cannot act well enough for the screen. Unbiased evidence will prove the fallacy of both statements. No normal brain could stand the strain of—much less enjoy—sitting in a theatre from 8 o’clock at night until 2 the next morning and watch a play in which the suspense was sustained at the proper pitch for six hours.

The assertion about stage artists not being able to act well enough for the screen is another half-truth that should have been fully explained or left unsaid. If the dictum that “the majority of plays should run only ten minutes” be true of the stage it is equally applicable to the screen. Neither allegation is correct.

Phrase making is a graceful accomplishment, but it is bound by the same law against bearing false witness that governs a court of justice. Mutual respect should be the attitude of the screen and the stage. Both are built on firm foundations of honorable achievement and both are too vigorous, too near the heart of humanity, to be bound down by mental fetters of any description.

Picked Up On Broadway

Ray Physioc, whom we met on Broadway last week, told us he had qualified for the Signal service of the Army, had secured his passport for overseas service and was about to sail when peace was declared, and he is detained in New York. He had even stored his furniture and sent his wife out west to remain with her folks while he was away.

Allan Hale, who has been playing in the road company of "Friendly Enemies" for the past four months in Chicago, is now in New York City at liberty. The company was withdrawn on account of the epidemic. He will now direct his attention to moving pictures so he can be near home and his wife, who is undergoing a test for her sight, which has recently impaired.

Tom Brett has been injured in the release of his much-talked comedies on account of the epidemic and general shutdown. He says he will release about December 1.

We asked Sam Triger if he was a candidate for the presidency of the New York League, "I am president of the Pawnsbrokers’ Association of America, and that’s presidency enough for me,” he said.

Louis Levin in Canada.

Louis Levin, assistant to General Manager W. R. Sheehan, of the Fox Film Corporation, is on a trip through Canada in the interest of William Fox. Mr. Levin will spend some time in Montreal and Toronto.
A BRIEF discussion of the moving picture situation, particularly as it concerns the child, took place at the Tuesday afternoon session of the Twenty-fourth Annual Convention of the New York State Federation of Women’s Clubs, held at the Hotel Astor, New York City, Nov. 11 t 14. The discussion followed the reading of a report by Mrs. Charles M. Dickinson, recording secretary, of a survey of motion picture houses throughout the State, made by a committee formed for the purpose, which is perhaps the most important of all. Evidence were not lacking that the women of the State are realizing the responsibility which rests largely on them of aiding the survival of the child, in picture production by directing their efforts toward the financial assurance which alone makes it possible for the exhibitor to run his theater on programs of desirable pictures. It was made clear to the large audience in the Grand Ballroom of the Astor, that Mrs. Dickinson was deeply concerned over the state of the motion picture. She drew attention to the unlimited uselessness of the motion picture, to the aid it has given in presenting to our minds the lives of our troops abroad, and closed with the declaration that it is the greatest factor we have for the spread of propaganda and patriotism.

A resolution to fight the poster evil was introduced by Anna Maxwell Jones, and carried. It was stated during this discussion that frequently it had been discovered that the picture was alright when the poster advertising it was all wrong. The educational matinee was voted a success in some sections and not in others. In some instances it was noted that the pictures were not sufficiently chosen; and it was suggested that differences in children made more difficult the task of choosing programs which would interest all.

While this discussion failed to take a concrete form, the friendly exchange of ideas which took place on a subject of great importance to the bearing fruit sooner or later. The following is the report which was accepted unanimously by the convention:

In February, 1917, your board, meeting in New York City, called a special committee to be known as the Committee on “Motion-Picture Survey.” On their recommendation the Committee was deeply interested in this, and suggested the name of your third vice-president to head the committee. The other members of the committees are as follows; Miss Anna Maxwell Jones, Mrs. John J. Sobel, Miss Ada J. Butcher, and Mrs. Asa Wykoon. At our convention last year in Albany the following resolution was presented to the convention:

Resolved, That the New York State Federation of Women’s Clubs, and all against the ridiculous and demoralizing pictures which are being shown in many moving picture houses in the country, and also, that we as a federation use our influence with manufacturers and producers to make the motion picture a greater agency for good by depicting the better and brighter sides of human nature and life.”

This resolution reached every producer and importer of picture plays before going to country; this is known, because of the letters it has received from all over the country. Having obtained the sentiment of the women of the State Federation, your committee decided to make a careful survey of conditions in New York State. Consequently, a letter enclosing a description of better motion picture club presidents in every village and city in the State.

The second week in March was designated, so that all pictures could be shown to the biennial in Hot Springs, which was done. Every day during this week a committee in each place would carry on the show of all pictures made in circuits at one time.

The question out, 190 were returned. Five villages report no moving picture today, one village report one entirely satisfactory house; 12 reports show irreverence depicted; 19 reports show gambling made attractive; 51 reports disregard of the marriage vow; of these report scenes; only three saw habit-forming drug used made attractive; 22 report instructive ideas on criminal prostitution; 30 reports of the week’s survey would be good; 23 report the pictures to be seen by adults only, remaining 50 say that the total effect would be degrading.

The report concerning local conditions in the theatres are very satisfactory, only four observed objectionable pictures. First week of the survey the theatres were not filled except for matinees and children. A campaign of education should be carried on to teach the parents to say nothing before children are old enough to see it. The report shows that not one performance during the entire week was sufficiently clean all the way through for a child to see. In case where a picture was so objectionable or more short reels until been seen. The general opinion obtains, however, that conditions are improving, and that women’s clubs with their Motion Picture Committees help largely to keep the managers up to some sort of a standard.

The question of better movies is claiming the thoughtful consideration of the members, so that Committees on Motion Pictures are being formed to study the matter, and have received helpful personal letters from members interested in this branch of our federation work and I shall take the liberty of quoting from a letter written by the “Ladies’ Village Improvement Society” of Sag Harbor, N. Y.

"We have been in accord with the movement taken by the federation, and carried a motion that I write you to that effect. There is not a single person in that Society who does not believe that has pleased us like this action against the pernicious influence so many of the moving pictures must have on the minds of the young people, or older ones also for that matter. We are so thankful there has started so grand a movement, therefore never give it up until the end is accomplished."

MRS. CHARLES M. DICKINSON,
Chairman for Committee on “Motion-Picture Survey,” IBN.

WIDE DISTRIBUTION FOR FORD;
Griever Latest Is “Eagles”

FOR the benefit of our readers who some time ago learned that the Ford Educational Weekly had been entrusted to the Griever Distributing Corporation, we wish to state that this firm has installed itself in the ninth floor of the Malls Building, 5 South Wabash avenue, Chicago, Ill. They have also established exchanges in all cities and are therefore able to serve all territories with this excellent Educational Weekly, the latest issue of which gives a very complete account of the manufacture of the Ford Eagle.

One of the most striking things in connection with the manufacture of the “Eagles” is the simple and practical system upon which it is based. Throughout the entire length of a steel and glass structure there are more than 1,700 feet in length, situated at River Rouge, on a railroad equipped with a series of flat cars. On each car the keel of a vessel is laid, and every car, after manufacturing is completed, shifts to look down on the long line of ships being “made over,” to see as one is finished the entire line moved along to fill in the gap, and on the end car now vacated by the shifting forward of the line a new keel is immediately begun. We are the destroyers, looking at a fleet of the Ford made chasers of the enemy submarine, that we are looking at one of the long arms of American efficiency that helped dethrone the Hun.

Shamrock's Animal and Travel Subjects.

Following the announcement of the educational program tendered upon by the Shamrock Photoplay Corporation of San Antonio, Tex., in last week's issue, there has been sent to us a list of films on nature, animal, and travel subjects which they now have ready for circulation. The natural history subjects have been recognized by the public schools of San Antonio and will be used by them as well as by other educational institutions and colleges of the city. The films are as follows: Doves, various kinds; Eagles, American and Mexican; Owls, various kinds; Hawks, Texas; Sheep, mountain; Elk; Buffalo; Coyotes; Wolves, black, grey, and red; Hogs, Javeline, mule foot; Bears, black gizzly; Lions, African; Cats; Coons; Monkeys; Tapirs; Sea Lions; Sacred Cow; Camels, Llama; Sheep, Persian; Fluesants, golden, ring neck; Mongo-lans, silver; Ducks, wood, mallard, mandrake; Pea Fowl; Wild Turkeys; Pigeons, fan tail, white wing; Parakeets; Rabbits, various kinds; Doves, ring neck, Texas, Mexican; Laughing Jack-ass; Water Rail; Jac-a-Lack; Quails, Bob, White, hybrid, California; Cattle, scaled Mexican blue, mountain blue; Catfish and Eels; Dog, Mexican hairless; Armadillo; Gila Monster; Ostriches, black and white; The Alamo; San Francisco Cathedral: Missions of San Jose, San Francisco Espada, Concepcion, San Juan Capas-trano, and Chapel of Miracles; Japanese sunken gardens.

"The Far Flung Battle Line" (Pathé).
The son of the famous Italian general, Garibaldi, is shown in this number, talking with British Tommys on the Italian front. The Tommys are seen making their afternoon tea and helping the Italian girls draw water from a well. Numerous German airplanes, wrecked behind the Allied lines, are also shown. The subject is very interesting throughout.

"Along the Crimson Gash" (Pathé).
This number is filled with a varied lot of scenes from the Western front. Closeups of trenches and dugouts on the Alpine front come first. Views of the French Poilu traveling to and from the front are shown, captured prisoners; how the doughboys are fed; target practice from dummy whippet tanks; the cavalry in action and other topics are also touched on. Numbers increase in interest, as they give so many inte-mate details of army life that could not otherwise be comprehended.

"Scenes in the Malay Archipelago" (Post).
The island of Sumatra furnishes the larger part of the interesting material from which this picture is made up. Among the scenes showing the customs of the natives and various types, those covering the rubber industry of Sumatra will be found perhaps most interesting. Many of the scenes were taken in the jungles of Sumatra with the natives who live in the great forests. The rubber trees, worked by the natives, are shown.
Steve and Cleo.

STEVE Farrar has been flirting with Cleopatra and wrote that it was the biggest clean-up he ever played. He got from 25 to 59 cents for it, too, because the picture played through that section of the state as a reissue with a dollar top. Steve didn't bother with the press book. He had his own campaign all lined up, for he writes:

There is nothing new about this stuff, as I stole every line of it from McCormick. I am sending it to you to show that the same stuff that gets the money in big towns can be adapted to the small ones. And that if an exhibitor will only watch his department he can pick out the stuff that's good and then use it when he gets the picture. I filed this stuff away long ago and waited until the picture came to me in regular service, used the "ads" and cleaned up.

Steve was several months behind McCormick with the feature, but he didn't

And Steve got pretty good work out of his printer, too. The first cut shows a four severes, using the McCormick copy. He took three eighteens for the text of the long display used by McCormick, and took tens and elevens, in the box, for the tonights. And it is worth nothing that the methods of the big town theatre worked just as well in a smaller place. Steve took three tens where McCormick could afford to take half pages, but he worked on the same lines with the same copy and got the same results. He packed his house, McCormick could do no more. Steve apparently had but the two cuts shown, but he worked them well. He also used the small spaces, telling how much it cost long ago to see "Cleopatra" as compared with the present. He used these in three-inch panels.

From Faribault.

The Grand, Faribault, Minn., sends in a lot of papers to show their Peggy activities. And they are decidedly active, though they are the only motion picture advertisers. They have the right idea. Just because they are in possession of the town they do not suppose they can get all of the business with a two inch announcement. Their average advertisement is a two tens, of which half is given to the current and half to the comto the eye. It would be easy to gain two pics, without spoiling the white space in the rest of the display, by setting the top line smaller and cutting down the bank of ten point to an eight point Roman, instead of full face. The trouble is that the printer doesn't stop to think and the manager probably saw it when

A Two Sizes for a "Today and Tomorrow," Used in Place of the Two Tens Above.

It was too late. For special attractions much larger spaces are bought, but the tendency to take the usual space and then add a special display. We show the advertising for "The Whip." This forms the lower half of a two sights and the whole of a three nines. The regular space is invariably found at the bottom of the third page, on the right hand margin. The specials run where they can, in this instance on the editorial page. Both of the "Whip" displays are supplied cuts, and they print up well; indeed we have yet to see poor results from these ing attraction. One shown is for Thursday and the other for Saturday. Where a film stays two days they use a double five to seven inch space for the "today and tomorrow." The sample shown is not the best of series, but forms a good study in composition. The day is all right, and it attracts attention, but the lines are brought too close together in the title, and that makes it difficult to read. This is a 72-point letter set solid, and the only spacing is that left over the space, which is not used in the case of capitals. Another pic between the lines would have made the title much more legible and inviting cuts for "The Whip," and the text is as good as the cut. If all stuff were as well laid, there would be less need for this department. The paper—there is but one—is generous in the matter of reading space. Often a scene cut will be run, and there is not an issue that does not carry from half a column to a column and a half of special text for the house; an unusual showing in a four-page sheet. But some of the cuts supplied for this use are almost impossible. This for Mary Pickford is atrocious. It is plainly to

Mary Pickford and Conway Tearle
In a Scene From "Stella Maria"

Mary Pickford in "Stella Maria"

The work of Mary Pickford as Stella Maria is over-shadowed by that of the character of Unity Blake, a lovely girl, urbane and winsome, who smarted for her moments in the picture, and whose emotional work is a revelation. The superior work of Unity Blake is apparent in scenes where Unity and Stella Maria appear together in the screen. Pickford frankly admits that Unity Blake more than shows the homelier scenes, but where this comes from the part of Unity Blake. This may seem a nit-aszero confusion for a idle to notice, but the fact is Mary Pickford has lost herself. The good thing is made possible by better photography, and Miss Pickford is now telling to herself, and walking off the scene with her valet.

A poor scene cut supplied for a big attraction.

be seen that Miss Pickford has a mouth, and her eyes may dimly be discerned, but her nose must be taken on trust. Tearle gets a nose because he is in profile, but you have to look twice to see whether it is his mouth or a scratch on the cut. Of course, poor press work adds to the effect, but scene cuts should be made proof against poor press work, for it is not to be expected that every town can turn out marvels of printing. The cuts should be carefully etched. Printers are finding that they can make more money in the cities with so many gone in the draft, and the country town publisher is fortunate in being able to bring out a paper at all.

The New World Sell.

plays are column width, that for the Masonic is 3 1/4 inches and the other 2 3/4. They claim over eleven as a five-deck Masonic and a five-deck space, a clear gain of half an inch across. In point of detail we think that the advertisements have been painstakingly set by a compositor who is unfamiliar with showmanship. Most of all, however, he has been handicapped by the layout of the space. The better plan would have been to take advantage of seven feet. This would have been only an additional inch, and would have permitted a better proportioning. A three-inch space so wide is too thin. There is no depth. You must talk clear across the page or break into panels, as has been done in the lower display. In the top space, for example, the line is not worth the eighth point in which it is set, but it looks a bit short even in that. On the other hand, three announcements are run in the lower space. If there is a Paramount feature and a Bennett comedy run together and is still further complicated by the signature in the middle which should have been better as a two fours with the 24 point. Paramount Feature — Arbuckle-Sennett Comedy

See them both for 10¢

The latter line could then have gone in a 16 or 18 point, raising the display of the program line while still working with it. It cannot be done as it lies. Throwing the signature off to one side is not a good scheme, but it must be followed here to get the display. It is at least better than that for the Athens Theater, Shrewsbury, who make a complete break between two of the leading features. On the left you read of a war picture and a Billy West and are told you can see "all three" pictures at one price. It is confusing when you read the other wing of the space and connect it with the left to get the three little bits. With the signature in the middle, it looks like three advertisements at first glance. It would have been worse, perhaps, because of the theatrical composition to get any better. The text is not as well written as it might be. There seems to be a tendency toward large sounding phrases rather than real selling talk. That "3 big pictures in all for a dime!" that appears after the first of the third lines of the Masonic panel. These sound well, but they do not sell seats save in a town where the fare is very poor. The seven fives is a good size, if taken for one house only, but a four fives is apt to work better, and a three sixes will be still better and less costly. It will generally give a better balanced display.

Try This Folder.
The Danforth Theatre, Jersey City, uses a folder that is well worth copying if you want to make a permanent out of a transient folder. It is a card folder, neatly printed on the face with "Pie before the Show" and there is no other text on the outside. If you open it, as most persons will, you read:

You are giving you a little schedule of how we time our shows.

If you cannot get to the theatre in time to see the beginning of the feature at the first show, our little time table will tell you the best time to come.

At the second evening show the first subject is repeated after the feature, making a complete show after 9 P. M.

The house signature appears in display at the bottom of the second page. It might be well to explain that because of the varying lengths of the features it is not always possible to run to schedule, but that the feature will invariably start at the time given, and that the smaller reels will run approximately at the times stated.

Booming Johanna.
S. Barret McCormick has done some of his best work in "Johanna." He has not taken as large spaces as he used for some other productions, but he reasons that the star and play should sell themselves if advertised, and he gets along nicely with the smaller allowance.

Six and One-Half Inches Across Three Columns in Which the Cut Does a Large Part of the Selling.

The first cut shown is only six and one-half inches across three columns, yet it will sell as well as four times that space, for there is an attractor cut, and the text is briskly worded. Through all the copy the star is referred to as "Colonel." Pictures are given to her honorary commission as godmother of the regiment which posed for the military scenes in the picture. It is a better selling point than the story itself, and is taken up and played through all of the advertising. The other spaces are twelve and thirteens, the centre space being set into white spaces. On the left hand is shown the full cut of which a part is used for the smaller display. The centre space is given picture. The first option of the regiment. None of the spaces alludes to the use of the story by the Saturday Evening Post. Possibly Mr. McCorinck thinks that it is hurtful, but we personally think that to recall the story to the many readers of the Post would help rather than hurt business. Many who were concerned by the story will wish to see it realized on the screen. It is, at any rate, a guarantee that it is a story and not like some studio made stuff.

Dayton Doings.

Here are three displays from the Dayton Theatre, Dayton. The first, for Joan of Plattsburg, has a rather non-committal frame. It means nothing in particular, but if you will look just above the lower edge you'll find a nice suggestion for summer advertising. The 'coolest spot'

A Two Twelves and a Three Tens from the Dayton, Dayton, Ohio.

of the house. The three tens for the Naullahka overplays the Naught girl. The suggestion of an Indian landscape in the black mass is much better for colors. The Kipling story (of which he was only part author, by the way) was published long ago and has been forgotten. A suggestion of the dancing will suggest a show along the lines of a burlesque "turkey."

A Birthday.

Celebrating its fourth anniversary, Harold B. Franklin raised the prices at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, and he did not apologize for this, either, but explained:

The management has fixed the above prices not that they reflect the full value of the entertainment given, but that the represent the least price for which it is possible to continue the high quality demanded by Hip-podrome patrons.

That's the way to go about it. Don't apologize for a raise. Tell that the price Louisville Advertising.

Here is the Sunday advertising for the Louisville papers. In the original form the Alamo rises above the Majestic, but has been taken over to the other side to make a better layout. The largest space is for the Strand and Keith's, each 4½ inches across two columns. From there it drops to three-quarters inches for the three houses in the right-hand lower corner. The Strand took a three tens for the McCallies gets about the same display, but the Sunday spaces are sized the same for all the sheets. The Keith house dominates the displays through the use of 36 space. It does not mean much, not half as much as their three tens, in which the book suggestion is better conveyed through the illustrative matter. The Sunday showing, with its hard-to-read hand lettering, does not do much for the selling talk is not as good. And the design does not work as well. It is far too late in the day for a man with a pair of guns in his hand to get business.

A Three Sevens in Which the Book Origin of a Play is Cleverly Thrown Up.

Has Gone the Route.

Sam B. Elliott, of the Owl, Philadelphia, had a fifth anniversary the other day and took pictures of his house program to tell the people what he thought of the show. He recapitulates his experiences since the house opened, tells of the excitement that the first two-tellers caused, and comes right down to date with a brief but interesting history of the advance. It makes good reading and it has a real value in making people realize how great an improvement has been made in the pictures in the past few years. Most patrons have forgotten the days when a two-teller had to be put out in two parts on different days because the exchanges were not organized to handle more than one reel a day from any releasing organization on the program. He wrote better than he knew. Tell your own patrons some time.

Looking Ahead.

Although it may be some years before the ideal condition is created, it is only a question of time when a photoplay will be as common as the story read in the daily papers or printed in mechanical movement. These plays will be state-righted at first, but gradually it is to be presumed that the old line program companies with the new sense will depart in the same way that we are releasing with fair regularity, perhaps, but releasing only such plays as are really worth while.

A play may be a dream of Utopia, but it is bound to come in the long run. The director whose value is judged by the speed with which he can complete a production or the “jazz” he can put into the action cannot last forever, though the probabilities are that he will never become extinct. He must give place to the man who is an artist at all points, whose aim is to make the play production is something akin to a religion.

This does not mean that he must be a time waster, nor yet be contemptuous of expense, for time and money will always be factors to be considered in a business of this sort. He must not make something merely for the sake of holding his job, nor will he seek to impress the author upon the author. He will rather seek to work with the author in a realization of the latter’s ideas. He will try to give to each production the flavor of the author rather than the impress of his own. Such a man will not attempt to make the play written by a man or woman he has never seen. He will want to get the ideas of the author, and, if possible, have the writer at hand while the story is being made for consultation as to changes. This does not mean that he will follow the script and nothing more, for he will not be that sort of a director. Rather, he will seek to amplify the author’s thought through the creation of business and situations that shall carry forward the author’s ideas with added definitiveness. The photoplay is not likely to practically play where the author’s lines and general business may be followed.

Photoplay at its best will be a combination of author and director in which the two shall share the credit for the other’s ideas. The photoplay is not likely to practically play where the author’s lines and general business may be followed.

The director will realize in it a action. The result will be joint work rather than the mechanical production of the author’s work from the minute written script of stage directions. Then and not until we shall we have plays that will really be worth while; that will be good for runs and re-bookings, not for a career of months, but for years; just about the same as the most successful drama. Such a man will not merely attempt to make the play written by a man or woman he has never seen. He will want to get the ideas of the author, and, if possible, have the writer at hand while the story is being made for consultation as to changes. This does not mean that he will follow the script and nothing more, for he will not be that sort of a director. Rather, he will seek to amplify the author’s thought through the creation of business and situations that shall carry forward the author’s ideas with added definitiveness.

Play for natural action in your synopses. Do not try to force your characters into unnatural situations you are making a good story; you are simply creating an unconvincing plot that will lack appeal and interest. Samuel Merwin’s New Cavery Story, which has been running in the Cosmopolitan offer a unique character, and yet Henry is so human that he makes his adventures seem real. The character may be retaining for two sets of stories, and a novel can be built on him still further in his career merely because Mr. Merwin has given us a chief character such as any of us might have been at Henry’s age. If he can come up with two or three realizations of good business, he is the task of the producer. He cannot be expected to give immediate thought to the improvement of the script and then turn all credit to the author. The public must be educated to realize that the producer is the task of the producer. He cannot be expected to give immediate thought to the improvement of the script and then turn all credit to the author. The public must be educated to realize that the producer is the task of the producer. He cannot be expected to give immediate thought to the improvement of the script and then turn all credit to the author. Keep Posted.

Keep posted on the conditions of your business. Today we got a request for the address of the Arctraft studios; presumably that scripts might be sent there. The inquirer should have known that Arctraft is the southern branch, holding out a higher-priced product of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., and some other allied companies. He should have known that it does not make film itself, but deals principally in the Pickford, Hart and Fairbanks releases. He should also have known that these players head their own companies, that they work in Hollywood and that they have their own writers. So, following these facts, we have no interest in the Arctraft. The news pages of this paper are to be read just as regularly and just as earnestly as this department by all who hope to sell, and all information should be applied to the selling end. In this way, and only in this way, may the author keep posted as to his market. No one can help you to market information. You must learn for yourself just how conditions are, and you must keep this information up to date by reading all the news and the advertisements each week.

Action Plus.

The demand for psychology in plots is not to be understood as replacing action with thought. There must be psychology and action as well, as the action may need a point. But, on theotherhand, you do not understand action as mere running around. Action in photoplay is the movement of the plot more than the movement of the players, though, of course, the players must move to advance the action.

Will increase.

Don’t mind if you can’t sell your scripts right now. Manhattan Island once sold for $24, and now look what New York real estate is worth. If you have a really good idea hold on to it. There will come a second some day, and it is not probable that prices will decrease meanwhile. Of course it’s nice to get checks right now, but if you can’t have them now, don’t think you’re never going to get any. You will, if you keep on plugging.

Study Stories.

Do not confine your study of stories to the screen. Study fiction, too. When you read a story you think particularly, sit down and reason out why it seemed good to you. The general rules of charm are the same for fiction as for photoplay. They appeal to the same emotions, but perhaps in different ways. Study this, too, in your analysis. Some stories are pleasing because of the manner in which they are told. Style cannot be reproduced upon the screen. These must be set aside, but if a story, through its plot, stirs you to anger, to patriotism or any other emotion, find out how the appeal was made, and you’ll be able to use the same principle in your own plotting. Hundreds of stories depend upon their situations upon the fact that you want Henry and not George to get the girl. The stories are all different, but the principle is the same. Find out the principle and you can write a two week deal. It is the only way to learn the rules that as you should know how to spell. Study the rules.

Fillers.

It’s a long time since anyone wrote about fillers. Yet here is a chance to make postage money if you have a nimble wit. Watch newspapers like System, Popular Mechanics, and similar issues, and try to hit them with stuff. If you can hit the idea you’ll reap a lot of small checks that will keep the important pot boiling.

Keep Simple.

Don’t wear out your brain trying to think of “unusual” stories. They may not be too unusual when you find the right lines, and the time to risk the common place really interesting. That’s what counts with an editor. The best sort of story is the story you might have lived yourself if only you could give it the charm that makes other people think that they, too, might have lived it.

A Mighty Poor Excuse.

In a recently received letter a projec tionist tells of an operator who remarked to him: "I could do better work, but they are not paying me enough"

In writing the foregoing I had heart to call this brand of castiron day projectionist. It is almost an insult to the projectionist. He says:

many others good men, only they have,

difference in Generators.

John O'Sullivan, St. Louis, Missouri, sug suggests that we ought to increase the pro ject department to three times its pres ent size and says:

Will you be good enough to explain to me the exact difference between the shunt, series and compound wound

Brother Richardson, your visit to this city has certainly left its mark.

from "Conversations in Electricity," by Joseph Branch. The first is series wound. Its effect, therefore, is to carry the same volume of current generated by the machine. Such a generator will not maintain constant voltage, and it is only one where the current (ampere) is to remain practically unchanged. Change in voltage has no effect on the resistance of a wound machine, but change in amperage has instant effect. The series machine is used mostly in series arcs lighting. The system is often called a "constant current" system, because a constant current is illusrated at "a." It is what is known as a "constant potential" type generator and has the peculiarity that under heavy overload it will lose its voltage entirely. The windings of its field coils are connected with its live leads, so that if the amperage passing through the field coils, which serve as a rheostat, is increased, the current flowing through the wires will be increased, and this will raise the voltage. The windings are usually made in series with the coils. This rheostat is adjustable. The compound wound generator, sketch "b," has the shunt winding, as shown in illustration 2; also a series winding carrying the entire amperage generated, but with less turns than the regular series wound machine shown at the left. It has the advantage of giving a much closer voltage regulation than that supplied by a shunt wound machine. The regular shunt coils serve to build up the voltage when running at no load, while the field coils strengthen the field as the load comes on. There are many variations of compound winding, such as over-compounding and under-compounding, each one suitable for a specific class of service. The compound winding does not provide that field strength in di-traction to the power output, as does the regular series wound machine. Without increase of field strength as the load comes on there would be a drop in voltage.

This, it seems to me, answers your query, neighbor, and should make the matter at least as clear as it would be, at least, by the St. Louis local sleeping, or merely taking a vacation? We never hear from them.

Rheostat Problem.

A Los Angeles, California, projectionist, who requests suppression of name, submits the following:

Am bailed up above following simple rheostat problem, and not even the handbook proves sufficient to straighten-out for me. Therefore I ask you to explain how to find total resistance of a 25-ampere, 110-volt rheostat hooked in series.

The thing is simple. Suppose we have one rheostat of given capacity. It will have its own resistance, and the area of cross section. The law is that length remaining the same, resistance reduces as area of cross section is increased. Now if we add a second rheostat of equal capacity, connected in multiple, what have we, in effect, done? Think a moment. We have exactly doubled the area of cross section of the wire or grid, without altering its length, have we not? Moreover, we have done it in a way which does not in the least alter the heat radiating properties of the conductor. What then is the effect of multiple resistance? Think a moment! It is exactly half what it was before, is it not? That is the principle involved. Now if we add a third rheostat of equal capacity, we have again reduced the resistance, viewing the combination as one rheostat, so that the area of cross-section is three times what it was, hence the resistance is but one-third that of the single rheostat.

From pages 93-94 Elementary Electricity and Magnetism I quote the following, verbatim, if offering perhaps as lucid an explanation as this matter as anything I have to date read:

"CIRCUITS IN PARALLEL.—If two wires are connected in series, so that a current divides between them, the current flowing in each is equal to the pressure on one terminal divided by their individual resistances. For instance, if the two wires have resistances of respectively, and the pressure between their terminals is 12 volts, the current flowing through the first wire is — = 3 amperes, and that through the second is — = 2 amperes. We have already seen (in matter not quoted, Ed.) that the current which flows through any resistance on account of a fixed pressure is inversely proportional to the resistance, and directly so to the pressure. Accordingly, the current flowing through the two wires of this example should be in the proportions of 1/6 and 1/9. This is true since 1/6 of 9 is 1/6 of 12. The total current flowing through the circuit containing the two wires in parallel is just the sum of the currents, so that the pressure causing these 3 amperes to flow through the wires is 12 volts, the resistance of the circuit between A and B being equal to the resistance of the two wires in parallel, must be — or 2.4 ohms. This may be conveniently calculated directly from the combination, as shown in figure 13, which is fully remembered, are reciprocal or inverse to the resistances.

The joint capacity of two or more pipes which deliver water between two tanks is equal to the capacities of all the separate pipes added together. Thus, suppose, in figure 2, X, Y and Z are three pipes connecting the two tanks. Evidently more water will flow through two pipes in a given time than through one alone. Still more will flow through three pipes; hence as pipes are added between the tanks the resistance to the flow of water is the total resistance that is what all the individual resistances belong to parts of a circuit which are connected in series.

The foregoing quotation may and should be of aid to you in the event of your understanding this somewhat puzzling question. I dealt with it as fully in the handbook as it is possible to allot to that subject. You will probably have matters made more clear for you if you have my "cinema" "conductivity" or "capacity" and resistance are very largely interchanged terms.

Died a Morning.

Joseph E. Bliven, New London, Conn.

Can you supply information as to device illustrated and described on page 1285, Feb. 27, 1915, issue? Wish to personally thank you for your assistance in explaining to draft officials in Washington that projectionists are engaged in essential work. Tried to get out to Point O' Woods to see you last week but don't run close enough, and I've no bubble. Got as far as Nistic one Sunday but could get no picture made next summer if I have to walk.

No need to walk. Just tell me when you want to make one and I'll blow by Banks and fetch you. The device you name never reached the manufacturing stage. It died a morning. It was a device for projecting a band of light around the picture, which same could be colored or decorated on various designs, the band being projected by means of ster ekotached to projector and taking light from the same as the motion picture was projected with. There were several somewhat similar devices projected by inventors at about that time, but they failed to reach the commercial stage. I was not at all enthusiastic about such devices, because I take the position that anything of that kind merely serves to detract from the picture itself.

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

"Le Roi est Mort, Vive Le Roi,"

Is a Thought for The Leader

THE King is dead! Long live the King! Kaiser War is finished at last, and the Prince of Peace, though long delayed, has come to his own. All the uncertainty and anxiety consequent upon the past unsettled conditions are out of place now and should cease. A new day must not only harass the mind; and the brightness of the future should be an incentive to greater endeavor everywhere—particularly in the realm of picture music.

The picture industry is here to stay. There can be no doubt about that. Its stability is a guarantee that the field for musicians will not only remain open but will increase in breadth and opportunity. Orchestras will be formed and more attention will be paid to the musical portion of picture programs; and the chance for fame and fortune will present itself to those who love their art—whose clearness of vision and indomitable nature prove paramount.

There is no greater educational medium along this line than the phonograph theatres that feature music. For little money, every one can hear music of some kind. It lies with the musical director whether that music shall be good, bad, or indifferent. The war has not only killed the opportunity of the leader for advancement but will retard the upward growth of an art that has suffered much from lack of proper co-operation. Too many leaders of mediocre ability have undertaken the work of fitting music to pictures. When their positions have succeeded, they have lost any notion of providing something of merit and simply carried out a musical routine—in other words, got into a musical treadmill. Give the graves of such the last rites should be solemnly spoken "for the good of the service."

Every leader has a grave responsibility and a momentous mission to perform, the shirking of which will stamp his name to his fellows and unworthy of the trust which has been imposed upon him.

His technical duties consist of fitting and playing the picture music. For these duties he receives a salary commensurate with the size of his library and the musical ability he displays. The salary provides his livelihood, and the fault rests with himself if his wages are not proportionate to his services.

His moral duty, as a man and a lover of music, is to educate the people to an appreciation of the best classics of this and bygone years. Beethoven, Bach, Berlioz, Verdi, Liszt, Handel, Tschaikowsky, Dvorak and the host of musical masters should become readily comprehensible to the audiences through the efforts of the picture player. The preciated the literary ability of his friend and requested him to write some verses which could be set to music by himself.

A few days later Mr. Sargent was taking a constitutional along the Battery in New York. As he looked out over the ships and small craft on the water, he heard the words of "A Life on the Ocean Wave." To quote Mr. Sargent directly: "Having completed my walk and the song together, I went to the office of the 'Mirror,' wrote out the words and showed them to my good friend, George Morris. After reading the piece, he said: My dear boy, this is not a song. It will never do for music, but is a very nice little lyric; so let me take it and publish it in the 'Mirror.'" Mr. Sargent and dismissed the subject from his mind.

Some time later, he chanced to meet Mr. Russell, who reminded him of the promise. Mr. Sargent confessed that he had tried to write a song and had failed. When his friend appeared a bit skeptical, he explained that Mr. Morris had passed adverse judgment. Mr. Russell was so easily convinced that he expounded: "Is Morris infallible? Hand me the piece, young man, and let us see what we can make out of your lines."

The two gentlemen went into Hewitt's music store at the corner of Forty-second Place and Broadway. Mr. Russell seated himself at the piano, read over the verses thoughtfully, hummed a bit to himself and then said: "Very well, let us look in thought. Suddenly, the inspiration came and a melody floated into his brain. He began to hum it, while his body swayed back and forth to the melody of the music. Then striking the keys, he launched out into the air. "I have it," he exclaimed, and the work was finished.

From the first, the little song, so optimistic in tone and a bit unique in its character, was very popular. It was sung everywhere and, of course, the street musicians picked it up and could be heard playing it day by day.

In England it was as popular as in this country. Song publishers were not slow in seeing the commercial value involved. They vied with each other in getting out editions of the song. Mr. Sargent says: "A year or two after its publication, I received from England copies of five or six editions that had been issued there by competing publishers."

Of course this popular favor created a market for the song and made it very valuable commercially, yet Mr. Sargent did not receive one cent from it. This statement is so true of practically all creative work of a similar nature that it seems almost superfluous to comment upon it. We have come to accept as granted the unpleasant fact that the person with the inspiration is seldom the one to reap any monetary gain thereby.

December 30, 1918

William Tell a Sensation at the Strand.

The Strand featured "Little Women," presented by Wm. A. Brady, during the week of November 16, and the music for the accompany- ing dramatic scenes was composed by Miss Louisa Alcott's popular novel. The music is so well arranged that it will be a delight to hear.

Music for "The Cannibals of the South Seas." Soon to be the latest sensation at the Strand is the melodrama "The Cannibals of the South Seas," produced by Martin Johnson, and released by Robertson & Cole.

Mr. Rubinstein's "The Murders of the South Seas." George M. Rubinstein, one of the foremost composers of musical works for motion pictures, has given a new treatment to the famous "The Cannibals of the South Seas," with a score that is truly atmospheric, it will enhance the picture and enthrall the auditors. Every exhibitor should see that his leader gets the score for there is little typical Cinnibal music to be obtained, and suitable music, unquestionably, means bigger box-office receipts.

A Musician Who Comprehends His Art.

When the screen version of "Salome" was presented at the 44th Street Theatre, New York, the musical score was the work of George M. Rubinstein. It was the gentleman conducted the orchestra. It became apparent at once that a master craftsmanship was confronting; a man who had devoted much time, energy and endless research to collecting the material for the musical setting of Oscar Wilde's famous play.

Workers in this field need not be told that the setting for such a picture requires the most careful attention, not only from the standpoint of timing and rhythm, but from the atmospheric conditions of the play. The selection of the compositions to be used in a big picture not only needs a wonderful repertory, but the careful working out of the score requires the hand of genius. Most of the score is original; the remainder is compiled from some of the most famous musical works of times past and modern.

Mr. Rubinstein is now devoting much of his time to the scoring of feature pictures. He also oversaw the musical end of the Fox set in Rome, which follows the close of the Season. His work, music and musicians in some twenty large theatres.

Mr. Rubinstein is very popular among artists and has long been actively engaged in musical work. He is a master of the clarinet as well as an orchestra man of long experience. This especially fits him for his new work.

Not the least item in Mr. Rubinstein's prominence in the field of musical work, is the fact that every film he has scored has been a success. The list includes the famous productions of the present time. Among them are "Cleopatra," "Les Miserables," "Revelation," "The Spy," "The Conqueror," "Jack and the Beanstalk," and the "Wives of Men." Nothing succeeds like success, and earnest work, coupled to a gift for scoring pictures, have made Mr. Rubinstein successful.

It was at the Rialto-Rivoli Theatres that Mr. Rubinstein, as an assistant conductor, became known as a picture expert. Ever since the opening of these two houses, Mr. Rubinstein had been connected with the musical forces, both as a conductor and an arranger. The music critic of the New York Sun has written about his work last season: "A shining example of how to accompany a picture was that of the presentation at the Rivoli of the Drew Comedy was shown. I was quite astonished at the care for detail in the orchestral work. It was a fine performance when I saw this picture. Here was an excellent chance to see varying tempo carried out. It worked. The application of the action instead of being held down to quarters and halves, measures and bars. What was needed was a personality to be en- countered, and only the principle is just the same for a more serious picture." Mr. Beydon of the Pittsburgh Post said of the "Aladdin." A compliment to Mr. Rubinstein's scoring of "Salome." He said: "William Fox is presenting his biblical drama, "Salome," as the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, accompanied by an orchestra of twenty-four, under the baton of George M. Rubinstein. Mr. Rubinstein arranged the score, and we can conscientiously say that it fits with the set-pieces, and points, and sets a new standard in some.

Aside from Mr. Rubinstein's fine mental equipment, he possesses also a fine ear. His work is original, and it is realized the importance of the practical applications of music to pictures, and his score bears none of the ear-mark of the amateur. His advent into the wider musical activities, which he has recently taken up, is a distinct addition to that world which has for years taken his score as the ideal presentation of the motion picture.

Original Musical Contests Encouraged.

Musical originality is being encouraged and developed at all of the training camps. There are "Song Contests," in which the various regiments compete for prizes offered, and the composers, who are both of these "Songfests" wonderfully good original songs have been sung for the training. Few of them are parodies like the Camp Devon Hill in "I'm a Little Far-Flung Piece," and many similar ditties, but others are wholly original, both words and music.

According to Major General Leonard Woods, "from soldiers to know how to sing as it is for them to carry rifles and learn how to shoot them." Our boys are singing. A singing army is invincible.

Gaskill Sends Lyrics from the Front.

Clarence Gaskill, who has written some very popular songs in the last year or so, is just doing his bit with the rest of our boys in the trenches. He is attached to the 311th Machine Gun Battalion, but in the midst of his strange surroundings he finds time to write a song.

From "Somewhere in France" he sent the song to Witmark & Sons, writing: "I think you can see the possibilities for a sheet music and I hope your firm will make my attempt at it. The boys seems to like it and sing it a whole lot.”

The song is entitled: "When I First Met You, That's How I Want You Today." There is a simple, catchy little melody, and if it is anything like "A Yankee in a Dixie Land," it is a war song, but just a singable ballad that all the world will want to sing. It is the sort of thing we need, and Gaskill has given us a sample to try it and predict that it will develop into a tremendous success.

Rialto Theatre Loses Belgian Cellist.

Gaston Dubois, the Belgian Cellist, whose remarkable virtuosity has evoked praise from many of the prominent music critics, has severed his connection with the Rialto orchestra to accept a position in the first chair of the Philharmonic orchestra. Mr. Dubois has won many friends among the orchestra men and it is with a sense of deep regret that the musical director, Hugo Riesenfeld, releases him.

The Dulcimer Changed to the Tympanon.

All of the few collections of early musical instruments include the dulcimer. In the collections of the Conservatoire in Paris, there is a beautifully decorated instrument of the time of King Louis XIV, which is described as a "dulcimer or tympanon" ornamented with roses; carved in wood; the case of which is gilded and set with pavilions.

Nevertheless, in that brilliant period of France, the dulcimer had already fallen into disfavor. It had been popular in the boudoir and in the salon, but as music as an art, and a science, was rapidly developing, dulcimers intended for concerto could be provided by the dulcimer. Newer forms of instruments had come into vogue, such as the harpsichord and the clavichord. In the century, the dulcimer, which poets and painters had immortalized, became the companion of the gondola and was to be heard chiefly in the village taverns.

But for the connoisseurs, it still retained its charms. Paul Anthony Hebenstreit, a well-known musician of Leipzig, was responsible for its restoration to fashionable favor late in the same century. It was he who first invented the wooden hammer, covered with leather, which which the dulcimer (very shortly thereafter rechristened and called the tympanon) was rehabilitated. It became very popular at the court of Louis XIV.

Hebenstreit created a Court sensation by his playing of the tympanon, and it was not long before manufacturers sought to increase the hammer and increase into the mechanism of the piano. It was the great French Monarch who renamed this instrument. He had a Royal Tympanon made, which upon the occasion of the marriage of the musician to a beautiful Maid of Honor, was presented to Hebenstreit. His famous descendant, Sacha Votchenko, brought this instrument from its repos in Russia and introduced it to the Europe of America.

Harry Bataille, the distinguished French dramatist and critic, has compared the tympanon to a casket in which were enclosed popular melodies, old songs and dances, of antique charms—delicious and sombre. "I" Tolstoi, who heard it a few months before his death, likened its tone picturesquely to "the far-away echo of the voices of the bards of old."

Seasonable Song Composed by Caro Roma.

Anticipating the sure approach of peace, Mr. James J. Sullivan have offered a song which they have had in preparation for some time. It bears the title, "Ring Out, Sweet Bell of Peace," and is one of the most satisfying and beautiful songs of its type. The lyrics are by Wm. H. Gardner, and the melody by Caro Roma, and are jointly responsible for that remarkable Southern song success, "Can't You Hear Me Callin', Caroline!" The new peace song meets every requirement—it is imbued with the spirit of thankfulness, and simple and easy to sing. Also the music is melodious, an ideal to a degree. "Ring Out, Sweet Bell of Peace!" is a song that will live long after the dawn of Peace has put an end to it is particularly good for use at Christmas.

Caril D. Eliron, Musician and Patriot.

As an example of true patriotism, it is interesting to learn that Carl D. Eliron, who is instructor in music and conductor of musical scores for moving pictures, is now over seas with the 157th Ambulance Train, in San Francisco, 40th Division, A. E. F., which recruited at Camp Kearney, California.

Mr. Eliron had the honor of being the musical scorer for "The Eyes of the World," "Ramona," and the present Griffith success "Hearts of the World." Several smaller productions bear his signature, as well, but the three mentioned above, all of which are remembered for their musical attainments, deserve special mention.

With the approach of Peace, it is earnestly hoped that in a few months we will find him arranging scores for future motion picture productions. In this field he has made ten thousand dollars a year, but was willing and anxious to forego it for democracy's sake. Born in Rome by birth, but an American by adoption, he lost no time in getting "Over there" to do his bit.

Influence of Music Upon the Soldiers.

Blazed by tradition, many-people are included to think of music as a luxury to be foregone in wartimes. In the first official book of life in American Training Centers, the authors point out that music—especially singing—plays a large part in the Government's program for preparing men to fight.

The book is called "Keeping Our Fighters Fit—For War and After." It was written by Edward Frank Allen with the cooperation of Raymond B. Fodseck, Chairman of the War and Navy Commissions on Training Camp Activities. Although authoritative, it sparkles with human-interest anecdotes, and is very readable and entertaining.

Who sings," the author says: "Patriotism is no hollow, empty thing. It wins battles. And the music, be it instrumental or vocal, that awakens or feeds it, is scarcely less potent than the explosions."

"Singing has long been recognized as an aid to efficiency, but it remained for the Commissioner of Training Camp Activities to develop it in the army and navy with that end in view."

In speaking of the value of music in arousing the fighting spirit, Mr. Allen points out that although "authorities do not lay much upon it in military textbooks, they talk a good deal about morale and spirit de corps on both of which singing has had great influence."

"O Jerry, give us Joan of Arc," shouted one of the blue-jackets. So they sang "Joan of Arc" with a strong, patriotic thrill in the lines. "Give us four French victory," and when they reached "We'll hang your fatal tree," and in the refrain of "Glory, Glory, Hallelujah," the very rafters vibrated in sympathy.

The boys were having lots of fun, of course, but the spirit that the music was bringing out of their souls is the force that sent them into the fray united in purpose and dauntless in will.

It is true that music is of matter of less importance to the Commission than the fact that they sing.

Singing is nothing classical; sometimes they are inclined toward the rough-house; and yet one day, in a training camp a group of thousands of men—almost a whole division—were heard singing:

"Nine eyes have seen the glory of your company."

"He is tramping out the vintage Where the grapes of wrath are stored."

No misgivings need be felt as to the wholesome nature of these singing fighters.

Conservatory of Music for Bandmasters.

This school of band music for men in war service was established at the New England Conservatory of Music. This school, the first of its kind in the United States, is designated for entrance in the service who have been recommended for intensive training. It classes continued until the closing of the Conservatory on September 15. During the regular training of the institution, it is intended to conduct classes for young men aiming to qualify for this branch of the musical service.

At the beginning of the past summer, the New England Conservatory offered to the representatives of the first naval district and the Department of the East the facilities of the school for such further training for band leaders as they might desire. The offer was favorably received, for it is well understood that the demand for instruction in band work which may be presented in a regularly organized music school, and it is not possible for band leaders and their men to obtain in their more or less separate units. As the nearest Navy Force for training of naval bands is at Newport, Rhode Island, and as there is no school under army administration, it was decided to be especially desirable that opportunities of this kind should be provided in Boston.

The details of this institution for army musicians are, at this writing, under consideration of the authorities of the Northeastern Department. The training of the navy men was begun in July with about fifty musicians from the naval stations and the radio and aviation schools at Cambridge.

The instruction in all the usual band instruments is given by members of the New England Conservatory faculty who are available for such instruction and by several eminent professional musicians from outside the school.

The general direction of the training is in the hands of Samisalo Gallo, of Boston, who is widely recognized as an authority on band scoring. Mr. Gallo received much of his musical education in the New England Conservatory orchestra and in the concert classes conducted by George W. Chadwick, director of the Conservatory, who has taken great interest in the general development of popular and military band music.

The co-operation of America's oldest and best-entrenched bands in this form of war work was arranged by General Manager Ralph L. Flander in accordance with a resolution of the General Assembly of the National Committee on Army and Navy Camp Music and chairman of its special committee. Mr. Flander is now acting as an advisor on military music for the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities.

EXHIBITORS SHOULD HAVE BIG RESERVE

Should Equal at Least 20 Per Cent. of Total Sum Invested in Theatre, Says Robert Lieber

BANKING and financing are essential and extremely necessary factors in the continued success of any exhibitor, large or small, and a reserve or cushion of at least 20 per cent of the total sum invested in the theatre and its occupied property is the exhibitor's greatest insurance against the normal risks of the business, in the estimation of Robert Lieber, owner and operator of the nationally famous Circle Theatres of Indiana, Illinois.

If the Circle Theatre closed its doors tomorrow for an enforced shutdown of one week, declared Mr. Lieber, "we could reopen the house at the end of the twelve months with colors flying and our finances in splendid shape for the carrying on of the business, even in the face of financing or financial circumstances of any character. We are adequately protected against even that remote possibility—simply as a matter of fact and business judgment—it is reasonable to presume that we could weather any probable storm of lesser intensity.

Mr. Lieber is president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., and head of the H. Lieber Company, owners of the First National's Indiana state franchise. In the Circle Theatre he has developed what is recognized by the industry and the exhibiting branch particularly as one of the model houses of the country. While his management, by Barrett McCormick, has devoted himself to the artistic phases of motion picture presentation, Mr. Lieber has devoted himself to the practical commercial side of exhibiting, with the result that the Circle Theatre presents a novel and unique analogy as a profitable business proposition.

Must Prepare for Reverses.

"It is the easiest thing in the world for an exhibitor to pay dividends to his stockholders, but sometimes this results in having a profit," said Mr. Lieber, "and it is the hardest thing in the world for an exhibitor to levy an assessment on his stockholders when the theatre is weathering a turbulent period and needs more money than is being taken in at the box-office. Any exhibitor, no matter how sound and impregnable his business may appear to be, is liable to experience reverses.

The exhibitor has the summer months to prepare for the coming program for the year. He knows that there will be weeks without profit and that it would be economy for him to close the theatre for a benefit, if this makes such a course unwise. To maintain his standards of quality in entertainment he must make no curtailment in rentals. The fixed overhead charges for the theatre remain the same. Perhaps there is a sudden and unexpected loss due to a disease epidemic, similar to the recent influenza, which makes a score and more of possible happenings which may occur with a serious effect on any theatre's bank account.

Why Banks Distrust Picture Business.

"The exhibitor owes it to himself and to his stockholders, if there are any, to provide ample financial protection against any emergency. Otherwise his investment in the theatre is in constant jeopardy. I believe that one of the reasons why many bankers look with distrust and doubt upon the retail branches of the motion picture business is because many exhibitors have bank balances which do not give proper protection to their investments.

Exhibiting is a business without fixed, liquid assets. It consists of retailing merchandise with a momentary value and it is founded chiefly on good will. A clothier or a jeweler can go to a bank and borrow money on stock on hand. Their merchandise is negotiable, because it has a fixed market value. But an exhibitor has only his theatre. And its value depends entirely upon the ability of one or more men to manage it successfully.

The banker has judged the exhibitor by the only means at his command—cash or negotiable securities on hand. He measures the exhibitor's business ability not by the volume of the daily deposits, but by the net surplus, which is the amount on hand at the end of each month. If, in the estimation of the banker, that balance is kept big enough to guarantee the exhibitor an adequate margin of safety, he is impressed with the fact that the exhibitor is a good business man and is conducting his affairs along sound commercial lines. As a consequence the exhibitor is received with open arms when he requires assistance.

Go to Your Banker for Advice.

"When an exhibitor is in doubt about an investment on which he can realize quickly if occasion demands, his banker is the best source of advice. I have heard exhibitors say that they prefer to divide their account between two or three banks instead of confining it to one institution. Of course in some communities there may be reasons why this method is preferable, but in the average city or town I believe that an exhibitor can obtain greater moral co-operation if his account is deposited exclusively in one bank.

"The confidence and good will of a bank is an exhibitor's greatest asset in times of stress. A bank considers personal integrity, efficiency and reliability above all other factors in performing its function of making loans. Character is the first requisite to a good financial security."

Ontario Exhibitors' Body Attends a Busy Meeting

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario held its best attended meeting of the whole year on Tuesday, November 5, when sixty-five local and out-of-town members gathered for the regular November session. Even more dropped in for a few minutes during the meeting, but did not remain because of the crowded condition of the club quarters. It was the opinion of the meeting that a special hall would have to be hired for the general meeting in December. To provide a number of the outside exhibitors a chance to attend in the securing of several new memberships, and announcement was made that the membership roll now contained well over two hundred names.

F. Grant of Hafilton, asked if anything had been done by the association to secure compensation for the exhibitors because of the recent order. President J. C. Brady, who occupied the chair, announced that a committee had been appointed by the executive to investigate this matter.

Toronto Health Officer Present.

A visitor at the meeting was Henry A. Rowland of the Toronto department of public health, who discussed with the exhibitors the advisability of prohibiting the admission of children under seventeen years of age from the theatres until the schools would be reopened. Mr. Rowland was asked a number of questions and he explained particular points to the satisfaction of the meeting. The closing up of the Rialto and Goie Theatres, Toronto, and seconded by R. S. Tickner of the Revue Theatre, Toronto, that Mr. Rowland was sincerely thanked for his attendance at the meeting, which was unexpected.

Secretary Thomas Scott made a formal report of his trip to Hamilton, Galt, Brantford and Paris during the previous month. He had been able to secure nine new members for the association.

W. M. Elliott, the new manager of the Empire Theatre, Hamilton, welcomed and Mr. Elliott addressed the meeting briefly.

Several members complained that they were being overcharged for posters. Some times they were compelled to pay for posters which they did not receive at all. These reports were placed in the hands of the grievance committee.

J. G. Tutson of Napanee, declared he felt pleased to see the good turnout and businesslike methods of the association. He said that the local exhibitors would join the organization if they would only attend a meeting. Manager MacFarland of the Regent Theatre, Hamilton, expressed himself in similar manner.
METRO BUILDING WEST COAST STUDIO

Will Accommodate Ten Companies, Be Up to the Minute and Occupy Plot of 169,140 Square Feet

METRO Pictures Corporation, which this winter has continued its policy of expansion more vigorously than ever on the West Coast, has started work on its new studios in Hollywood, to be situated at Romaine and Cahuenga avenue. The new plant is designed to occupy an entire square block with a front footage of 280 feet and a depth of 300 feet, and the operation involves a large expenditure. The studios will accommodate from ten to twelve companies at the same time with that many individual stars.

The undertaking is essentially a Metro one. Everything, from the architect's plans to the building of the new plant, originates within the Metro organization. Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, made a trip west several weeks ago to look over the ground for available sites, deciding on the Romaine street-Cahuenga avenue tract from among several offered. Clifford P. Butler, studio manager, another of the party, who purchased direct from Cornelius Cole, California ex-Senator, from whom Cole avenue, which bounds the new site on the west, was named. The financial consideration was $30,000.

Manager Butler will direct the entire building operation. Ralph C. Godfrey, Metro technical director, will personally supervise the construction work as superintendent of building. Butler and Godfrey will cooperate in placing individual contracts for all work done. In fact, the entire plant will be built by contract, separate agreements being made with masons, carpenters, electricians and other artisans.

Plant Embodies Latest Ideas

Plans for the new studio buildings were drawn by Carlos Nuese, an architect whose career started with the big architectural firm of McKim, Meade and White, of New York, and who has designed the principal theater on the coast as well as many buildings in Los Angeles. Nuese designed the lobby of the Kinema Theatre and also the annex to the Trinity Hotel, at Grand and Ninth. He has been with Metro for several months as head of the art department.

The new Metro plant is to embody the very latest ideas in studio construction. The administration buildings, which will house the executive offices of the motion picture company, are to be of the Colonial style of architecture. They will front on Romaine street, facing north. The main entrance will be through an imposing portal, set off with massive columns and surrounded by a State House cupola.

At the eastern extremity of the administration buildings will be separate offices for the president, general manager, Mr. Karger, and his associate, George D. Baker; for the studio manager, the scenario staff and the publicity department, with assistants and stenographers.

Horace Williams, casting director, will have a large office at the western end of the administration building, with a separate entrance. His private office will be supplemented by a large reception room for motion picture players calling for registration, tests and engagements.

To Have Three Large Stages

There will be three large stages—two open and one inclosed. These will be ultra modern in design and equipment. The open stages will be 70 by 100 feet, and the inclosed stage, for "night effects," will have an area of 70 by 195 feet. To supply the lighting for the studios "Juce" will be generated by huge dynamos, of direct and alternating current, erected in a separate generator house.

The plans call for four projection rooms. These rooms will be equipped with the latest model machines, and will enable four directors at once to look over their day-to-day results. There will also be a large concrete vault, with a safe combination door, for storing finished film.

Present plans call for the construction of at least fifty light and airy dressing rooms, ranging from the elaborate apartments occupied by the stars to the less pretentious rooms used by the extra people.

Another important feature of the new studios will be a complete carpenter shop and mill, electrically equipped; and for the technical department and scenic artist, there will be ample accommodation, with huge paint frames.

The cutting room will have a north-eastern exposure, to insure coolness and an abundance of light at all times.

Grounds to Be Beautified.

Elaborate landscape gardening will likewise feature the new plant. The administration buildings will be set well back from the street, on terraced greensward. Grass plots will abound within the studio and a large space of "natural stuff" will be provided, with a view to erecting thereon elaborate exterior settings that could not be duplicated elsewhere.

The administration buildings, of concrete and frame construction, will be finished in green, with white trimmings. Architectural of the new will be a large ornamental iron gate, through which will pass the various vehicles bringing supplies to the studios. It is planned to have the Metro equipment include a restaurant, operated after the cafeteria fashion, so that executives, stars, players and other employees will not be obliged to leave the grounds for meals.

Studio Manager Butler estimates that it will take about ninety days to complete the building operations. But before the expiration of this time Metro stars will be on route from the east to take up the greatly increased work that the full executive force will bring on the grounds. Metro predicts it will have a plant which in the magnitude and scope of its activities will be unsurpassed on the West Coast.

Northwest Exhibitors Praise Black.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest has passed the following resolutions in appreciation of the work of Alfre S. Black, of the Maine branch of the National Association.

Whereas, In appreciation of the efficient and capable manner in which Alfre S. Black, of the Maine branch of the National Association, has labored for our Interest in Washington and elsewhere, in the past, be it

Resolved, That we, the Motion Picture Exhibitors of the Northwest, in meeting assembled, wish to place ourselves on record by a vote of thanks to Mr. Black; and be it further

Resolved, That in appreciation of the fact that he is the only representative that has aided the exhibition in lighting the path of the distributors to place the burden of the proposed film rental tax on the exhibitor, we lend our moral and financial support to the National Association. When there may make it in the interest of the exhibitor.

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' CORPORATION OF THE NORTHWEST,

Al. Lichtman on Tour.

Al. Lichtman, general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of the distribution, is now making a tour of the exchanges throughout the country, consulting managers in connection with afterwar conditions and preparing for the new rush of business which is beginning to make itself felt. Mr. Lichtman was confined in Kansas City for a time with influenza, but is now fully recovered and has resumed his trip.
I CALLED on George K. Spoor, president of the manay Film Manufacturing Company, last week, and naturally the conversation soon centered on the new Spoor-Thompson processing machine, which has had considerable interest for me for some time past. I had the privilege of seeing this wonderful machine in action some time ago, and at the time the magic strides made by the great modern printing press of today from the old flat hand press of many years ago. I then asked myself if this new, ponderous, complicated machine was about to accomplish a similar revolution in the processing of the film in the same way as the printing press. I was quite sure that the printing press was not going to revolutionize the motion picture business, but that the results of revolution brought by the printing press would be made use of to the final process which makes it ready for projection on the screen. I am of the opinion that it will, and also that the rules which the old methods have been made to is just as they have been made on the printing press of former days, in order to meet the demands which greater time, tendency, and volume work and superior workmanship call for in the present day.

Machine Is Very Intricate.

The Spoor-Thompson processing machine appears to be even more intricate than the great modern cylinder press. It is made up of parts, of which are employed to control the expansion and contraction of the film subjected to the processing. If the subject is long or short, the parts of the machine are not only longer or shorter than it was before treatment, and by one thousandth part of an inch, in any section of it, the distance between the perforations is either lengthened or shortened, and, in consequence, the life of the film is afterward shortened by the same amount. The difficulties encountered to prevent this will be readily seen when it is remembered that during the process the subject at times passes through thousands of feet of film, being dried, washed, and polished, and that 4,000 feet of film is constantly in the machine. Trouble is prevented by having a temperature controller in the west section of the processing machine and another in the dry section at all times, the temperature in the dry section of course being the higher.

Claim Treatment Lengthens Film Life.

Messrs. Spoor and Thompson hold that the life of a film is positively lengthened by their processing treatment, as in the dry section of the machine the film is continually passing over hundreds of rollers of small, varying diameters, the surfaces of which are absorbent and of soft composition. While in the dry end of the machine at no time is it subjected to heat, and at the conclusion of the process, the surface of the film can escape contact with these rollers. This constant kneading tends to prevent brittleness of the film. It is also an additional advantage that it is kept away under the old or present method, when the films are wound on large drums or frames during the drying process.

Here it may also be said in favor of the Spoor-Thompson processing machine that all the chemicals used in developing of film may be recovered and re-used—quite a saving. But still longer life is guaranteed the positive film by means of another inhibitor. The old processing method used two inhibitors, but the Spoor-Thompson machine uses only one. Only two splices are made in each 1,000 feet of positive which passes through the machine, no matter how much film is processed, and the machine is now being submitted. This not only reduces to a minimum the chances of trouble while the positive is in the processing machine, but it lengthens the life of the machine where the film is being screened.

Reduces Number of Splices.

Contrast the old system with the new in respect of splices. By the old method there were (and are) nearly as many splices in the positive roll as there are scenes. Besides, as previously hinted, the rules or hitches which might occur in the processing machine from the parting of the splices are greatly reduced and, more particularly, the life of the film after it is screened out by the processing machine, is largely increased.

Mr. Spoor informed me that the processing machine finishes 1,000 feet of film in 20 minutes, or about 5,000 feet of film per hour; whereas by the present, or old method, it takes from one and three-quarters to eight hours. The new machine produces and polishes 1,000 feet of positive film. Moreover, the cost of labor by the old method, for the same length of time, is three times that of the new one. Here is one of the saving spots of the new processing method.

Mr. Spoor holds that the photographic quality of the positive, or the new processing method practically insures the highest results yet obtainable from any negative. This is due to the unvarying, controllable and scientific methods employed.

For example: The developing quality, by the old method, is at the mercy of the operator. He must get at least half a dozen operators on every 1,000 feet of film. No matter how many timing devices there may be in use or developing films, the operator in many cases is liable to—and in many cases does—trust his eye more than the timing device. Uniformity of photographic quality, the best that the negative shows, is unquestionably guaranteed by the Spoor-Thompson processing method, in the selection of the best qualities of film, by the automatic machine in each scene of every negative treated.

The method is an elaborate one, as it gives the opportunity to match scenes for printing quality, from a printing test of 64 different densities of photography, as shown in each negative scene.

Take the Best in Each Thousand Feet.

To illustrate: A printing test from a negative containing pictures of varying photographic density, each of these pictures is numbered, the numbers running from 1 to 64. Of these pictures, the best photographic results, among the 64 pictures taken of this scene, is selected as the quality desired for that entire scene.

Every other scene in the thousand feet long film is printed from the combined selections gives the best photographic results for the entire 1,000 feet of film.

The old (or present) method the selective quality of the photography is left to the judgment of the naked eye, and the range of the selection of photographic values is limited to 10 or, at most, 12 points of printing time.

The superiority of the Spoor-Thompson processing method, in this respect alone, cannot fail to appeal to every thinking mind.

Mr. Spoor is highly gratified with the great interest which has been aroused by his new processing method by the leading producers in the moving picture industry. He stated that his New York office at 110 West Forty-ninth street, in the World Tower building, has had so much business that, Charles F. Starke in charge, is kept busy answering the numerous inquiries from the trade. Quite a number of producers has already sent their representatives to Chicago to inspect the new processing machines, which have already been installed at the Essanay plant for some time. Eighteen of the eight Spoor-Thompson machines are now being overhauled and will be ready for service in the immediate future.

"All preparations are being made to start work and continue with great activity," said Mr. Spoor.

Robertson-Cole Praises Work of Customs Officers

T HE export division of the New York Custom House deserves a vote of thanks from all the exporters of America," declares one of the officials of the department of motion pictures of the Robertson-Cole Company.

"It has been a privilege for us to work with the officers of customs and to enjoy their cordial cooperation. Our participation in the war the New York Custom House has gone about its business thoughtfully and understandingly. We have always found very helpful the officer in charge, Collector Lamb. He is entitled to a great deal of the credit for the admirable handling of the film exporting problem. In the days when the wartime rules made the conduct of business irksome Mr. Lamb always did his utmost to facilitate matters and aid the exporter."

"He has met the exporter fairly and squarely. Never once has he deviated from the rules, and he has protected the film as much as possible. The Robertson-Cole Company has appreciated Mr. Lamb’s handling of the situation."

What Would You Do with That Which Used to Be the Kaiser? When two or more forefathers, these days, the popular sport is making suitable disposition of the coat, very recently brushed out of the whiskers of its last occupant, are being written; letters to the editor from Vox Populi and all the other self-gullers are getting into print. Hence we take this opportunity to dispose of him in our own way.

We shall confine him in a poorly ventilated projection room, tie him in a rickety chair and have the Society of Projectionists in relays turn loose some of the film that has done much in wrecking the Berlin to Baghdad Railroad System. While he lived we would have the show proceed continuously, supplying only enough food to Count Bill and the remaining little Hunzollers to sustain life for as long a time as possible. Over and over again, under our pleasant little idea of punishment, he would see millions of feet of film variously entitled:

Producers' and Distributors' News

Screen Classics "The Great Victory" Is Up to Date

THE newest Screen Classics, Inc., superfeature, "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser?" The Fall of the Hohenzollern, already photographed have been verified by current events. Metro officials and directors seem to have an almost uncanny foreknowledge of the trend affairs would take, and the new production deluxely simply repeats the proverbial "Metro luck," as powerfully demonstrated in "To Hell and Back", "The Hunchback", "Hedda Gabler", "Drafth 258," "My Own United States", "Her Boy" and "Lest We Forget," Richard A. Bernard, Metro's president, however, denies any supernatural method of obtaining information.

The plot of "The Great Victory" is the first great production to show in tangible form the actual events of the conclusion of the world war. History has collaborated with Maxwell Karger, the author, in providing the material for this splendid representation of the most important period in world affairs. Weaving a romance into the thread of important happenings of the earlier period, Maxwell Karger has completed his story in such a way as to give motion picture patrons the thrill and excitement of its climax and close.

Recent Happenings Portrayed.

The capture of Sedan, the Versailles conference, the recall of the German envoys by Marshal Foch and his associates of the Allied command, the delivery of the terms of the armistice and the final acceptance of it, the abdication of the Kaiser and King, will, before Congress to read them the whole text of the armistice terms, have all been included in the picture. Many who have read the text and who have actually seen the film, will say that the picture has been faithfully reproduced. Moreover, there will be brought to the audience a number of remarkable incidents connected with the epoch-making events which have not heretofore become generally known.

The Versailles Supreme War Council conference at the Trianon Palace and the arrival of Erzberger and his party, and their reception from Foch of the terms settled upon by the consensus of Allied opinion have all been graphically represented. Care has been taken to have the players visualize faithfully the important personalities portrayed. Director Charles Miller and his assistant, Edward Lawrence, have, wherever possible, engaged actors who actually resemble these notable, sometimes finding the man required outside the ranks of actors, as in the instance of Eugene Smoluch, the Frenchman, who plays the Secretary of the French foreign department, who is an absolute "double" of President Poincare of France.

Many Notables Represented.

In importance of personnel, the picture, Marshal Foch is represented by Herman Gerald, Lloyd George by J. C. Dunn, General Pershing by John Carrington, King George by William Gaffney, E. M. House by William Adimur, Admiral Sims by William and Admiral Wemyss by Aubrey Lowe, King Albert of Belgium by Raymond Hayes, the same player demonstrating his skill at makeup by playing also King Ferdinand of Bulgaria, M. Matsu, by T. Namamoto, Turkey's representative by Harry Pettibone, King Victor of Sweden, and his representative by Antonio Vitalli, Robert Lansing by Charles Arling and Joseph Tumulty by Richard Walton.

President Wilson is shown in some inspiring and historic scenes. Fred C. Truesdell resembles the nation's chief representative so closely that scarcely a dual there is, and beautiful results are scored by strangers who either fancy him to be the president or remark upon the resemblance.

Contrasting scenes in No Man's Land before and after the announcement of the armistice are included. The现状 shot delivered by the American soldiers and their opponents in the historic conflict is indicated, and the subsequent halt, followed by the bargaining of the Germans to exchange their In. Crosses for cigarettes. However, romance in "Life's great photodrama is by no means forgotten, and the events lead up to a most attractive scene.

"The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollern" closes on a note of exaltation, bringing home the great benefits won in the battle of "Emancipation." Des, drama, and romance is played between Creighton Hale, as Conrad, and Helen Ferguson, as Amy.

Mary Miles Minter Does "Active" Screen Close-Up

A IMPROVEMENT on the "close-up" will be "The American Ace," an epic telling of "Wives and Other Wives," the American Film Company's new production, starring Mary Miles Minter. It is an "active" close-up instead of the stiff, almost motionless pose assumed heretofore when the lens was close to the object or person.

Few of the producers have risked the dangers of flying maneuvers in a "close-up," because of the fact that not many faces can be active and yet remain attractive under the tremendous magnification on the screen.

But in Mary Miles Minter's face the film world possesses a feature that has neither wrinkle nor blemish. It may be argued that this is because of her youth. Still, there are many motion picture stars who make very fine close-ups of the "stationary" kind, who dare not even move their lips during the taking of the film which will, when projected, make the tiniest facial line assume the proportions of a rivet on a map. In "The American Ace" or multiple chins the screen will show them up like concertinas.

In "Wives and Other Wives" there are a number of these new style close-ups. They demonstrate the perfection of her face's natural and unorthodox physiognomical lateral comparisons of Miss Minter's face reveal that she is one of the only instances in which the right and left sides of the face are virtually identical. Profound screen analysts declare that in "Wives and Other Wives" there is more eloquence in even her smallest and most finely graduated facial change than in many other stars. It should be of interest to the part of other stars to register emotion.

Thus it is the "life within"—the very ideas and thoughts behind the emotions—that soars out from the very heart of the hundreds of screen productions that are upon the great mirror of life—the film.

Dual Role for Williams in "The American Ace"

ERLE WILLIAMS, Vitagraph Blue Ribbon star, has turned his hand to literary work and soon will be seen in a new, original, and closely co-written co-outhor. The play, which was written by Mr. Williams in collaboration with where the first scenes of the new picture an American aviator as the central figure, and has been given the title of "The American Ace." Mr. Williams is now at work on the production at the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood under direction of James Young. Mr. Williams recently came East to make a five-reeel feature, but it was decided that he should step into "The American Ace" first, and he returned to the Pacific Coast.

"The American Ace," Mr. Williams has been one of the most popular stars in the business for many seasons past and has appeared in the first time, so far as known, that he has ever appeared as the writer of a photoplay. It is not his first writing, however, for in his youth he wrote numerously short stories. Finding stardom has published an autobiography in book form.

"The American Ace," despite its title, is not a war play. It is described as a secret service play, replete with mystery, in which a young aviator brother, obtains the secrets of a ring of plotters by flying into the German lines, and the secret of the plane's power. Mr. Williams is called upon to play a dual role in the picture, and he will actually fly an airplane, he having learned the operation of a flying machine during the early days of America's participation in the war.

Mr. Williams took up the study of flying at that time with the hope of becoming an army flyer, but this hope never was realized.

Hale Hamilton Goes West.

Hale Hamilton will be the first Metro star to begin work on a new feature production, following the industry's recent activities of the star has gone to Metro's west coast studio in Hollywood, Cal. Hale will be photographed. "The Fourfusisher," a comedy-drama by Isola Forrester and John Payne, is this star's "picture vehicle on the california location," Harry L. Franklin will direct Mr. Hamilton.

Vitagraph Companies Busy.

With production about evenly divided between East and West, the Vitagraph Studios has eleven major companies at work on productions for its regular program, in addition to several companies working on short reel subjects.
Chaplin and His Bride Appear on Same Screen

ONE wedding sometimes stirs up a lot of rumpus. Take the case of Mildred Harris—that was—and Charlie Chaplin. The Jewel star and the comedy star got married last month, and, according to Jewel Productions, there is a heavy run on "Borrowed Clothes," which is the latest release featuring the little star who has become Mrs. Chaplin. Every picture fan, from all accounts, is anxious to see the comedian’s bride even though most of them have seen her previously in many big productions.

Piquancy is lent to the situation by the fact that the bride of the millionaire comedian appears this time in a film whose title suggests a remarkable idea, and which is known to show her as a bride. The story of "Borrowed Clothes," which has been pretty well told in advance advertising, in fact depends mainly on the theme of marriage and orange blossoms.

Miss Harris makes a delightful figure at the great moment dressed in the garb of the bride, with a crown of blossoms on her head. The spectator therefore has a realistic vision of how she must have appeared on that epochal occasion when she faced the clergyman October 23.

Jewel Productions makes the interesting report that many of the exhibitors who have booked the film are advertising its heroine almost exclusively for the occasion as Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, and are relegating, for the time being, the bride’s screen and maiden name.

At the Broadway Theatre in New York the attraction drew a capacity crowd. The drawing power was augmented by the fact that Charlie Chaplin, himself, was also on the program in the film, "Shoulder Arms," which has been held over for another week from a previous long run at that theatre.

M. Kashin, manager of the theatre, issued announcements to the effect that Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Chaplin were to be seen at his theatre. The idea proved irresistible.

Riviera Books Entire Hayakawa Series.

"The Temple of Dusk," the Haworth Mutual production starring Susue Hayakawa in a Japanese drama, taxed the capacity of the Riviera, Chicago’s theatre, beautiful, for four days, November 7-10. Balaban & Katz, who operate seven theatres in Chicago, have made the Riviera the mecca of the North Side fan. An orchestra of thirty-five artists had rehearsed the picture under the direction of Leopold Kohis, general director of music for the Balaban & Katz theatres, and the effect was a convincing demonstration of the power of music in emphasising film action.

The drawing power of the Japanese actor has resulted in the booking of the entire series of Hayakawa productions for the Riviera. Balaban & Katz report that "The Temple of Dusk" made a profound impression on its patrons, and the box-office receipts were limited only by the capacity of the house.

"Miss Ambition" is a Modern Drama.

Vitagraph will inaugurate the Corinne Griffith series of nine Blue Ribbon features on November 25 with "Miss Ambition," a modern drama based on an original story by Rex Taylor. Miss Griffith is the fifth of Vitagraph’s stars selected to appear on the program since the announcement some time ago of the company’s new booking plan, whereby exhibitors are supplied with stars and release dates a year in advance.

Heciee Love, the sixth of the Vitagraph feature stars, is scheduled to make her first appearance on the Blue Ribbon program on December 2, in "The Dawn of Understanding," this completing the first cycle of star series releases under the new policy.

In "Miss Ambition," Miss Griffith was directed by Henry Houry. She is supported by an efficient cast, including Betty Blythc, Walter McGrail, Denton Vanc and Templar Saxe.

Keeley Sets November 25 for Release of "Marriage"

EXHIBITORS will be interested to learn that the release date of the third of the Frank A. Keeley productions, "Marriage," has been set for November 25. This picture played at the Broadway Theatre for one week to large audiences, and Manager Kashin declared it to be a fine picture, as it depicts vividly high life in society and tells a clever story.

"Marriage" deals with a social evil which is constantly cropping out in real life, namely that all men and women of high social order who, through their lack of funds, to keep up appearances stoop to cheat at cards. This subject is treated in a strong manner.

James Kirkwood directed this picture, and it is regarded as the best work he has yet done by those who have seen it. The way the subject has been handled has been a source of favorable comment by both the public and the press. The William L. Sherry Service will distribute "Marriage," as it has the two other Keeley productions, "A Romance of the Underworld" and "Out of the Night." The last two releases, according to reports, prove that they have met with favor.

In this picture Miss Calvert is enabled to wear some beautiful gowns and also to display her emotional abilities.

"Shoulder Arms" Breaking Records.

Twenty thousand dollars in contracts for return bookings on "Shoulder Arms" is the record obtained without any selling effort by the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit Exchange of New York on the second Chaplin comedy.

Other First National exchanges throughout the country report a phenomenal number of applications from exhibitors for return dates. In many instances, according to the managers, exhibitors have voluntarily offered to double and treble their rental prices on the comedy to continue its original run without interruption.

Exhibitors in small towns are said to be amazed at the manner in which "Shoulder Arms" is breaking house records for the duration of runs. Theatres that previously played attractions for two days as a maximum, because of limited population, are using the second Chaplin comedy distributed by First National for three and four days to capacity business.

New Loew Theatre Uses Power’s.

Much comment has been made on the opening of the handsome Loew Palace Theatre in Washington. This is one of the most pretentious theatres in America. Its wonderful projection is accomplished by two Power’s 6-B Cameragraphs.
Universal Holding Daily
Conferences on Publicity

Promptly at noon there is a ceremony every day in the office of R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of the Universal. The occasion is a combined celebration and ritual for births and deaths of the industry. This morning the conference of Mr. Cochrane with the six men in charge of various departments of advertising and publicity centered about the idea of their gathering is to bring new thoughts into being or kill old ones that have served to their limit or have failed. Following the first session a large painted sign in a frame appeared on the wall of his office, purporting to all that at noon every day the room would be reserved for executive session.

This practice is precisely similar to that followed by the editors of the world's largest newspapers.

The Universal conference is called to map out all details of the advertising and publicity campaigns pending. These take part are Joe Brandt, Nat Rothstein, Paul Gulick, Hal Hodes, E. S. Moffett, I. D. Cochrane and L. E. Whitehead.

As a result of the first meeting, some unexpected plans developed for the campaign will be waged for current and pending special attractions.

A definite schedule for these productions from December 16 to March 19 was announced at this time.

Following is the schedule as announced:

"Sins of the Wild West," starring Leah Dean, December 16;
"Danger—Go Slow," with Mae Murray as star, December 17;
"Heaven's Hell," featuring Harry Carey, January 13;
"Destiny," featuring Dorothy Phillips, January 27;
"Dearie," featuring Mabel MacLaren, February 10;
"The Scarlet Strain," featuring Mae Murray, February 24, and Pathé Colors Scenes in "Infatuation."

The colored scenes in the Pathé special offer, "Infatuation," starring Gabby Deslys, mark a high point in the achievement of chromatic cinema display. The scene is a performance on the stage of the spacious Casino de Paris showing the "human flag," now reproduced at the New York Hippodrome. A company of girls mount a gigantic frame, and the arrangement of their costumes furnishes the colors of, first, the French tricolor, and then Old Glory. The rest of the brilliant performance is shown with its glittering bullets, evolutions and groupings.

For faithful color production there were no considerable problems to be met, but the lighting experts and specialists from the company's color department, Vincenzo, figured them out to perfection, with the co-operation of Director Louis Mercanton.

In Allen J. Holubar's recent play opera, "The Girl Who Dared," from the story by James Oliver Curwood, there was used what is believed to be the most expensive lot of furs ever seen in any single film production.

One of the fur costumes worn by Dorothy Phillips the star, is valued at $5,000. It is the property of Fred LeRoy Granville, cameraman of the Holubar Company, and was obtained by him during the year he spent in Siberia with the Stephenson expedition while on his trip around the world. It is made of white un-born Siberian seal and is trimmed with white fox and Russian sable.

"Leap of Despair" Comes November 24.
This feature, the latest release of the seventh episode of the patriotic Pathé serial, "Wolves of Kultur," starring Leah Basset, Ruth Churton and Louise Hutchinson, and released the week of November 24.

Evelyn Greeley Presented With Genuine Dog of War

If you see Evelyn Greeley, the world picture star, accompanied by a non-descript sort of a dog, walking about New York, you will have an opportunity of seeing in this "mutt" one of the unsung heroes of the war. Miss Greeley was presented with Glad, for that is his name, by one of the survivors of the fight at Fismes when 28 of the original company is all that was left of the immortal 396 of Company C of the Regiment U. S. Infantry, that went into the fight that day against the "cockchafers," the crack Russian regiment, and beat them to a frazzle.

In the letter Miss Greeley received with the dog she was told that he had been given his name because from the day he came to them and had been trained to carry messages from the trenches back to the regiment's headquarters, they had called him Glad, and damned glad they were when he was the only living creature that could and did go through the hail of bullets and shells to carry word to bring up ammunition which was badly needed.

In fact, at the time the boys had only enough provender for their machine guns to last a matter of minutes.

The boys want you to keep Glad. It is the only way we can show our love for you and the regard we hold you in after all the fine things you have done for us. Glad means a lot to us and so do you, and that is why we want you to have him.

As proud as Miss Greeley is of her two brothers, who went across at the time when the ink was still wet on the declaration of war, so is her admiration of the valor of C Company.

Glad seems to be perfectly satisfied with his present lot and makes only one demand—he insists on sleeping "on guard" at Miss Greeley's bedroom door.

Heffron Finishes First Western.
Thomas N. Heffron, who has directed such productions as "The Painted Lily," "Madame Sphinx," and "Tony America," has just finished his first western picture, "Deuce Duncan," presenting William Desmond as the star. This picture will be released by Triangle on December 24. It was written with scenario by George Hickey of Triangle's literary staff.

"Deuce Duncan" presents Desmond as a wild and reckless cowpuncher who fears nothing fearful. But he yields to the appeal of a little woman who is being per-secuted by an escaped convict. Her gentle personality and soothing influence awaken his ardor and this wild bad man of the west is regenerated, as he turns his strength to good account, when in a man to man conflict he rescues the girl he loves from the villainy of her supposed brother. Then Ann is only too glad to permit Deuce to take her into his arms.

Lopez Completes New Moss Feature.
John S. Lopez has just completed at the Keeney studios on East 48th street a six-reel feature for H. S. Moss, which is still untitled, but is said to be based on a unique and daring theme. In the cast is a new leading ingenue, Beth Lyons, who was discovered by Director Lopez while working as an extra in "The Sins of the Children." The time set for the release of this latest Moss picture was the middle of November.
William Fox Announces Reissue of “The Great Nine”

I
X announcing a new series of releases to be known as “The Great Nine,” described as a million dollar group of pictures, William Fox said: “President Wilson and all the Government officials have had nothing but words of praise for the work of the motion picture industry has played in the conduct of war activities. “Now that the war is won, the conservation of man power and materials is a task which we must all undertake to the utmost. The necessity for economy continues. For that reason the Fox Film Corporation at this time has decided to release nine of the greatest pictures it has ever made.

“In two years motion picture audiences in this country have increased 100 per cent, so that to-day pictures which were released two years ago are entirely new to 30 per cent of the theatregoers. A large proportion of the other 56 per cent will want again to see pictures which are tried and proved successes. So that in addition to producing by the Conservation of materials and man power, through the reissue of these successes, we are sure to bring unusually large profit to the exhibitor.”

It is on the basis of proved values that the “Great Nine” have been selected. There is not one that could be duplicated today, under war condition, for much more than its original cost. There is not one that was not originally made for and sold as a big special feature.

Special attention has been given to the timing and testing of the new prints. The revising has been done personally by William Fox and his film editor, Hetty Grey. Faster and better has been limited to 4,500 feet and care has been taken to eliminate everything interfering with fast, snappy, sustained action. Many great stars of to-day will be found in the casts as portrayals of minor roles.

The first of these will be December 29 and there will be subsequent releases at intervals of one week. The opening feature will be the first picture made of the California studies of William Fox. It is William Farnum in “Fighting Blood.”

Theda Bara will appear in her super-providing, “The Serpent,” which was made under the direction of Raoul A. Walsh. Raoul A. Walsh’s first picture for Fox, “Regeneration,” will be the third production released.

Elaborate publicity and advertising material and entirely new lithographs and lobby displays have been provided for “The Big Nine.” The entire elaborate campaign in behalf of the productions is in the hands of James E. McGrade, assistant to the general manager of the Fox Film Corporation.

“The Kingdom of Grief” Is Story of Belgium’s Tragedy

The rebuilding of Belgium will be a labor of love when the American people come to realize what the world owes to that heroic little country when with but two army corps against eleven German army corps she held the Hun’s bay and gave the armies of England and France an opportunity to mobilize and become effective. No one factor is destined to play a greater part in the coming campaigns to raise funds for this noble work than the wonderful and authentic photo-history just being released, entitled “Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief.” The entire picture from start to finish is full of action, from the early days of the revolution in 1830 up to the day when King Albert returned triumphant and splendidly into the city of Ghent with his queen. Every phase of the war has been expertly portrayed.

The scenes were taken under Government supervision in Belgium. Belgium’s hero’s struggles for freedom from tyranny is the theme of this picture.

Universal Sets New Record

Harry Levey, manager of the industrial department of Universal and director of the motion picture “Keep the Home Fires Burning,” announces that this reconstruction picture actually used over one hundred cameras. This is unprecedented and sets a new record in picture making.

Scenes were taken in over a hundred different cities and places both here and abroad. It is a spectacle which has been in the making for months with a view of releasing upon the declaration of peace, it is prophetic in showing on the screen the vision of the future. Everyone’s thoughts are now turned to the very things that this picture depicts, and its timeliness is expected to create much favorable comment.

Review 22 Tells Why the Hun Ran

The coming peace in the great world struggle gives especial significance to No. 22 of the “Official War Review” released by Pathe the week of November 26. It shows the blow that finally broke the Teuton’s back; how the batteries of the Allies known as the wetting Hun on the run, and Britain’s batteries are seen speeding forward to take up new positions. The camera shows a breathless, tireless, unceasing work in bringing up ammunition and guns from the transportation course afforded by the tranquil Flanders canal and the rough sledding of guns through the muddy fields to a hurry call for a barrage when the iron-mouthed chorus begins to sing in thunder, smoke and flame.

The camera shows how Italy answers the ceaseless call of the trenches and how America’s power began to bear down.

“The Kaiser’s Finish” Makes Hit in Baltimore

SIDNEY B. LUST, president of the Super-Film Attractions, Inc., of Washington, D. C., wired to A. Warner, in charge of sales for “The Kaiser’s Finish,” the special eight-part state rights feature, the following:

“The Kaiser’s Finish” going over big at first run house, Wizard Theatre, Baltimore. Mr. Depkin, manager of the Wizard, called me on phone and informed me the crowds had destroyed front of theatre claming to get in.”

Investigation revealed the fact that Mr. Depkin had booked a second house” im mediately following the reported signing of the armistice on Thursday of last week. Mr. Depkin held to his decision to play the picture on Monday. With the official statement by the War Department that the armistice had been signed early Monday morning, Baltimore crowds quickly caught the significance of the title of the Warner production, and before the Wizard opened on Monday the streets in front of it were jammed with people awaiting admission.

In the fifteen minutes of struggling before the police arrived and threatened the crowds with their clubs the well ar ranged lobby was changed to a ruin rivaling in the completeness of its destruction the work of the Huns pictured on the screen.

Theatres Contract for Kellerman Film

Reports on “A Daughter of the Gods,” the great Annette Kellerman spectacle, on which the Fox Film Corporation launched a special drive about two months ago, show that since the beginning of this campaign nearly 200 theatres all over the country have signed contracts. Many of these theatres, it is said, booked the picture for a second showing, and in not a few cases—especially during the non lease period—for a third time. In every case the picture is reported to have played to big houses, the fame of An nette Kellerman and the prestige established by this picture since its release having proved a strong combination.

Famous Players Studio

Resumes Production Work

Following the four weeks' period of inactivity production work was resumed last week at the Fifty-sixth street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The first picture to be started was "Here Comes the Bride," a Paramount production in which John Barrymore is starred. Mr. Barrymore is not expected to complete his stage career in the Tolestay play, "Redemption," at the Plymouth Theatre, and his work on the picture was consequently limited to five days of a week of intensive effort. His director is John Stuart Robertson, and F. C. Hurley did the camerawork.

Max Marcin and Roy Atwell were the authors of the play, which enjoyed a successful run at the George M. Cohan Theatre during the 1917-18 season, and Chauncey E. Whittaker adapted it for the screen.

Marguerite Clark made a hurried trip from Washington early in the week to make a scene to be used as an introduction to "The Golden Bird," which, except for the scene referred to, was completed a month ago. Miss Clark starts work this week at the Fifty-sixth street studio on an adaptation for Paramount of Alice Hope's "The Baggage Patch." Hugh Ford, who produced it on the stage a dozen years ago, will direct.

The "Fighting Tars," the first Cavalieri's most sensational Paramount picture, which was started before the shut-down agreement with Goldwyn, has now been completed, and Director Edward Jose is now engaged in cutting and assembling the film.

Elise Ferguson, whose last picture, "His Parisian Wife," was completed a month ago, will soon start on another Artcraft production under the direction of Emile Chautard.

Peace Brings New Interest to Two Jewel Productions

On the heels of world peace Jewel Productions reports that a tremendous interest has developed in the newest phase of the company's activity, which is being conducted in connection with the picture, "The Yellow Dog." Jewel also reports that "The Ray," a story which had been developed in the last few days for "Crashing Through to Berlin."

A separate reason is suggested in each case but the real basis is a return of the beliefs previously expressed by certain film men, that serious affairs relating to the war would be dead subjects so far as films were concerned the moment peace was declared.

The Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs have swung their attention with high enthusiasm to debates and demonstrations over the problem that resulted from peace. What shall we do with the Kaiser? is one of these problems. Clubs throughout the country, working in cooperation with exhibitors, are sending out special cards to home membership, and are debating on the various after-the-war questions.

"Crashing Through To Berlin" has become automatically a victory picture, in that it shows the principal events that led up to the crushing of Germany. In test showings the interest of the audience for this picture, Jewel Productions reports that within the last few days a number of theaters which previously had made no arrangements to book it took steps to procure it for immediate showing. The Palace Theatre of New York started the first of the series of showings that arranged an emergency showing. This theatre booked the picture for five days immediately. The most important piece of equipment was made that the amateurs had ever used.

Goldwyn Well Represented in Big Ohio Houses

Ohio claims its share of America's aggressive exhibitors, and H. A. Bandy, manager of Goldwyn's Cleveland office, also claims generous representation in the big theatres of these showmen. Incidentally, the showmanship methods employed by these successful managers are of interest and value to every person connected with the industry.

W. T. Huber, who, with his son, L. K. Huber, operates the New Royal Theatre, Findlay, has one of the most exquisitely motion picture houses in the state. Findlay is proud of the Hubers and the New Royal, and the skilled manner in which these exhibitors direct their interests has won the confidence and patronage of their community.

Practically every person in the industry knows Edward A. Zorn, managing director of the big Temple Theatre, Toledo. Mr. Zorn is a young man with big ideas. His success has been won by giving his patrons their money's worth in full measure. He is known throughout the trade as an alert advertiser and the advertisements for the Temple Theatre often dominate the advertising columns of the Toledo newspapers.

Mr. Zorn makes his copy talk, not whisper. He injects his own vivid personality into every line of wording, and the humanness of his ads gives them an appeal and effectiveness which command extraordinary results. Mr. Zorn knows the value of star personality, and in all his exploitation the names of the famous stars are heralded in the most spectacular manner.

H. C. Horater, managing director of the beautiful Alhambra Theatre, Toledo, is another example of the modern, distinctive exhibitor. Mr. Horater is known as "Doc" among his friends and business associates, and they all agree that "Doc" is a mighty able doer when it comes to standardizing the health of his box-office profits. Mr. Horater is one of the biggest advertisers in the state, Mr. Horater emphasizes the necessity of providing the highest class of entertainment for motion picture devotees and also the importance of house service that meets the wants of the patrons and provides them with the utmost in convenience and comfort.

Another "live wire" Ohio exhibitor is O. J. Bannon, proprietor and manager of Bannon's Theatre, Elyria, Ohio. Mr. Bannon is nicknamed "On the Job" Bannon, because he is an indefatigable worker. Mr. Bannon never fails to "cash in" on the pictures he exploits.

In all Mr. Bandy has every reason to be proud of the showmen who are making famous throughout Ohio the name of Goldwyn.

President Is Still Here, Cohn Proves by Picture

One of the latest stunts of Jack Cohn, head of the Universal news pictorial department, was to take part in refuting a sensational rumor that spread the other day across the country. The rumor was that President Wilson had left suddenly and secretly on a trip across the sea to take part personally in the armistice conference. For a day or two this idea was circulated so rapidly that people believed it and gambled on it. Hundreds of bets were made that the President had gone and that news of his presence in Washington was faked in order to hide the fact of the matter. Then along came Jack Cohn with a special news picture showing the President on the day of the actual signing of the armistice standing on the White House steps and reviewing a parade.

With the old-time theory that "seeing is believing," this picture quickly put a quizzies to the mistaken report.

But the proof came too late to save Mr. Cohn himself from loss on account of the mistake. He had been one of those who believed the rumor and made a little bet on that score with George Kanz, secretary to Mr. Laemmle. Mr. Cohn, of course, was undone by his own proofs.

Baggott Shatters the Clock

King Baggot, who heads the all-star cast of the Screen Classics, Inc. production, "The Man Who Stayed at Home," has an opportunity in this production to show what a shot he is with a revolver. In one of the scenes he is called on to shatter a clock, which has been set with a time fuse to a bomb, with one shot from his gun. Director Blanche has intended to rehearse the scene several times before the actual taking, but Mr. Baggot's accuracy with his revolver would have proved too costly in clocks.
"Proposing Bill" (Goldwyn).

If there exists any doubt that "Proposing Bill" Parsons is one of the few truly great comedians on the screen, his performance in his newest Capitol Comedy, "Proposing Bill," is certain to dispel it. Lovers of wholesome comedy will find "Proposing Bill" at top-comedy speed all the way through the new vehicle.

When Bill is home from the road, where his business as salesman takes him, he is obsessed with a mania for proposing marriage to almost every girl he meets. Popping the question four times a night is not an uncommon occurrence for Bill. To the credit of the women upon whom he exercises his wills it may be said that none ever takes him seriously. But his penchant for rapid-fire proposing puts him in a sorry plight when he meets a girl he realizes he really loves. That's where the story begins.

Report Demand for "Cleopatra."

Americans, as a rule, are good spenders. And all present signs sustain the prophecy that during the coming winter they will break their own spending record. The secret is reaction from an unprecedented rigid economy—reaction from the acute suspense of war—relief from anxiety for loved ones in the military service—joy at a victory which saves the world from threatened disaster.

A reaction of this new spirit is seen in a demand by exhibitors for the Theda Bara super-production, "Cleopatra." The success of "Cleopatra" since its release on the open market in August has been sensational, and exhibitors figure that it is just the sort of big picture for the holidays.

Goldwyn Staging Farrar in Roles New to Singer

NOTHING could have been more astonishing to the millions of picture lovers than the abrupt change in the dramatic materials provided for Geraldine Farrar under the Goldwyn imprint. By deliberate intent Goldwyn and its popular star decided that she should be seen in story lines of the opposite of all drawn in her hitherto done for the screen.

With her second Goldwyn production, "The Hell Cat," the audiencing of the run and pre-release career this week in the important cities of the country, announcements are made of her third production in which Miss Farrar has the role of an Alaskan dance hall girl. This production is much like all of the others in the Farrar series is directed by Reginald Barker, and it will be a farewell to the woman in the most everything work Miss Farrar has ever done since she first, tremendously successful debut on the screen four years ago. The life of this story by Willard Jack is "Shadows." It has not been scheduled, but will be a mid-winter release.

Four of Goldwyn's Geraldine Farrar star series already have been completed.

Famous Cartoonists Will Draw for Hearst Weeklies

On the heels of the official statement from the companies concerned announcing the consolidation of the four big news pictorial services under the banner of Hearst's International News Service, glowing things are proclaimed regarding the debut of the combined weeklies. One of the chief attractions mentioned as part of the new service is the collection of high-priced cartoonists serving the reels with animated cartoons.

The list includes Windsor McKay, Hal Kemp, Harry Murphy, Tom Powers and Upper, for years the leading comic artist of the country. It is part of the International News Service's chief plan to inject as much humor and diversion into the weeklies as is humanly possible. In the meantime the news camera scouts of all the separate branches of the weeklies are reported to be working at top speed all over the face of the earth.

Some of the latest news pictures are those just filtering across the Atlantic from the capitals of the world, with pictorial news of how Europe acted when its orgy of blood-spilling came to an end. Incidentally the very latest scenes of America's readjustments to the new peace conditions are to be found in the current issues.

Harry Raver Announces Serial Starring "Maciste"

CONFIRMING Harry Raver's denial, some time ago, that "Maciste," the L'Annunziato star of "Cahina" and "The Warrior," had not been killed in action on the Alpine front, as had been reported, the announcement has been made that the battle-scared screen idol has completed his third production, "The Liberator," and the picture is in Mr. Raver's hands ready for the North American market. The new film is a serial 25,000 feet long.

Little has been divulged concerning "Maciste" and his plans for new productions to follow his last success, "The Liberator," as he has been doing a soldier's duty and it was considered unwise to make predictions in face of military difficulties and the dangers of the fighting front; however, in August, 1917, the first scenes of "The Liberator" were staged, leaving of absence from war duty being obtained for "Maciste" and the male members of the cast. Then came reverses at the fighting front and every man was called back to service. Work on the picture was abandoned. Then Mr. Raver started again, determined in persuading the producers to try again. Through the influence of Gabrielle D'Annunzio, the march of the planes to the studio, subject, however, to instant call.

There were three such interruptions before the production was finished, more than a year later. Casualties among members of the cast and their relatives added to the uncertainty and gloom, but Mr. Raver never gave up hope. During all this time he was sending cables. He had provided the story for the new "Maciste" production and, realizing the boy's popularity in this country, did not believe in giving up without pulling the very last wire.

The picture is not a classic. It is not a war picture. Harry Raver, commenting on the production, says: "My wife and I sat through a five-and-a-half-hour showing of 'The Liberator' at one time without being bored. Comedy dominates the picture, although romance and thrilling situations supply the necessary contrast. As a whole, 'The Liberator' is so novel and unusual I decided to submit it to the Press in its entirety, so that its value as an attraction might be intelligently understood. I realize that serials are usually introduced in this way, but as 'The Liberator' is completed and I am confident of its quality, there is no reason for withholding any episodes and keeping the trade guessing about the remainder."

According to Mr. Raver's decision "The Liberator" will be shown to the press on Thursday and Friday of this week in two sessions of two and a half hours each.

Posters Aplenty for "Kaiser's Finish."

One-half of the total quantity of posters ordered for the world-wide projection in the United States and Canada on "The Kaiser's Finish" has been requisitioned by the Emancie Press, 132 West Forty-sixth street, New York, to meet exhibitor demands in New York City, New York State and Northern New Jersey, the territories they are booking on the production.

Sawyer Announces Plans of New S-L Pictures

ARTHUR H. SAWYER, who, with Herbert Lubin, has formed the new S-L pictures organization, for the making and releasing of big specials, announces that proof of this work is being started on the first Ralph Ince Film Attration, personally directed by Ralph Ince, which will be the initial offering under the new banner. Plans for elaborating the idea had been under way for several months, a definite policy having been outlined and carried to completion. According to Mr. Sawyer the only films which will be made are those which have a theme big enough to assure their success on the largest scale.

"The day of mediocire films has passed," he declares. "We plan to do pictures which will make our name known to the public and to the studio, subject, however, to instant call."

The details of this plan are to make the biggest kind of big specials, for only by the creation of unusually fine attractions can a new motion picture be kept up. S-L Pictures will cater to a public ever growing more discriminating, and will never attempt any fixed number of annual releases, or any other plan which would detract from the high quality of production which is vital today to win success.

"Ralph Ince, our director-in-chief, is so well known for his successes that further comment is unnecessary. For his opening production Mr. Ince is picturizing a stupendous story; the future must remain a secret. The star will be E. K. Lincoln, who has made a name for himself by efficient portrayals of many difficult parts, winning an ever-growing following among picture lovers. The combination of Ralph Ince and E. K. Lincoln is particularly fine, and in support there will be an all-star cast, which will be announced soon."

Leonce Perret Says Title Must Be Born Out of Film

LEONCE PERRET says he certainly paid the penalty of choosing General Pershing's famous words, "Lafayette We Come!" for his first independent feature film, as, when it came to selecting a title to the sequel it seemed impossible to find one which was equally as telling, which "breathed, like the title "Lafayette We Come,' the soul of the film."

In the page of the newspapers the co-advisers to suggest a competition for a suitable title. This idea, adopted sometimes by other concerns, was at once rejected by the French director. The title must come out of the film, said he, "It must be born out of the picture itself." Mr. Perret then says, "We therefore can therefore give a convincing title—a title that tells the public at once what the film is all about—what the film intends to convey."

"I have been congratulated for choosing the title "Lafayette We Come!' spent many sleepless nights thinking out this picture, which has been the ambition of my life, and often looked at the stars and said, 'If I were dancing, as I was hearing of the wonderful sacrifice of our soldiers and your soldiers were making for the world, how would it seem to me as if for every life given in France a new, glorious star appeared in heaven.'"

"I thought of the American flag—Old Glory—which was winning victories, and of the days when the thoughts came the title "Lafayette We Come!" and "Stars of Glory." I knew that 'Stars of Glory' would convey not only the glorious deeds of your American soldier, the way they have carried the flag to victory; it suggests the victory of the world; it suggests the recompense that has been given to the "Service Stars." In short, 'Stars of Glory' suggests what I wanted to convey in my film—Victory, Freedom and Peace."

Gaumont Announces Territorial Sales

C. W. Brilli, of Akron, Ohio, has purchased the rights for Northern Ohio. The distribution will be made by the Sterling Film Service Co., 310 Sloan Building, Cleveland, Ohio. The independent news reels, the Gaumont News and Gaumont Graphic will be handled in Michigan by Independent News Co., Detroit, in association with the Detroit Free Press.
The Pioneer Film Corporation announces they will release "The Prodigal" May 4, according to the Screen Craft Company, under the direction of Frank Reicher. This production stars Mary Bol- linger, playing opposite Elise McMurtry, Lucy Cotton, who has made a name for herself in many recent Broadway productions. "Flaming Ramparts," by Edith Barnard Delano, which appeared in "Harper's Magazine," is also an absorbing tale of mother love, a story that will hold the interest of all those who see it and furnish evidence of a high quality. Following the releasing of "The Prodigal Wife" the Pioneer Company will place on the screen a feature story of Mollie Malone, which is now in the making, but which has not been named as yet.

When the film "Wives of Men" was running Florence Reed, which the company also released, has been booked for a week's run at all of the Poli theaters in New England. As a rule features are only shown at these houses for a three days' run. Through the recently opened Pioneer offices in Cleveland, "Wives of Men" has been booked for a week's run at the Miles Theatre in that city.

State Right Films
Prove Their Worth

STATE right pictures have been proving their worth during the recent epidemic," says Leon Schlesinger, special representative of the Maxman company. "I have just visited some of the Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa theaters unaffected by the closing ban, and find that although exhibitors were deprived of new pictures they were working state right pictures pretty hard, and in many instances making money. Of course even in this 'open' section business was affected because many people were afraid to spend even though no ban had been ordered. Exhibitors were not looking to make money, therefore they were glad to meet expenses. This they were able to do according to the strength of the state right picture. And the good ones got the business. I think we can include 'The Manx-Man' among the latter. But don't let us peep too much on 'Crowds turned away story. No one will believe it. It is enough that in such a time theatres can turn to independent pictures and manage to stay in business with their old.'

Special Representatives Weiner and Pelzmann, who were recalled from the New England and Ohio territories, respectively, when the epidemic commenced to rage, have been sent back by Sales Director Ag-L. Kempner, who feels that conditions have been restored to normal.

Employ Return Soldiers
Advocate Leonce Perret

LEONCE PERRET, head of the Perret Productions, Inc., whose productions include the patriotic film "La Fayette We Come," and the victory film "Stars of Glory," starring Dolores Cassinelli and E. K. Lincoln, has just made the following statement: "With the millions of boys to be once more employed in civilian life, I think it is of the greatest importance that every business should co-operate and try to employ as many returned soldiers as possible, giving even preference to those who have been wounded. "Perret Productions, Inc., have already several discharged and wounded French soldiers engaged. We are resolved in future to only employ soldiers who have come back from the front. This is only following the example of France, where preference is always given to the wounded soldiers whenever a position is to be filled."

W. H. Official Speaks of Ince and Sennett Reissues

AN official of the W. H. Productions Company says that, although the old adage regarding "the survivial of the fittest" applies equally well to the screen as it does to life and in this connection calls attention to the productions which they are reissuing. These were made some time ago by Mack Sennett and Thomas H. Ince, both of whom still rank high in their respective lines of film production.

About four or five years ago when Mr. Ince made his first Kay Bee Western dramas, he was acclaimed as being in ad>vance of his time. It is said that it was that his pictures were finished before they were begun, paradoxical as this may seem, as his method of story and production was never so completely, including suspense, climaxes, etc., before starting on a production, and not to follow the plan then in vogue with certain directors, of shooting a scene here and there and patching up the best story obtainable from these situations.

At about the same time Mack Sennett became famous as a comedy producer his name in the motion picture business name to be almost synonymous with comedy. While Mr. Ince developed such stars as Charlie Chaplin, Ray Milland, Robert Mitchel, Richard Stanton, Anna Little and Jesse Hayakawa, who appear in the reissued W. H. pictures, according to Mr. Sennett's direction of that many of the leading comedy screen actors of to-day made their appearance, including the "one and only" Charlie Chaplin, Mabel Nornmand, Roscoe Arbuckle, Mack.Swan, Syd Chaplin, Ford Sterling and Chester Con-

The W. H. Productions Company are now reissuing "Beyond the Law," the single reel Mack Sennett Comedies, in two series, under the brand names of Liberty and Eagle, while the Kay-Bee Western dramas, the best helping series of fifteen each, under the brand names of Liberty and Union, the Kay-Bee subjects are in two series.

It is announced that the territories are being sold rapidly, and the pictures offered on either basis as to provide a minimum of cost and maximum of box office re-cipts for the exhibitor.

Stolen Orders Goes Big in South.

William A. Brady's big production, "Stolen Orders," which is being handled in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas by the Southern Feature Film Corporation, has been a big money maker for exhibitors in the South. According to an of-icial of that company. Opening at Zoe Theatre in Houston, for a seven-week engagement, followed by a week's engagement at the Hippodrome Theatre in Dallas at admission of six cents, this production scored a big success. The new L. & A. Theatre in El Paso, one of the fine houses in Texas, is using "Stolen Orders" as its opening attraction. In addition this picture has been selected as the opening attraction for the Liberty Theatre, controlled by the Jefferson Amusement Company of Beaumont, opening November 3, the T.A. Pine Theatre at Orange, Texas. It is said that never before has a state right production proved such a puller among exhibitors as in that territory.
First Dalton Picture Is Now Ready for Release

E MMETT Dalton, general manager of the Southern Feature Film Corporation—known as the “leader of the Law”—announces that the production will be ready for release November 26.

His latest and most ambitious project, a biographic picture from the original story which appeared in serial form in a prominent magazine, Mr. Dalton says, has been designed to offer by producers to make a motion picture version of the story, but he wanted to make the picture himself, interested outside capital, and with the assistance of Theodore Marsten produced the picture.

The story, based on the exploits of Emmet and his three brothers, who were at one time known as “bad men,” Emmet Dalton literally portrays the roles of his two brothers.

It is said that no expense has been spared in the making of the story, which has been made a minor gold and shrewdly, by a “local color” which breathes of the West.

The picture is now ready for a public viewing, the date of which will be announced soon.

Lincoln Makes Statement on Joining S-L Pictures

A s announced in our last issue, E. K. Lincoln is to be starred in a series of special productions made by S-L Pictures under the personal direction of Ralph Ince, Mr. Lincoln has expressed his gratification at being associated with this new concern under Mr. Ince and further states:

“Big films are the only thing today. I have always wanted to be associated with an independent producing organization which has the financial resources to produce a full length picture. I have long felt that few motion pictures have done in a long time. So absorbed and responsive was yesterday’s audience that the picture should draw full houses at every performance,” says the Telegram.

The Times reviewer says: “Admirers of the original ‘Little Women’ will find delight in the animated illustrations of the story.” “Audience will love the story, the American, and the world about the story. ‘Stirs heart interests’ has somehow lost the appeal.

The Telegraph’s notice states: “Whether or not one has read ‘Little Women,’ for this is a story that has been told in the world over, this presentation should be seen,” while the Herald says: “Praise of tears won by playlet ‘Little Women’ which is far and away the best part of the story, which is the perfect perfection of the screen presentation. I, therefore, recommend!”

And the Journal of Commerce remarks that “the pictures are well and vividly played, the dialogue points of light in every human interest. We are all bound to the screen presentation. I, therefore, recommend!”

Yarden, Mr. Ince’s direction at the Vitagraph Studios, I have always been an ardent admirer of his art. In the character of Mr. Lincoln, the greatest director of the day. He has a fine perception for the dramatic, a keen insight into human nature, and the most perfect sense of the fine points of detail that I have ever observed in a director.”

In his recent Lincoln’s connection with S-L Pictures, Mr. Ince says: “In E. K. Lincoln we have captured a star of the first magnitude. His first appearance in pictures was under my direction, and I have always entertained a very high opinion of his abilities and purposes. I have watched his work for a long time, with keen interest and feel that he has few if any rivals in sustained interpretation of a character of this type and in American manhood.”

New Distribution Plan for Ford Mystery Serial

FROM the office of Hiller & Wilk, Longacre Building, New York, comes a further announcement regarding the new Ford Serial, “The Silent Mystery.” Since his last multi-plot reel picture, Mr. Ford and director has been besieged with serial offers. Gathering a large and well known cast of players, Mr. Ford, in addition to assuming the direction, plays the male lead, with Mac G Aston and Rosemary Tehby opposite, with the addition of a number of thrilling stunts, that have never been attempted before. The mystery is not new, but the production develops and makes amusingly tense situations.

An Egyptian priestess seeking to recover a stolen jewel, the last survivor of a simple; an uncannily tained hand; a murder mystery that casts suspicion upon most of the people, and an end to the enigma that passes from the control of its creator, are among the novelties. Francis Ford assumes the direction of his last serial, “The Silent Mystery,” for a production of Phil Kelley, Secret Service man, globe-trotter and all-round athlete. The love adventures, there being ample scope for Mac G Aston as Betty, the heroine, while Rosemary Tehby is cast as the Egyptian princess.

Among the effective scenes is one in which the uncanny hand seizes the heroine by the hair, draws her up to an unknown fate. Electrical devices play an important part as thrill providers. An instance is the destruction of a submarine by a wireless device. Peter O’Malley, who has appeared as assistant to Francis Ford in many of the pictures, is finally hailing from the world of movies.

Bacon-Backer Production Featured at the Rialto

THE latest Bacon-Backer offering, “A Thrilling Story,” has been held in readiness for the Rialto Theatre, New York, and Manager S. L. Rothsfeld states that it is one of the best pictures he has ever booked, and desires more Bacon-Backer productions of the same calibre. This production is said to have enjoyed excellent business during the entire week, which was one of the biggest from a box office standpoint in the history of the Coney Island house.

The production is a screen version of Paul M. Potter’s successful play, “Agnes,” has been adapted to the screen by Mr. Bacon. Miss Agnes, her excellent dramatic work, is the star, appearing in the role of Agnes Roydant, in which she is well received. The director, who, in the role of the famous actor, appears in the role of George Roydant.

The story is strongly dramatic and tells how a young couple from the country gets into the social whirl in New York and barely escapes moral destruction. Agnes enters society, while George, her husband, becomes engrossed in speculation. Agnes becomes entangled in an affair with an English nobleman, who falls into the clutches of a vampire. The climax comes as Agnes, with husband’s consent, in her own room into which her admirer has forced his way and unintentionally takes a dose of poison. Agnes narrowly escapes and a large sum of money is saved. The husband and wife realize their mistakes and go back to the old peaceful life of the countryside.

The role of Agnes is said to suit Miss Bolland’s personality, and she portrays the part with a remarkable sincerity. The emotional scenes surrounding the nobleman’s tragic death being expressed with depth of feeling and finished dramatic art is remarkable; Robert Cahn as Lord Sulgrave, Corinne Uzzoli as Attilie Damuron and Brad

Gentlemen:

We enclose our check to pay for our subscription renewal for another year, as per the invoice enclosed, and ask that you see that we do not miss a single copy of the magazine, because we keep a complete file of them for reference, and we cannot afford to have a single number missing.

We would not think of running a picture show without having your magazine as a ready guide and reference to the business, because we get lots of help and information from it.

We believe we had received every number of it from its birth to the present time, and as long as we stay in the business, we expect to keep it. In fact, we don't think we would want to do without it, no matter what we do in the future.

Yours truly,

STRAND THEATRE, DORCHESTER, OPENS

New Home of One of the Most Beautiful Circuit Places in Boston's Suburbs—Gordon Circuit Management

The Strand Theatre, a very large picture house in the suburbs of Boston, that has long been considered one of the best equipped theatres ever built, was opened in a blaze of glory on the evening of Monday, November 1. It is located at Upham's Corner, in the Dorchester district of Boston.

The Strand Theatre is under the management of the Gordon circuit, which has the exclusive first showings in Dorchester of Paramount, Artcraft, Poetry, and other first-class pictures. The theatre has been built on a large scale and is equipped with every modern convenience. It has a seating capacity of 3,000, and is fitted with the latest type of electric fixtures. The auditorium is spacious and comfortable, and the decorations are tasteful and tasteful, making the theatre quite attractive.

Two Lexington Theatres Raise Prices.

The Ben Ali and Strand theatres, Lexington, Ky., after working along on the ten-cent admission basis for months after most theatres went to fifteen and twenty cents, recently went to forty-five and fifty cents. This is the first step in the direction of raising prices.

Keeps Force Influenza During Epidemic.

The Big Features of the Franklin corporation, Louisville, represents one of the few organizations that has kept its force intact during the epidemic. This concern has paid all employees, men, women, and shop workers full salaries, and kept every employee on the payroll. A number of the houses kept managers and one or two men, but musicians, machine operators and general house employees have been hustling for themselves. Many of them have been working on construction of Camp Knox, at Stiltton, Ky., where day laborers are being paid thirty-five cents an hour.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, head of the Arrow Film Corporation, recently paid a visit to Louisville, where he called on the Big Features Rights Corporation, which has booked several Arrow productions.

Brief Items.

A. C. Farrell, manager of the Louisville office of the Universal Film Exchange, Inc., recently went to Indianapolis, where he spent the greater part of a week in the district office, where a number of hinging matters were straightened out.

The Majestic Theatre is being redecorated inside as well as out, and when the ban is lifted will be even more handsome than in the past, when it was regarded as the finest theatre in the state, and one of the best in the South.

Cincinnati Trade Letter

Haydin in the Closing Order.

MANAGER JOHN H. HAYLIN, of the Grand Theatre, Hanover Square, and operator of the Hotel Haydin, both in Cincinnati, was, by reason of both of these businesses being closed down temporarily by the epidemic of influenza, or, rather, by the enforced closing of the theatres and hotels of the city, prevented from attending the closing of the Haydin. He presented the views of many people on this matter very forcibly in a letter on the subject, following the discovery, toward the end of the month of closing, of 150 new cases in a suburban convent. Mr. Haylin said:

"The Grand, together with all other theatres, churches, schools, picture houses and saloons has been closed by order of the Cincinnati Board of Health for five weeks on account of the epidemic. I am under heavy expense operating the Grand, and also at the Haydin, and on account of the Grand and the hotel at the Haydin being closed I have lost considerable money. This is all right, and it should be, provided any good was accomplished in stamping out the epidemic. But yesterday the Board of Health met and received reports of 150 new cases being discovered, consequently closed, and I feel, consequently, unjustly and illegally, as if they were working for their own profit. Now to the point: These 150 people did not catch influenza at the churches, because the churches were closed. They did not get it at the schools, because the schools are closed. They did not get it in theatres or picture houses, because they were all closed. Where did they get it? It appears to me that the Board of Health has closed the wrong places. Other cities that closed the places of amusement, churches, schools, etc., have not raised the ban. I would suggest that inasmuch as the closing of the above-named places has not stopped the influenza in this city the Board of Health look further for the cause, and raise the ban on churches, schools, etc.

Many others took the same view, criticism being especially vigorous against the failure of the Board to declare and enforce quarantine measures against persons suffering from the disease, so that visitors to influenza patients were permitted to spread the disease everywhere. In other words, as one leading exhibitor pointed out, the Board took the illogical course of restricting the general public and failing to restrict victims of the epidemic and its measures were consequently almost futile.

Heidingsfeld Visits New York.

Dr. Heidingsfeld, the legal adviser of many moving picture and theatrical concerns in Cincinnati, a director of the Cincinnati Film Corporation and an owner of the Herbert Theatrical Syndicate, went to New York recently to attend meetings of these two concerns. At the last one, Heidingsfeld spent a day at the Long Island home of his friend, Harry Rainford, formerly of Cincinnati.

Crowds Throng Theatres on Victory Day.

BUFFALO downtown moving picture theatres did a land office business Monday, November 11, on the day devoted to the celebration of the war. Monday, November 11, after official news was received here that an armistice had been signed and the war ended, this city, and the entire world celebrated a day of victory that was planned and celebrated in all parts of the country.

To mark the reopening of the Strand Theatre, Buffalo, after the lifting of the influenza ban, Manager Crabb, of that house, gave his patrons a fine program of local pictures in addition to his regular bill. The program included patriotic scenes in Buffalo's Fourth Liberty Loan campaign and the Liberty Loan pictures showed scenes at Lafayette Square, this city, where the memorial tablet with the names of Buffalo soldiers killed in the war were also pictures of the dedication of the Liberty Loan arch here, when eight wounded Yankee soldiers sent back from overseas to the army hospital at Fort Porter, Buffalo, were present.

"Smile" Films for Indiana Soldiers.

"HOME-MADE" motion picture is to be Indianapolis’ Christmas gift to its fighting sons at the front. The local branch of the War Camp Community Service has arranged to send to Indiana units "over there" a motion picture of their parents, wives and sweethearts, which will be made in the Hoosier capital on Sunday, November 10.

The present plans provide for a parade around the Soldiers’ and Sailors’ Monument, in which the marchers will pass the camera close enough to be recognized when the picture is shown to the soldiers. To eliminate the possibility of ordinary curiosity seekers forcing their way into the line of march it has been decided to ask those who wish to take part in the picture to present a recent letter or envelope to the soldier they wish to represent.

Sanders Theatre Now Resembles New York’s Rialto.

One of the most pretentious improvements made in motion picture houses in Indianapolis during the three-weeks shutdown was that in the Sanders Theatre, in Fountain Square. Fred Sanders, the owner, engaged Charles Reed, who decorated the Circle, to transform the theatre into a miniature reproduction of the famous Rialto, New York. Not only are the decorations new, but a new scenic lighting effect has been put in.

"I don’t ever say much about my theatre, but I do believe that with the new decorations it is one of the prettiest neighborhood houses in the city," said Mr. Sanders.

HIGHLAND PARK TO HAVE SUNDAY SHOWS

People of Suburb of Detroit Voice in Favor of Picture Entertainment on the Sabbath

By Jacob Smith, 117 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

November 5 the people of Highland Park, which is virtually a part of Detroit, are going to have Sunday shows by a vote of 2,406 to 1,503. The ordinance becomes effective December 5. It will be the first time that Highland Park has ever had Sunday shows.

Metropolitan to Handle Gaumont Weeklies.

The Metropolitan Company, 23 East Elizabeth St., Detroit, has arranged for the Michigan and the Gaumont Weeklies, and has booked the entire fifty-two pictures in the Success Series. Some time ago the company withdrew all its own house pictures and booked the entire fifty-two picture. Manager Ross prevailed upon the home office to let him handle the Success Series. He was able to take hundreds of bookings, and they finally decided to acquiesce in his demands.

Garson Resigns from Broadway-Strand.

Edgar Garson has resigned as house manager of the Broadway-Strand, Detroit, and is succeeded by George Cusick. Mr. Garson, who is a brother of Harry Garson, plans in road show with a big special picture made in Detroit. Phil J. Gleichman, managing director of the theatre, who has been with the house for a number of years.

Solos a Feature of First-Run Houses.

A big feature of the first-run theatres in Detroit is the solos. The Broadway-Strand has Eddie McGrath, who has been there since the house opened. Henry Santry is at the Regent; Frank Bessinger is at the Washington, and soloists from New York City alternate regularly at the Adams and Madison theatres.

Many Theatres Raise Prices.

Price increases are becoming very popular in Detroit, especially with the smaller theatres. The Rex Theatre recently raised the prices of its other theatres on Detroit's west side; raised from 10 to 15 cents at the same time by agreement.

The Woodward Amusement Company has raised the price of its theatre No. 1, from 10 to 15 cents, with two cents additional for war tax. However these theatres are all giving better shows than formerly. So far there has been no complaint by the public.

Hyman Buys More State Right Films.

Arthur & Hyman, of the Arthur & Hyman Attractions, Owen building, Detroit, has purchased three new pictures for Michigan and Gaumont. They are ready to advertise with booklets on: "Wives of Men," "The Million Dollar Mystery," and "Her Husband's Mistress." They announce that they will send out "Wives of Men" as a road attraction, playing percentage dates with exhibitors, with advertising, press, special riding, paper and lobby display. Manager Hyman has five prints booked solid for weeks ahead.

Weeks to St. Louis Paramount Office.

George Weeks, former assistant manager of the Detroit office of Paramount, has been transferred to the St. Louis exchange, where he has been appointed manager.

G. K. Hadow, who has been doing the booking, has been appointed assistant manager to succeed Mr. Weeks and Elmer Briest. He was formerly assistant manager of the department, "advances to city salesman.

Moss Succeeds Prince at Triangle.

H. K. Moss, for two years with the Triangle Distributing Corporation and for the past seven months leading Detroit exchanges, succeeds Dave Prince as manager of the Detroit Triangle office. He arrives in the city Monday, November 11, to take full charge.

Lieut. Kleist Endorses His Theatre Chain.

There has been quite a change in the theatrical situation of Pontiac, Mich. Lieut. A. J. Kleist, operating the Howland and Eagle theatres, has taken over the Central and the New Oakland, giving him every theatre in the town. Helmer George, former owner of the Central and Oakland, plans to re-enter the show business, on a big scale. Mr. Kleist has returned to Camp Lewis, Washington, where he is stationed, and during his absence from Pontiac the theatre will be looked after by Mrs. Kleist, and George Wilbur, formerly of the Majestic Theatre, Wyan- dona, who has been appointed assistant manager as well as house manager of the Oakland.

The latter house is brand new, seating about 1,700 in an attractive style. It is Mr. Kleist's intention to play vaudeville in the Howland, and pictures in the remaining three theatres.

Leading Theatres Sign Vitagraph.

Among the important theatre chains recently to have signed for Vitagraph star series productions are: Ferry Field, Glad- win, Menominee, Rimbey, Kintner, Knepper, Max- line and Tour.

Well Known Film Men Die.

A. T. Campbell, for the past six months salesman in Michigan, and who formerly conducted the Strand Theatre in Escanaba and the Grand Theatre in Menominee, died recently at his home in Cincinnati of influenza.

Charles J. Nevison, manager of the Del-Theatre, Detroit, passed away last night. The body was sent to his home in Dundee.

Majestic Abandons Vaudeville.

Col. L. S. Ormsby, of the Majestic Theatre, Kalamazoo, has decided a change in policy at the Majestic Theatre. Kalamazoo. Vaudeville has been abandoned for 1919. It is an interesting change, and will be practiced exclusively. Ed Beaty will book it, as one of the Butterfield houses, while Mr. Brown is the house manager, succeeding Frank O'Donnell.

Detroit Short Items.

Pete Smith, formerly manager of the State Film Company, and recently with George Kleine, has been appointed Vitagram salesman in Michigan. He will cover territory formerly handled by A. T. Campbell.

A. J. Reed, of the George Kleine System, has purchased from the Film Exchange Building a floor with the General Film Company, from where all future distribution will be done. Mr. Reed is the most logical man for the selling and will be the Kleine representa- tive in this territory, as he has been in the past.

Those who have visited the Detroit office of the United Theatre Equipment Company in the past week notice big change. Manager Ernest M. Forbes has moved the offices to the front of the store, thus making it more accessible to employees and those calling on business. It's a big change for the better.
BOOST CLEANLINESS OF YOUR THEATRE

Triangle's Philadelphia Manager Says Publicity of This Kind Will Overcome Patrons' Fear of Epidemic

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

W. J. HAGERTY, manager of the Tri- angle Theatre, says that the Cooperative Association, whose former connection with several theatres and knowledge of publicity qualifies him to speak, gives the leading managers of the motion-picture industry the following suggestions to induce the patrons of the theatres to return with confidence after the influenza epidemic has ceased.

"The average motion picture theatre," says Mr. Hagerty, "has neglected one of the most potent and valuable methods of restoring the confidence of its patrons. The fact that you are playing a big production with a sensation story around a desire strong enough to overcome the fear that a person has in attending a production on the public's mind, he should fear no germs that may lurk in the theatre.

"If the proper publicity were given to the fact that the air in most theatres is purer than the air in many homes, that it is changed every three minutes by a well-nigh perfect system, that the use of disinfectants and various sanitary measures make the theatre beyond reproach as far as the personal safety is concerned, if the parallel is drawn between the fumigations that have been performed in various places like railroad trains, restaurants, theaters and even churches, if the thought is impressed that a particular theatre is desirable not only for the comfort of its patrons, but also for the safety and comfort of its patrons, very little complaint could be made as to the falling off of attendance due to the fear of influenza.

"The present crisis demands more than the usual publicity. In other words, it is necessary not only for the exhibitor to impress the quality and value of his product on the public mind but also to bring out the particular merits of his theatre above his competitor's. The fact that the theatre has an one-story building with a valuable lot, its location, the safety and comfort of its patrons, very little complaint could be made as to the falling off of attendance due to the fear of influenza.

"Shoulder Arms" Takes City by Storm

In "Shoulder Arms," now playing in Philadelphia's leading theatres, is taking this city by storm and is unusual in the way of recreation and entertainment to the majority of belted movie fans. Reports from the Colonial, Atlantic City, and Stanley, Palace, Arcadia and Victoria, state that in most every instance the crowds turned out to see it and have filled another theatre of the same capacity.

To the Desires of Your Patrons

Frank W. Buhrer, manager director of the Stanley and Central Market Street theatres, has been hearing the complaints of the patrons that one of the conditions following the influenza epidemic have had a serious influence upon the theatre business. The audience are at present extracting themselves with extreme difficulties. A general increase in ticket sales is greatly aided by restoring some sort of equa-librium which is slowly but surely giving the desire for entertainment. They are interested in the prospects of the present and future releases, which he predicts will assure the patrons a superior up-to-date program for their theatres. Business is bound to be restored to a marked degree if the exhibitors will only cater to the tastes of the patrons instead of trying to hunt bargains in film production. He is of the opinion that the direction of Mr. Buhrer extend from New York to Philadelphia and Atlantic City, and the fee being higher will be a careful consideration for the comforts of its patrons. Trivial improvements which the managers are frequently driven to make have been frequently made under Mr. Buhrer's orders, with the encouragement always being apparent in the box office receipts.

Wreath Succeeds Flintom at Paramount

P. C. WREATH, recently manager for Paramount-Artcraft at M. Louis, has been appointed manager for Kansas City territory, succeeding the late A. D. Flintom. George W. Weeks, formerly of the Columbia, has been appointed assistant to Mr. Wreath at St. Louis. There is no change in the organization at Kansas City, the local manager being James Curtis, who has been manager. Mr. Wreath has been connected with Paramount since its organization. He is expected here in a few days and is therefore one of the older men in this territory in point of service. His appointment is a welcome feature to Kansas City territory exhibitors, and to exchange managers also.

Robertson's Circular Brings Results

Richard Robertson, manager of Goldwyn Theatre, Kansas City, has received immediate results from literature prepared and sent out during the influenza period. A large number of theatres, to be locked and sealed without envelope. On the address side were these words: "Positively, Kansas City, 100. Young men absent from their communities—economy—convention—survival—publicity. (Theatres closed, and the public timidity of crowds.)

Thereupon, the Goldwyn service was suggested as one best in the opening attractions. The card system installed during the enforced "vacation" was used effectively in arranging follow-ups for the responses.

Elser to Assist in Management of Doric

A. M. Elser, formerly with William L. Shew, was recently associated with George W. Curtis in the management of the Doric Theatre. This theatre started just before the influenza bar was imposed — that upon the removal of the ban it has a chance to make an especially effective introduction to the public. Mr. Curtis is preparing an especially good reel for the reopening—which is delay for some months the coming of the new show and this will be a leading attraction of the theatre regularly. The first show will have the presentation of numerous features, including several par-drages, not the least of which is the great peace celebration.

Booster to Enlarge the Grand Theatre

S. S. SAFFOEL, manager of the Grand Theatre, is preparing to celebrate his birthday, war bonds enough to release men and material for the addition to his theatre. The Grand is centrally located downtown and was chosen as one of the one-story-plan places. At one time it flourished under the direction of George L. Tyler, but was closed down and then acquired by the management of the Enquirer. Since Saffoel took over the house a year ago it has regained all of its old-time popularity due to the originality and genius that enabled him to acquire a string of picture houses in Western New York towns and has built up a strong clientele. He believes that he can do the business by building a balcony and making other improvements.

Huey Back at His Desk

Some time ago it was stated that Erwin J. W. Huey, treasurer and managing editor of The Picture Play-Book, was taking up some options on several neighborhood-hood houses. Since then Mr. Huey has been ill with pneumonia and has only recently returned to his office. He now admits that his rumored actions were entirely incorrect and that he has plans for getting into the game in several sections. He says, however, that he does not expect to do any great things and will continue to ride out the present emergency.

Cohn Resigns from Liberty.

S. W. B. COHN, manager of the Liberty Theatre in Little Rock, Ark., has resigned and left for Little Rock, Ark., to enter the infantry officers' training corps at Camp Pike. He passed his medical examination at Fort George Wright here.

Mr. Cohn was in the theatrical business as a manager here seven years ago, then left for Alaska, and has since been appearing in newspaper and local manager at various places alternately since, except for some months while he was assistant secretary of the Spokane Theatre. He has also been publicity director of the Red Cross.

determination on the subject of admission prices. It is charged that some exchanges have refused to make contracts unless they are assured of a guaranteed profit of at least fifteen cents. The exhibitor is planning proceedings which will make it necessary for each contract, for refusal to make contracts, and may also involve steps to oust the exchanges. As in the past, protest notices are now being arranged for, which will disclose the agreements and the position of the exhibitors who are refusal to sell service to this exhibitor and others. A point involved is the alleged advantage to downtown prices. Under the new restrictions that suburban houses must charge at least fifteen cents for the pictures.

Kansas City Has a Woman Booker.

E. A. Pattison, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Kansas City, Mo., is one of the women who have been appointed to the positions. The stipulation, restrictions that suburban houses must charge at least fifteen cents for the pictures.

Dorie Displays War Work Posters.

While most of the theatre fronts in Kansas City presented merely blanks to the posters, the Doric, one of the downtown theatres, has caught the eye. At the Doric the panels usually occupied by posters advertising the show were occupied by posters of the United War Work campaign. The Wonder, run over by the Strand, has also displayed huge posters, which are closed during idle periods with a crowd, placed in this lobby in easy view of the public. In another display, a map of Kansas City was constantly observed by a crowd—and from a distance the street in front of the theatre. This is an unusual aspect, though the people were standing and not entering the theatre.

With the Exhibitor.

Burlington, Iowa: "Wing on the Tray" will remodel his moving picture theatre in this city in the near future. The town has decided to sell the jewel Moving Picture Theatre will be remodeled soon. Joseph Miller is the manager. Mr. Miller and Mr. Long have purchased the picture show at Muscatine and will take charge of the new house.

Baxter Springs, Kan.—John Tindale, manager of the Elite Theatre, has volunteered to try his father-in-law, Mr. McRuder, will have charge of the business.

Benefit for Relief of Musicians.

The City of Regina has promised the free use of the city auditorium for a benefit recital for members of the Musicians' Union who have suffered because of the closing of theatres in Regina. It has been suggested that permission could be granted for the holding of the benefit performance on the evening previous to the reopening of the theatre, the date of which has not yet been determined. The musicians asked for some financial relief, such as a reduction in rent. The city came back with the suggestion of a benefit recital in which the musicians themselves could participate.

Geoffroy Opens the Francais Theatre.

The St. Francois Theatre, Montreal, was reopened for a temporary engagement, the attraction being "Hearts of the World." The theatre has been in a run of the two weeks under the direction of Manager Conway, formerly in charge of the Gayety Buffet of the Strand. After the closing the house was occupied for one day when the closing order of the Board of Health was received. The new Allen Theatre in Westmount reopened with its regular policy of three changes of pictures each week. Manager A. L. Allen had "Hearts of the World" as its first attraction at special prices before the closure was applied on October 8.

Dresses Lobby To Represent Hades.

Manager of the Strand, Ottawa, Devises Striking Display to Boom Showing of "To Hell with the Kaiser" by W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

Heerr Jennisen, manager of the Strand Theatre, Ottawa, Ont., has devised a special lobby display consisting of a representation of Hades, with the Kaiser in the very thickest of the heat. The display, framed in the lobby was a pedescope, and a parable, taking a look, discovered the Kaiser's portrait and a a line advising the people to see "To Hell with the Kaiser." On the cards was the printed advice "Keep Your Feet Dry, See To Hell With The Kaiser at the Strand, week of November 11, and buy Victory Bonds."

Without a word to anyone Jennings also built up a sudden rush of the lobby. The Kaiser behind the bar of a cage and the inscription of the picture's title. He held the bar of a cage and an armistice had been signed would be received. Then he intended to spring the picture, an inevitable peace parade and demonstration.

Jennings also secured the indorsement of the Ottawa and Navy Veterans for the picture and secured the free service of the band of the organization for a demonstration.

On the picture number one, opening the manager of the Strand conducted an open-air "slide show" in the wide lobby race, with a talk of the people. Slides of various sorts, advertising both coming attractions and the prints, were used. When the theatre reopened, and the doors turned out with a thrilling comic that a director demanded. Another attendant was dressed as a sailor.

In addition to all these stunts Jennings' machine was in the Ottawa Journal for the engagement.

Allen to Make Weekly Change on Mondays.

With the reopening of Toronto theatres after the epidemic lay-off of two weeks, Manager Allen, manager of the large downtown house, dropped the plan of making weekly changes on Saturdays in place of the usual Mondays. It was decided to change the bills on Mondays to conform with the policy of all other houses. The idea of changes on Saturdays was pursued throughout the summer and fall months—until the plaque came along. It was found that the plan had several advantages. The policy is practical only with a first-run theatre, but a day's booking was lost before the house was opened along the second-run house. It is also intimated that the plan did not help the patronage and the decorations to any great extent even though the attractions had the advantage of early and exclusive reviews in local newspapers.

Futuristic Lobby Display at the Holman.

A highly interesting lobby display effect was shown by Mr. Somers of the Pomeroy of the Holman Theatre, Montreal, for the four-day run of "A Society Sensation," which opened on Monday, November 11. All the special signs, cards and cut-outs were done in a black and white theme. Both in the lobby and in the theatre front a very different appearance. The chosen style consisted of slanting black and white stripes. The black and white reopening announcement cards harmonized with the general effect.

Outdoor Shows Boosted Bond Sales.

Through the holding of the three outdoor shows, Mr. W. A. Baille, manager of the Cum-Bac Theatre, Dovercourt Road, Toronto, for the Fifth Canadian National Victory Loan campaign, when numerous loan pictures appeared. While the theatre itself was closed, bonds to the value of $120,000 were sold, it has been announced. On Saturday night, when the third outdoor demonstration was staged by Mr. Baille, $45,000 worth of bonds were sold. Jule and J. J. Allen themselves took an active part in the demonstration and made many bond purchases themselves.

Exhibitors Pay Employes During Ban.

Many of the downtown theatre managers have decided to keep all their employees on full pay during the epidemic shutdown. In this connection there was a recent report of W. A. Baille, manager of the Cum-Bac Theatre, Dovercourt Road, Toronto. Mr. Baille decided to keep his employees on full pay, and the operators and the theatre, the figure was $2,000 the week. Mr. Baille was paying for the two weeks.

Other Toronto exhibitors who were reported to have paid full salaries during the lay-off included Manager Alexander, of the Park Theatre; Dr. Richardson, of the Green Theatre, and R. H. Pickner, of the Relief Theatre, December 17.

May Now Lift Ban on Hearst’s Films.

Now that the war is over, Canadian exchange companies are waiting with interest to see what action will be taken by the Dominion Government with regard to new pictures controlled or marketed under the name of William Randolph Hearst, whose newspapers and films have been under the ban in Canada for many months. The Production Board had acquired the Universal weeklies and had asked that a telegram was soon received in Toronto. With the end of the war it is thought possible that the International Film Service, which was admitted into the country, although they will be subject to censorship in the usual manner, the value of the Hearst ban in Canada during the past year or two has not borne the name of Hearst and they were admitted only after the Pathe organization in Canada made declaration that Hearst had nothing to do with Pathe news releases in the Dominion.

Cuts Matinees to Save Coal.

The management of the Rex Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, has made the interesting announcement that, owing to the coal situation locally, it has been decided to discontinue matinees for the balance of the season except for the organization of those on Saturdays and holidays. The Rex, which is located at Somerset and Laurier streets, was newly decorated throughout during the epidemic period and has been equipped with a new gold sound system. The Rex Theatre has adopted the policy of charging prices throughout the times weekly.

St. Denis Theatre Resumes Operations.

With the resumption of activities in Montreal by the St. Denis Theatre late in September, has been closed since last May, got under way again under the direct management of Fred Crockett, who has purchased the theatre and vaudeville. General admission in the evenings was fixed at 25 cents and the matinee price is 15 cents.
STARTS FUND FOR SOLDIERS' MONUMENT

By J. M. Shellenbarger, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

C. S. CHEADLE, manager of the City Opera House in Havre de Grace, Md., is proving that he is a live wire when it comes to making money to build a monument in a city of this size. During the three weeks that the theatre was closed, due to the influenza, he went into the entertainment business and had a service curtain painted and installed. The art work was done by R. E. Behrens of Havre de Grace and the painting of 111 stars in the center to represent that number of boys from this section. The painting is also for advertising purposes. In order that none will be slighted Mr. Cheadle has and he has an alter ego about seven members of the company all interested in the service. The benefit night is a benefit night for this fund at his theatre, and in his newspaper advertising he asks the public to attend. Among the prices shown on the City Opera House every night is a benefit night. He has the co-operation of the men here.

Sunday Show for Soldiers Great Success.

This week, a part of the series of Sunday afternoon entertainments to be given free of charge for the men in uniform at the New Theatre, 219 West Lexington street, during the winter months, which have been arranged by Manager L. A. DeHoff, was given on Sunday afternoon, November 11, and proved a great success. The S. R. O. sign had to be hung out. The theatre, served with a program, and the price for programs are donated by the management. The United Service Club, which is conducted under the auspices of the United States, Mother's Army and Navy Committee, National Congress of Mothers, have inaugurated a feature of entertainment. Besides the moving pictures, Mr. DeHoff also had a program of music, and has arranged for singers from the boys' home started by Mr. Cheadle to build a soldiers' monument in this city. This benefit night is a benefit night for the fund at his theatre, and in his newspaper advertising he asks the public to attend. Among the prices shown on the City Opera House every night is a benefit night. He has the co-operation of the men here.

Teach Wounded Operating.

A moving picture projection machine will shortly be installed at the Port McHenry Coliseum. This is the result of the efforts of the men interested in the theatre, the Coliseum, by the management, for the purpose of teaching wounded soldiers who care to follow that line of work, how to handle the apparatus. A volunteer has been installed at the Walter Reed Hospital in Washington for the same purpose. The Coliseum will be changed into a theatre, and the medical officers will be able to use the apparatus, which was given for the benefit of the soldiers at Port McHenry on Sunday night, November 11. William Scheller has been appointed chairman of the committee of arrangements. There was a capacity house, and it was considered a sound idea to have the machine so that it can be used to teach wounded soldiers to become operators.

Benefit Show at Grand.

Through the courtesy of Harry W. Creswell, manager of the Grand Theatre, Highlandtown, this playhouse was used for the performance of the Highland Strike, which was given for the benefit of the soldiers at Port McHenry on Sunday night, November 11. William Scheller has been appointed chairman of the committee of arrangements. There was a capacity house, and it was considered a sound idea to have the machine so that it can be used to teach wounded soldiers to become operators.

Central New York Notes

By Clifford A. Carroll, The Observer.

Park Installs Double Feature Policy.

The Park Theatre, opening Monday, November 4, the first day after the influenza, will show Fantazium in Utica, using a double feature policy. This is the first time a double feature has been installed in Utica theatre. The opening bill was "My Own United States," and Robert Warwick in "The Avon," with "Honor's Cross," a comedy, and a Screen Telegram. The bill was a great success. The San Francisco "Honor's Cross," a Western, was given a strong showing.

Baldwin Foster Is Dead.

Baldwin Foster, son of William L. Foster, manager of the Avon. Theatre, Utica, and in charge of that house when it opened, died at his home in Baltimore, Md., Wednesday, October 23. Young Foster was operator at the Avon when it was under his father's management. Mr. Foster, Sr., and his son formerly conducted a motion picture theatre at Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Eastern New York Exhibitors Hold High.

Of the eastern New York cities affected most by the influenza pandemic is Poughkeepsie and Albany as far as cinema is concerned. The Great New York city has been hit hard. Within the last five days several theaters in Poughkeepsie were allowed to reopen after closing orders were issued which was in effect for one week.

In Albany, which was also under quarantine, the vaudeville and "legitimate" houses and churches were allowed to open, but the picture houses were forced to remain closed until after election.

Fitter Now with First National

Morris Fitzer, who has had charge of the advertising force at the Camp Dix Liberty Theatre, has received his discharge and is now associated with the Buffalo office of the First National.

Simultaneous Showing of "Shoulder Arms."

For the first time in the history of the theatres in the state of New York, a picture is being shown in two different houses on the same day. November 11, 12 and 13, the Coliseum, located on South Foun-deville house, had Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms," and on the same days in the Palace, located near the Majestic played the same picture.

Celebrates Third Anniversary.

The week of November 11 the Majestic celebrated its third anniversary under the management of N. Glaser. The film feature was "The Fallen Angels" and Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms."

Ginser Back Again with Select.

N. T. GLASER is back again with Select, and is handling Washington and Baltimore. He will some time ago to enter the employment of Pathe. Mr. Glaser has had many years in the business, and is in the back of it. For several years he was manager of the Leader Theatre on Ninth avenue, and then moving to Philadelphia for the Mamilbaun interests. It was upon his return to this city that he joined Select. He has a Service Car.

Crandall Has a Service Car.

A novelty in Washington is the service car just put into operation by the Crandall. The actual work of this car is gathering and delivering the films for the theatres each afternoon and returning them to the exchanges after the close of the day's business. This will do away with many delays and uncertainties. The car comes from a certain well known factory in Detroit, the owner of which was recently defeated for the office of police commissioner and the name Crandall's theatres appears on its body.

Groll Off to Officers' Training Camp.

A. G. Groll, former manager for Head's Theatre, recently received his appointment to an officers training camp, where he is now engaged in the army, in the field artillery. Mr. Groll, formerly employed at the Plaza Theatre on Ninth street, northwest, succeeds him.

New Manager at Mutual.

The Mutual offices here have a new manager following the resignation of H. H. Mason, who has resigned to take charge of the Mutual Theatre in Norfolk, N.C., where he has extensive motion picture interests. The new appointee is Edward C. Gross, who comes from the East and is a member of the industry, for he has been connected with other exchanges here for some time. In the course of the last week the aircraft offices were opened, joining Paramount when the merger came. Select claimed his services last February, and he left that company to assume his present duties.

To Install Projection Room.

A projection room is soon to be installed on the second floor of the building occupied by the Famous Players Exchange at the corner of Fourth and Autumn streets. The Famous Players is planning a miniature theatre de luxe which will have the most modern furnishings. The walls of the room will be twelve feet wide and have a depth of twenty-five feet. There will be wicker arm chairs for the comfort of the visual artists at the exchange, the floor will be carpeted and the walls and ceiling decorated as is the fashion.
WAR PICTURES STIR BLOOD OF INDIANS
Audience of Red Men in Erie Theatre, Anlers, Whop and Dance—Noise Drowns Orchestra

By Phil Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

The noble red man takes enthusiastically to films portraying battle scenes, declares O. Gill, of the Erie Theatre, at Anlers, Pushmataha County, Oklahoma, which is one of the centers of the Chick- ahsow and Choctaw nations.

Chinese and Indian squares every time he puts on a red-hot film showing scenes of activity against the United States. Most of the Indian families have boys in the service, and it is to the older generation of Indians that the battle pictures most appeal.

When Empey’s “Over the Top” showed at the Erie the Indian audience went wild. The blood of Choctaw braves who, forty years ago wore paint and blankets, who now wear diamonds and ride in limousines, was raised to the boiling point. Wild war whoops put the orchestra into action, and the presentation was contagious. As the American soldiers were portrayed fighting man to man in the Hun trenches the enthusiasm started, and the wierd refrain of almost forgotten Indian war chants and the stamping of the tom-toms alarmed the audience.

Not satisfied with seeing the picture once, almost the entire audience stayed for a second run, which time the performance was repeated.

White Joins Vitagraph’s Sales Force.
D. A. White, formerly of the Cosy Theatre, at Hobart, Okla., has accepted the place of salesman with the Vitagraph Company. He will have charge of sales in southern Oklahoma. Mr. White is one of the most successful motion picture men in this territory and is popular with the exhibitors.

Lubbock to Have Picture Show.
Lubbock, Tex., a thriving town in the plains country, was without a moving picture show until the last week when the new W. W. Dodge Theatre opened. Lubbock is suffering from drouth conditions. Because of bad business the show was forced to close.

Business men and merchants, realizing what a high-class picture show meant to the prosperity of the city, have subscribed $100 each, and twenty men each subscribed $100 to establish a motion picture show. It is to open soon.

Douglas Hawley Back from Trip.
Douglas Hawley, of First National, is back from East Texas, where he made a successful tour. He reports business good and the exhibitors optimistic from Dallas to the Louisiana line.

Texas Exhibitors Aid War Work Drive.
Texas motion picture exhibitors, patriotic as they are, have contributed more than $1,000 to the support of the United War Work campaign.

In every theatre is carrying slides urging liberal subscriptions, and their doors have been thrown open to the four Minute Men for speeches aiding the drive.

At most of the theatres Sunday, November 14, evening time, there was an admittance of groups of singers from various musical organizations who led the audience in songs of patriotism. The Fridays have been composed to suit the air of the Liberty Loan song.

Sol Davis Resigns from General.
Sol Davis, for the past five years assistant manager of the General Film Company, at Dallas, has resigned. He will enter another line of business. C. M. Jaegers, of the Dallas branch, has been appointed to his place by Manager James Kelly.

Manager Kelly also reports the appointment of a C. T. M. Tomlin, formerly with Mutual, as special representative.

McMahon Pulls a Good Stunt.
Advertising the “Eyes of the World,” F. H. McMahon, Forth Worth film manager picture show advertising man, pulled off a novel stunt, which packed the Hidridrome recently.

McMahon announced that he was going to film the monon pride of the nation city.

He hired an automobile, secured two policemen in uniform to accompany him, and made a reconnaissance with a cameraman in the tonneau and the cranck turning. Big streamers attached to the car drew attention to the “Eyes of the World.”

Advertizng on wagons and automobiles is unheard of today, but a few weeks ago McManoh was enabled to get his effective advertis- ing before the public.

"WHY I WOULD NOT MARRY."
William Fox Presents Lucy Fox in a Strange Presentation of Drama, Comedy and Farce.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

In this new Fox presentation drama strategies for recognition while comedy protests—and finally broad farce prevails in bringing to belated ending one of the most unusual of recent film endeavors. Lucy Fox is the one participant whose name is disclosed, although a multitude of others are shown in the first part of its many scenes. Let it be recorded that Lucy—a new Fox, so far as we know—is at the outset implored by her father to marry because he had promised her mother that he would not shuffle off until their daughter had wed. Lucy absolutely refused to marry right away—although father looked healthy and proved later on in several "chase" scenes that he was fast enough to escape even the "but.

Daughter had four types of men in immediate application for her heart, hand and companionship—indicating that Lucy was either rarely beautiful or else was heartless to much pelf. We'll say that Lucy would have liked a rich, bearded, gray-haired reason for the rush. To aid her in choosing the right one Lucy bent her steps to a female swami—a crystal gazer who foretold our heroine's future. Incidentally the sorceress told Lucy that she, her sisters and the priest had all the galaxy and then matters got more swiftly under way.

Having bid her four candidates to assemble in conclave, Lucy read, in the glass ball, each prospective marital adventure and decided what she would not marry. Each incident was acted out in scenes of varying drama, farce, melodrama and comedy by the Fox company. With Lucy impersonating the "wise" in each episode. Each steed entered in the Matrimonial Mansion was too much of a horse to win, and, Lucy sent them all, man by man, into exile.

Then to her father Lucy said: "I will not become a wife, and prove that I do not need a husband."

Our instant guess at the outcome was in effect that we should in the next and final reel find Lucy in Marion, Ohio, in possession of a glass furnace—making the big, round glass balls that sorceresses gaze into and vision the future for girls who are considering the matter of marriage. While a member of the Society of Projectionists was rewinding the fifth reel we had time to figure it all out for Lucy, planning sales drives and laying out a campaign of national advertising for the glass bowling-balls that would make a ten-strike with the love-lorn millions. The Matrimonial News will be sorry to learn that subsequent events in the Fox projection room beat their advertising department out of fifty-two pages, at full rates, during the year to ensue and start immediately.

Glass spheres of heroic size working with the dramatic, melodramatic, farcical, comic and intensive propensities displayed by the Fox-Fox would sell to the matrimony inclined like iron crosses to American tourists once the real Yankee invasion of Mitteleurope once begins—Lucy was in line for a fortune.

"THE SILENT MYSTERY."
Francis Ford serial discloses steady stream of melodramatic thrills in First Episode.

Reviewed by Edward Weltszel.

The new Francis Ford serial lives up to its title. "The Silent Mystery" is packed with melodramatic thrills and creeping atmosphere throughout. The pace is continually reaching out of space and seizing a victim in its grip. It drags the heroine by the hair to head toward a deserted houze, and she is saved just in time by the hero-detective. India and the theft of a sacred jewel figure in the opening episode. This jewel is taken by the mother of the heroine and brought to the United States, and an Indian princess is sent to recover the treasure. The brother of the heroine is mixed up with a gang of German sympathizers who have stolen a U-boat and intend to prey on American merchant ships now that the war is finished. The man who went out as an opening for all sorts of exciting experiences. There are live, scrap, and adventures in lonely huts, on the border, in the home of the heroine and among the dirty denizens of a great city. Following the serial will get a popular success.

Frances Ford directed the story, which is in fifteen episodes. He also plays the hero detective, and is supported by Mae Gaston as the heroine and Rosemary Theby as the princess. Everyone in the cast follows the pace set by the director, and the result is strict attention to putting the episodes over. "The Silent Mystery" is released by Hiller & Wilk.

"MILADY O' THE BEANSTALK."
Splendid Pathe-Diando Subject in Five Reels, Featuring Baby Marie Osborne.

Reviewed by Robert C. McClary.

There is no doubt of this five-reel Diando production, featuring Baby Marie Osborne, pleasing the many friends of that interesting child. The story in this instance, written by Elizabeth Burbridge and directed by William Bertram, contains many ingredients particularly adapted to a film of strong juvenile interest. There is, first and foremost, a very human little plot in which a former lover is the child's divorced mother still loves and wishes to marry her. Then there is an interpolation of the fairy story "Jack and the Beanstalk," cleverly executed in a few brief scenes, and later events of interest.

Baby Marie is very attractive all through the number. Her portrayal of Jack the Giant Killer, in illustration of her own dream, is a good bit of work for a young performer. Nanbe, the colored boy, appears also, and does some amusing stunts as the janitor's son. Jack Connolly plays the title role, and Ellen Cassily plays the mother part.

At the beginning of the story the mother and child are in a country town, but are forced to leave there because of the unkindly regard of the neighbors for a divorced woman. In the city Mrs. Tompkins has difficulty finding work, and her plight is a sad one when her former lover, Giant Jim, discovers her. After his final battle in the prize ring at the close of the story, in order to procure money for re- storing Baby Marie to health after an accident.

"HIS BONDED WIFE."
Emmy Wehlen Is Pleasing in Romantic Story Produced by Metro and Directed by Charles J. Hrahin.

Reviewed by Edward Weltszel.

Wealthy young ladies have married penniless young chaps in real life, but no flash and blood poor-bred hero ever had things made so easy for him as has the fictitious juvenile lead of "His Bonded Wife," a Metro production written by Lois and Arthur Zeliner and adapted to the screen by June Mathis. Emmy Wehlen plays Doris Morse, the girl with the money and the creed that she is cast for Philip Hazard, the man Doris marries.

The story will entertain the spectator who is fond of sentiment and likes to believe that wealthy and highly romantic young ladies are to be found who fall in love with their rescuers when dragged from the surf at Atlantic City and pass themselves off as poor working girls in order to be loved for their youth and beauty alone. It will be recalled that O. Henry created a genuine anger in every day in the hope that he would meet with just such an adventure. No fairy tale ever treated the problem with such a heart- hearted zeal or less regard for things as they are than does "His Bonded Wife."

One of the peculiarities of the picture is the absolute blow: The father of the heiress helps his daughter to marry the poor chap by pretending to disown him when the proud young gentleman informs the lady and her parent that since she is not a working girl and poor he must give her up. The discovery that his wife's father has given her $500 doesn't alter anything. Any way she must be given credit for setting forth every idea of the story with acceptable delicacy. Even the portrayal of such a great deal without the benefit of dramatic quality of the plot, so that one observing the picture can't help but notice the fact of having learned a great deal without being overwhelmed by unpleasant details.

The picture, which was entirely the work of Mr. Keane, was based on certain facts with reference to the withholding of a specific, manufactured material by Germany during the war. The hero is the son of a man who discovered the specific and arranged with his father to give it to the world, arranged for its sale with a drug store magnate. The world, by the way, is blown up on the American coast.

Leif Ericson appears as Karl and Irene Wiley as the girl. Howard Davis plays the role of Hartsell, and Others in the cast are John R. C. Williams, Joseph Clancy and Carolyn Wagner.

"EYE FOR EYE"
First Special Nazimova Production for Metro

Reviewed by Margaret L. MacDonald

A DRAMA by Henry Kissenaeker entitled "J Occident" was chosen as the basis of the first of the Nazimova specials, "Eye for Eye." The production, which was directed by Albert Capellani and is in seven reels, would have gained considerably by a briefer presentation of the drama. Nazimova, who has undoubtedly captivated the best of screen actresses, has chosen to portray the beautiful Bedouin girl in a whirl, which is, of course, commonplace. But the length of seven reels of film becomes wearisome. One could have wished for a more colorful interpretation of the character.

Then again there are moments when the wonderful opening scenes of the picture, for instance, where she impersonates the carefree child of the desert with an abandon that is especially pleasing. But even in this portion of the picture there is opportunity for her to do some marvelous acting in the unbridled familiarity with which the daughter of a Mohammedan race treats her beloved husband. It is to the credit of the imprisoned French officer. In the construction of the picture there is a lack of unity in the casting which detracts from the production as a whole. The cast contains familiar names of actors who have seen the ability to do more effective work than this picture all's' them to do. They are Betty Bronson, William Davidson, Gallaher, Sally Fatte, L. E. Fernandes, John Reinhardt, Louis Steven, Charles Ed- wardutz, Alphonse Ribeau, and E. A. Battista.

The story of the play concerns the fate of the Bedouin girl who was cast off by her tribe in punishment for helping a captive French officer escape. Her brother picks up another wandering tribe and sold to a circus manager, she is finally redeemed by the officer while attending the circus in his home town as his former benefactor, and is taken by him to his home. Here, after striving against her own impulses to protect the reputation of her tribe by the officer and his soldiers, she confesses her love for him, his eight-year-old son coming into her care by an affair with another man.

The production is a little too short and poorly directed by the Metro Picture Corporation.

"HITTING THE TRIAL"
Five-Reel World-Picture Presents Melodrama

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy

IN THIS five-reel offering by World-Pictures, a story of the East Side is told. The plot is a little better than usual and the atmosphere and actuality of types than usual. The plot, however, is constructed too much in the manner of a serial, in that the same persons and scenes appear without particular reference to each other. Each of them is quite dramatic in itself, but there is not a great deal of suspense at any time.

Carlye Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley head the cast as Kid Kelly and E. Hines. The former is a member of a young band of crooks, the latter a poor girl who works in the saloon and of whom Carlye is in love. At a Bowery mission at night, Joseph Smiley is cast as Carey, the owner of the flower factory in which the girl works. The bright young beauty, Muriel Ostriche has the role of Annie, a beautiful girl whom Carey victimizes and who afterwards kills him in a fit of jealous rage. George MacQuarrie, Mabel Bunce, Walter Green and Edward Elkas have other parts.

The story is one that will interest lovers of melodrama, though the lack of suspense keeps it from taking first rank as such. The review would also have wide appeal among persons interested in slum conditions and studies of an industry which employs thousands of people in lower Manhattan.

The number was written by Roy Somer- ville, adapted by Harry O. Hoyt and dir- ected by Dell Henderson.
"ALL THE WORLD TO NOTHING"
Six-Reel Pathe-American Subject Features
William Russell in Dizzy Comedy.

A CHEERFUL feature of this six-part comedy, "All the World to Nothing," is that it gathers obvious situations to a great extent and keeps the observer guessing as to what will happen next. The bits that do happen are not entirely credible all of the time and are perhaps not intended to be, but they carry the essential rhythm of this kind of style, and some jerky places in the continuity, but on the whole the number proves one of genuine entertainment value.

William Russell has the role of Richard Chester, a wealthy young man who at the opening of the story plunges into a period of great adventure and fortune. He finds himself suddenly thrust into the class of job hunters and his efforts to make a living lead him into many difficulties.

One of his first ventures after the fatal poker game is to go in disguise to see a certain cantor. We are trying to find this man he enters the wrong apartments. He overhears the reading of a will by which a minor is left an estate, inherits a fortune, with the proviso that she shall wed immediately. Chester is discovered and is missing.

The next scene shows the home of the young woman of the yarn he meets her in true person and wins her love.

The production was by the American Film Corporation. The story was written by Wyndham Martyn, adapted by Stephen Fox and directed by Henry King. Others in the cast are Ted Westover, J. Morris Foster and Hayward Mack.

"UNDER FOUR FLAGS"
Third United States Official War Picture Portrays a Great Military Spectacle of Life and Death.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A SERIES of episodes from scenes in the real-life war, taken by Signal Corps A. E. F. and the Allied Army cameramen, shown simultaneously, and in authentic color, in this atre," these pictures have the mark of realism on them for those who know the difference between a genuine article and an imitation. They were assembled and edited under the supervision of S. L. Rothaus.

The thrill of those showing the dogged English and brilliant Canadian in action are the best, but far more important is the moving and attractive to the eye, while none the less impressive from a point of view of accuracy, are those showing the thrilling movements of Italian troops on the Piave, particularly the mountain exploits.

The view of heavy artillery on barges, taken from a close-camera point of view, are the most remarkable of their kind ever shown. We are right up against the big guns in action, near enough, one would think, to shatter the strongest lens over made. There are also some impressive pictures from the air in this section.

When all is said that can be said of these episodes, those of our own troops are bound to be the winners in a popular sense. They are not so fortuitously taken, not so picturesque, not so impressive in setting perhaps, but that great big interest in the human interest is there with a punch. It is that human interest which makes plays successful, and we know and love these humans who composed divisions of American troops under American officers at the battle of St. Mihel. The review of French and American troops, General Peraul is prettier to the eye, but it is on the field that our boys showed American character not on parade, and there they have made Americans known to Europeans for the first time in the history of our nation. The subtilties are exceptionally fine, some of them gems of force and vigor. It is a great military spectacle from life, admirably arranged by a genius of presentation.

William A. Brady.

LITTLE WOMEN (William A. Brady)—part sympathetic and thoroughly consistent visualization, admirably typed, of the famous story of American home life in Civil War times by Louisa M. Alcott. Reviewed in last week's issue.

Carle E. Carleton.

A ROMANCY OF THE ART (C. E. Carleton).—A German spy story featuring Lieut. Bert Hall, himself a true type of airman, his story neither so strong or so interesting. Reviewed in last week's issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

WHY I WOULD NOT MARRY (Fox).—Lucy Fox is the principal player in a large company employed in the presentation of an unusual film. An attempt has been made to become vastly original in screen presentations, and Mr. Fox has succeeded. The feature will be voted a novelty sure enough. But as to the degree of satisfaction the feature will supply to audiences is a matter that only the actual exhibition of the film will develop.

James Keane.

THE SPREADING EVIL (James Keane).—A seven-reel subject personally indorsed by Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy. This deals with the eradication of a certain blood disease with which science has long struggled. It tells a story for adult minds in an acceptable manner, and will no doubt be of interest and instruction to grown-up people everywhere. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

HIS BONDED WIFE (Metro).—Emmy Wehlen is the star of this picture, which tells the romance of an hairless and a poor young man. Creighton Hale plays the part of the hero. The story moves along at a good pace, and is well acted. June Mathis made the scenario. The picture is reviewed on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 73 (Mutual).

-Items in this issue show the peace celebration in New York, scenes on the former battle fronts, Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., entertaining Women War Relief Workers at her home in Paris, and members of the Lafayette Escadrille.

BAD MEN AND GOOD SCENERY (Rothacker).—Scenes in the Western mountains in the vicinity of Jackson Hole. These scenes are mostly closeups, and are often lacking in the beauty which might have been brought out by carefully photographed perspectives. The subtitling is not as effective as it might have been, nor is it always characterized by that refinement of speech to which nature studies are entitled.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE LEAP OF DESPAIR (Pathe).—Episode No. 7 of "The Wolves of Kultur." This begins with the rescue of Bob and Alice by the detective, Barclay. The three swim from under the secret workshop in a sewer and take up the trail of the fleeing spies. Alice is taken captive in the woods, and there are several dramatic incidents. One of the best of these is the struggle of Bob and one of the spies in the water, in which the spy is drowned.

ON CARIBBEAN-LAPPED SHORES (Post Film-Pathe).—An enjoyable scenic, illustrating more of the life in the West Indies. This picture much of the tropical verdure, the rocky coast lines, and architecture of the towns and cities. A bull fight and various other features of interest are also shown.

MILADY O' THE BEANSTALK (Diamo-Pathe).—A pleasing five-reel juvenile subject featuring Baby Marie Osborne, who was written by Elizabeth Burbridge, adapted by Clara S. Beranger and produced by William Bertram. Jack Conolly, Ellen Cassity and the colored lad, Sambo, appear. The story is one of the best of the series featuring Baby Marie. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Universal Film Company.

KISS OR KILL (Universal Special Attraction).—A five-reel story written by Max Brand and directed by Elmer Clifton, Herbert Rawlinson, Priscilla Dean and Harry Carter have the leading roles, which much to bring out the entertaining features of the yarn. The plot concerns a young discharged soldier, enter of a job, who meets with a series of interesting adventures. He exposes two men of crime and wins the love of a girl whose fortune he has saved. Reviewed at length elsewhere.
